TECUMSEH, MICH., OCT. 22, 1885

Several of the gas lights in the city of Adrian were found burning at seven o'clock last Tuesday morning.—That new gas engine in the Press office is raising thunder generally.

The annual Ohio tribulation, which they call an election, is over for this year. Judge Foraker is elected by a plurality of about 15,000, but the legislature is still in doubt. It will require the official count to decide the complexion of that body.

Now is the time to put up stoves, fix the cellar windows, calk up the cracks in the doors, fill the wood shed and the coal bin, buy your woolen socks and arctic overshoes, and get your wife a seal skin sacque. Don't wait 'till the snap comes and then curse the weather clerk for your own negligence.

The Adrian Press says: "Captain White and Capt. McDonald, a couple of Salvation Army officers from abroad were here last Sunday and inspected the barracks. They found things in good shape for the fall campaign."

This is good news as far as it goes, but we are anxious to learn whether they inspected the editor of the Record, and if so, in what shape they found him.

President Cleveland is gaining a reputation for possessing a large fund of old fashioned, homely, common sense. Here is the latest evidence of it, taken from an exchange:

Careful students of the baby kissing question at the White House have discovered one thing. The President kisses some babies, but not all. He draws the line at the boys, which shows that Grover is a good deal like other old bachelors.

The Adrian Record of last Thursday has a lengthy editorial giving the reasons for the Democratic defeat in Ohio. The editor formerly resided in that state about sixteen months, and gives some of his personal observations while a resident. He thinks the chief cause of Democratic defeat is the fact that the leaders and workers of that party are generally men without character or respectability. In other words the grog shops seem to run the party down in Ohio. It is evident that a good many Ohio voters took that view of it at the last election. The returns show that 30,000 Prohibition votes were polled, at least one-half of which were voted by former Democrats. Gov. Hoadley's truckling to the liquor element laid him out. John Sherman's flaunting of the bloody shirt may have laid him out also, as the legislature is still in doubt. Had the Democratic convention possessed the wisdom to declare unequivocally for Allen G. Thurman for U. S. Senator, a Democratic legislature would have been returned beyond a doubt. If the election should finally result in the defeat of Gov. Hoadley and in the choice of the Old Roman, Allen G. Thurman, to the U. S. Senate, most people outside of Ohio would consider it a pretty good day's work for a rainy day.

To a person with an analytic turn of mind, the most interesting portions of our neighborhood correspondence are the items about the weather.—They are as timely as a frost on the fourth of July and as variegated as a crazy quilt. Last week's HERALD contained an unusual number of excellent letters from our township correspondents, and the subject of the weather was not neglected.

The Brooklyn scribe said: "The weather for the past week has been very changeful. Snow and rain have fallen alternately with now and then a day of sunshine. When shall we have our Indian summer?"

From the Raisin Valley came these cheerful tidings: "The pleasant weather following the two weeks of clouds and rain is enjoyed by all."

Ridgeway informs us that it is as "fine fall weather as one could ask for."

The Britton cor., who lives nearly two miles distant from Ridgeway says: "The weather is not very favorable to farmers."

Our Tipton sub-editor takes a practical view of the situation and remarks: "The last specimen of weather that Old Probabilities sends along reminds one of the potatoes in New York, altogether too soft for practical purposes."

Our patrons can pay their money and take their choice. Terms $1.50 a year; club rates with other newspapers. Now is the time to subscribe.

WATER WORKS—PIPES VS. CISTERNS.

EDITOR OF HERALD:

Posted in public places in our village may be seen notices, calling for sealed proposals to construct, according to specifications given, a cistern to be used as a water supply for fire purposes. The specifications are novel, such as would not be given by any person who had studied any branch of civil engineering. The person whose bid is accepted must give ample security, "He is not to receive a dollar until the cistern is tested and found to be all right."

In the construction of public works a competent Engineer is usually employed to make the specifications. The contractor is only required to give security that he will do the work according to the specifications. To make him responsible for defects in the specifications would be very unjust. He is not allowed to exercise his own judgement. If he does his work according to the specification why should he be responsible for the errors of the engineer or village officials? Much lower bids would be received if the contractor was relieved from a responsibility that does not properly belong to him. If the Board distrust their own plans they should withdraw them, and not endeavor to throw the responsibility and loss incurred by their errors upon our mechanics.

If I employ a carpenter to do work for me, tell him how to do it, and the work proves defective in design, I will pay him, and so I believe would every member of the Board. The people of Tecumseh expect their officials to do business the same way.

The specifications are not only novel; they are radically defective. It is to be a rectangular cistern, twenty-five feet long and seventeen feet wide in the clear, the walls thirteen feet high and the arch to have a rise of two and one half feet; walls to be one foot thick and man hole four feet below the street. A cistern of almost any form may be made in a tenacious clay, that would of itself retain water; but the great bed of gravel beneath our village will require the best form of cistern for the purpose. The flat walls 13x25 feet, and floor 17x25 are not the right form to resist the pressure of earth from without or water from within at the depth specified. Every foot of the way will have to be planked and shored to prevent caving while excavating, and the walls will have to be shored as the work proceeds, and the shores allowed to remain.

In cisterns of masonry all angles should be avoided. The bottom should be semi spherical and the sides circular, resting upon the bottom in such a manner that the weight of masonry and earth will tend to press the bottom together. In this "rectangular" cistern there would be a rupture between the bottom and the sides. But I only speak of the defects in these specifications in order to show that a system so defective in details cannot be satisfactory as a whole. I am opposed to the system. A good deal has been accomplished in fifty years and I am not content to have Tecumseh adopt the modes and systems of that time. We do not need any covered ponds of stagnant water at our street corners, for we have an unlimited supply of clear cold water about 25 feet below the surface, under 20 feet of gravel. It is a munificent gift. But few cities or villages are so blessed. A system that only contemplates its use for fire purposes by the use of tanks is not worth a moment's consideration. It has nothing to commend it: not even the advantages of economy. We should study the best way to raise this water and furnish it for all purposes. This is not a question for a lawyer, a merchant or farmer to decide. The old saying that "you cannot beat a man at his own trade" holds good in this case. It is not "in my line" hence I will not attempt to give a specification, but simply make some suggestions "to all whom it may concern." Let us sink a well say ten feet in diameter to a depth of ten feet below the water on the lot occupied by the Council Building or the one adjoining. Erect a small building, buy a boiler and a pump of Worthington, Holley or Walker manufacture, and connect the pump with extra strong pipe running two blocks in each direction from the corner of Chicago and Railroad street. Smaller pipes may be used to carry the water to more distant parts of the village. By means of valves the pressure could at any time be confined to the business portion of the village which would be as thoroughly protected as any city. We would have a modern system economically established that could be extended as the revenues of the village justified. Why cannot this or something better be done?

A PIPE.

One of the interesting features of the November Harper's will be some personal recollections of the late Lord Houghton, from the pen of Hon. John Bigelow, who weaves into his paper a number of interesting anecdotes of other great men in the acquaintance of Lord Houghton, among them Louis Napoleon, Gladstone, and our own Bryant.

Marcellus is not a paradise for wives. One man excited the populace by whipping his spouse in his store last week, and another quarreled and shot at the partner of his woes with a revolver, but did not injure her and escaped arrest.

A festive soap agent talked so glibly at Hillsdale that one of the way-up young ladies fell a victim to his charms. An elopement followed, but the girl repented, returned to her father's house, the fatted calf was brought into play, the soap agent reappeared, and a wedding was improvised.

The state board of health, in view of the danger from small pox, has addressed a letter to the health officer of each township, requesting a statement of whether there is a lumbering camp in the township, and if so, the location, name of each, and the names and postoffice addresses of the owners, contractors or foreman. It also urges upon the local officers the importance of personally urging the vaccination of all persons, and the careful guarding of any case that may occur, and offers to furnish pure bovine virus.

"LIBERTY ENLIGHTENING THE WORLD."

We learn from the American Committee of the Statue of Liberty that the Granite Pedestal is nearly completed, and the work of erecting Bartholdi's great statue will soon commence, and for this purpose a considerable amount of money is still required. The New York World Fund of $100,000 completes the Pedestal, but it is estimated that $40,000 is yet needed to pay for the iron fastenings and the erection of the Statue, and for this they rely upon the subscriptions for the miniature Statuettes, which are being received from all sections of the country, the Committee promptly filling all orders.

The No. 1, or One Dollar Statuette, has found a place in thousands of homes; the No. 2, or Five Dollar size is fast gaining in popularity, and justly too, for it is a work of art and well worth the money.

To supply a demand for something still finer, the Committee have just completed a No. 3 Statuette, finely chased by hand, and by a patent process heavily plated with silver which will not tarnish or discolor, mounted upon a beautiful plush base, and furnished to subscribers at Ten Dollars each.

These souvenirs are now being delivered to all parts of the United States on receipt of subscription price.

All remittances should be addressed to RICHARD BUTLER, Secretary, 33 Mercer Street, New York.

Rev. Wellington De Puy, of Grand Ledge, was married last week to Miss Ella Reynolds, of the same place, by ex-President D. W. C. Durgin, of Hillsdale college. There were many elegant presents, among which was a cane from President Durgin, wrought and polished by his own hand, the wood being from the forests in Brazil, the handle a rare specimen of horn from Africa, and the ferrule a coin from Iceland, discovered by the doctor during his travels in that country. —Evening News.

The Pennington place, which has witnessed so many marriage ceremonies, was again the scene of wedding festivities on Wednesday evening, Oct. 14. Miss Mabel J. Aten, a niece of the sister and two brothers who remain at home, was married to Mr. George W. Stimpson, of Saline. The party consisted of the immediate relatives on both sides, and a few intimate friends. Refreshments were served after the ceremony had taken place. The bride's dress was brown silk, trimmed with white lace. The home of the newly married couple will be in Saline township.

A VETERAN POSTMASTER.

Rev. Peter Sharp, the veteran postmaster of Ridgeway, first entered upon the duties of that office Oct. 1st, 1853. The aggregate receipts of the first quarter, ending Dec. 31st., were $11.71, of which sum the postmaster pocketed $5.70 as his portion. At that time there were no aspirants for the office, and it was with some difficulty that a man was found to accept it. From Oct. 1, '56 to Sept. 30, '57, just one year, Mr. S. B. Terry served as postmaster. Samuel Rappleye was appointed his successor, but never qualified, and the office then went back into Mr. Sharp's hands who has held the position continuously from that date until now, having filled the office altogether for thirty one years, and for twenty-eight years continuously. Report says that he is the second oldest postmaster, in length of service, in the United States. During the lapse of 32 years, the service has increased from one mail a week to 12 mails a week. The office is no longer on a star route, but now receives its mails over the M. & O. Railway, and the volume of business transacted is at least ten fold greater than it was during the first three years of Mr. Sharp's incumbency. The transmutations of politics have decreed a change and he is now succeeded by Jay A. Santus. His long and faithful service deserves public recognition and acknowledgement.

Ed. G. J. Lauer, one of Monroe's successful business men, was in town over Sunday, the guest of Mr. Henry Smith.

Dr. H. L. Stewart has raised an immense crop of celery on his Prairie Side farm this season, and the quality equals the quantity.

Robt. L. Glen is the new postmaster at Onsted. He is an old resident, a worthy citizen and a man well qualified for the place. The appointment is a good one.

Nathan Manley takes the post office at Deerfield. We have not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with him but report says that it is an excellent selection.

Mr. Irving Chase, of Raisin, is teaching in Roscommon Co. As Mr. Chase is a fine scholar and an excellent teacher we bespeak for him abundant success in his new field of labor.

Rev. J. M. Getchell, of this village, officiated at the funeral of Mrs. E. W. Mixer, at Adrian, last Tuesday forenoon. The services were held at the family residence on West Maumee street.

The residence of postmaster Stearns of Blissfield, was burned last Saturday night. The fire originated in the kitchen. The house was entirely destroyed, but a portion of the contents was saved.

One of the candidates at the late election in Lucas county, Ohio, was a Bohemian oat man, and he was most unmercifully scratched. The Buckeyes understand the true inwardness of the Bohemian oat scheme.

The play of Hamlet will be presented by the Adrian amateurs to-morrow evening. Mr. W. T. Moreland will assume the title role, and county clerk Bixby will officiate as first grave digger. This part is wisely assigned certainly. Dave has buried a good many political opponents in the last ten years.

Music teachers have a great partiality for this town since our musical tendencies have been shown up by the newspapers. Casting burlesque aside and coming down to hard facts, IT IS A FACT that Tecumseh possesses some first-class musical talent, and a large amount of it too. We are very glad to see our young musicians making an effort to improve themselves.

Mr. Frederick Fisher, a former employee at Smith's paper mill, who has been working at Bowerfind's bakery in Adrian for the past five years, died last week of typhoid fever. The deceased was highly esteemed where he was known, and his demise will be a severe blow to his family. The funeral was held at St. John's church last Sunday and was very largely attended.

The Hudson postoffice controversy has been settled by the appointment of W. T. B. Schermerhorn, editor of the Gazette. As viewed by an outsider this appointment strikes us a peculiarly fitting one. Mr. Schermerhorn is well equipped for the place, both by natural talents and by professional training, and we have faith that he will give entire satisfaction to the community in which he lives. The citizens of Hudson and the new post master will both receive our heartiest congratulations.

Tecumseh's enterprising music dealer, G. P. Sparks, has a new column ad. in to-day's paper, to which we invite attention. Mr. Sparks has now on hand a very large stock of pianos, organs and musical merchandise. He will make a specialty also of oil paintings, of which he will carry a large assortment. He is also agent for the White Sewing Machine and the Daisy Tricycle. He is rapidly converting his rooms into a genuine art gallery. Since the late enlargment of his store we know of no finer music rooms in Southern Michigan. People who wish any musical merchandise should give him a call.

John L. Trann was in town over Sunday last.

The central telephone office in Tecumseh has been papered over and now presents a very tasty appearance.

The patrons of the HERALD will get one paper more than they bargained for this year. There are 53 Thursdays in 1885.

Mrs. A. A. Kennedy, of Battle Creek, is visiting in Tecumseh. She arrived last Friday and will remain about ten days.

The HERALD office is now provided with a phone. We can "hello" with our business patrons without traveling to the Central office.

A large sample room has been fitted up at The Patterson, in connection with the office, which commercial travelers will find to be very convenient.

The two band's gave a street contest just before the opening of Alba Heywood's entertainment. The audience outside were treated with a pretty good free concert.

Tecumseh has a new auctioneer in the person of Frank Davidson. If he fills the bill as well as "Uncle Sim" did, he will receive many invitations to wield the mallet.

The Alba Heywood troupe put up at The Patterson last Thursday, and they were so well pleased with their accommodations that they returned to stay over Sunday.

The Michigan Central Railway Company have issued an edition of neat pamphlets giving their through and local time tables on the main line and all branches. It will be handy to have in the house.

H. B. Tallman has our thanks for a jug of new cider left at the HERALD office last week. He said: Don't mention it. All right—We'll not mention it, if he will bring in another jug full next week.

Have you seen that pumpkin at Culver's that weighs 92 pounds? It was grown by George Stacey.—Brooklyn Exponent.

This man Stacey is 'some pumpkins,' sure enough. We regret that he is none related to the editor of the HERALD.

Occasionally a newspaper man gets married. The latest is the editor of the Vermontville Echo. Of course his bride is beautiful and accomplished.—Adrian Record.

And of course the editor is rich. Poor editors don't get married these days.

Jay A. Santus has received the appointment of postmaster at Ridgeway. This is another excellent selection. Jay is just the man to handle the mail bags at Ridgeway. We believe he will fill the position with credit to himself and with satisfaction to the community.

Miss Arlie C. Merritt, grand-daughter of the late T. T. Romeyn, and a former pupil in our High School has accepted a position as teacher, at Fort Keogh, Mont., and commenced her labors Oct. 6th, under auspicious circumstances.

The young ladies benefit society of Franklin, will hold a social entertainment at Hannibal Osborns, Friday evening, Oct. 23. They have just completed a beautiful afghan which will be sold. Now boys is your chance to get an afghan for your buggy or cutter, and ride out in style with your best girl. Only twenty-five cents a ticket.

Dr. E. Hause will start for Florida on the 10th of November, and a party of about fifteen persons from this section will accompany him. Forty five persons, mostly residents of Lenawee and Hillsdale counties, have given their names to Dr. Hause, who will visit Florida during the coming winter or purchase land. Forty of them intend to visit the state.

We are indebted to Morgan Miller for a map showing the Chinese quarters of San Francisco. It is printed in colors, and gives the location of all the gambling dens, and other infamous establishments run by the Chinese. After a careful inspection of this map one can hardly wonder that the respectable residents of San Francisco would be glad to blot Chinatown out of existence.

Thos. H. Mosher, Esq., of Springville, reached his three score and tenth birthday on Sunday last. Oct. 18th. Mr. Mosher has been engaged in the merchantile business in Lenawee county for just about fifty years, but he is still hale and hearty and we hope he may continue selling goods for many years yet. The HERALD joins his numerous friends in Northern Lenawee in extending congratulations.

The great New Orleans Exposition will open on the 10th of November and continue for five months. It is confidently expected that the exhibit as a whole will surpass that of last season. We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation to be present on the opening day. The President of the United States, the governors of all the states and many other distinguished personages have also been invited. It is very doubtful whether we shall be able to attend in person, but if the managers will reserve a chair for us on the platform we will endeavor to send a proxy.

C. A. Slayton went to East Saginaw Tuesday on business.

E. W. Freese and wife, of Clinton, were in town last Sunday.

Adrian will hereafter have electric lights on the paved district.

A new plank walk has been laid in front of James Lowry's grocery store.

Peter Phelps, son of Rev. J. Phelps, is now living at Marquette, Lake Superior.

Miss Anna Powers, of McGregor, Iowa, is visiting friends in Tecumseh this week.

Miss Lou Reynolds, of Clinton, is clerking in Sutton, Fairfield & Co's dry goods store.

Miss Maggie Everiss, of Adrian, has obtained a position in the choir of the first Presbyterian church of Detroit.

The Manchester band furnished some fine music at the rink Saturday evening, and a large crowd enjoyed it.

Mrs. W. B. Mumford, of Adrian, gives a tea party this afternoon. Several of her Tecumseh acquaintances were honored with an invitation.

L. D. Dewey has his new quarters, south of Kinney's furniture store, fixed up in good shape for storing and dressing poultry, and has already made several purchases.

The ladies of the Tecumseh and Manchester Universalist churches will hold a benefit social at Rev. J. M. Getchell's in this village on Tuesday evening next, Oct. 20th. The gentlemen are especially invited to attend.

Warren C. Dewey and family, of N. Y. city, are spending a few days on a visit among their friends in Cambridge and Tecumseh. Mr. Dewey has some notion of moving to Detroit and engaging in the practice of the law.

The theme of discourse next Sunday night at 7:00 o'clock, at the Presbyterian church will be "Temperance, and the best way to promote it." The purpose of the discourse will be to give a calm and serious discussion of a topic of living interest.

Fred. Harris, of Cambridge, has on hand 102 bushels of Bohemian oats which the Bohemian Oat Association have contracted to purchase at $1.020. At last accounts, however, his Bohemian oats were quietly slumbering in the bin and patiently waiting for a purchaser.

Monday evening, Oct. 26th, Lester & Allen's big minstrels, including John L. Sullivan, the champion of the world, will appear at the opera house, in Adrian. Tecumseh people desiring seats may secure them by telephone or letter to C. M. Croswell, Jr., at Adrian.

Good Bohemian oats can be purchased in Detroit for fifty cents a bushel. Our farmers of a speculative turn of mind are respectfully reminded of this fact. Would'nt it be a good scheme to organize an association, buy up 5,000 bushels or so at fifty cents, then send agents down among the Hoosiers and peddle them off at $10 per bushel?

Mrs. M. L. Pratt, of Chicago, agent for the National Library Association is in our city. This association furnishes all books (including school) at greatly reduced rates. The enterprise is in the interest of economy, and many leading citizens of the state who have examined into the principles governing the enterprise, give it their cordial endorsement. The association meets with success wherever presented. It looks like an exceedingly good opportunity to get books at cheap rates.

ORANGE BLOSSOMS.

On Thursday afternoon of last week, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Doty of this village, was thronged with a happy company to witness the marriage of their only daughter Miss Leila G. Doty to Dr. Chas. E. Jarvis, of London, Ontario. The guests assembled shortly after the noon hour and at one o'clock the bride and groom were ushered into the parlor, and the nuptial knot was tied by Rev. Leman Barnes, an uncle of the bride, in his happiest manner. Refreshments were then served and a season of social enjoyment indulged in, as is customary on such occasions. The arrangements attending the ceremony and the subsequent diversion of the guests were complete, and those in attendance were right royally entertained. The bridal gifts were numerous, and very appropriate.

The bridal couple departed on the afternoon train. They went to Detroit and thence to London. On the first of November they will take up their permanent abode at Kingston, Ontario.

The groom is highly respected in the community where he lives and will renew the practice of his profession under the most favorable auspices. He has secured a prize for a wife. The bride has lived in this community for many years. She graduated from our High School with the class of '82. She possesses a most winning disposition and a womanly dignity of character which has made her a special favorite in society circles. Her departure will be keenly regretted, but her many friends will bid her a hearty God speed, and wish her a bon voyage over the ocean of life.

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

The Baptist State Convention is in session this week at Adrian.

The Clinton Woolen factory is receiving a lot of new machinery.

The M. E. church at Weston will be heated with a furnace hereafter.

The corn crop of this county is about twenty five per cent short of a full yield.

Complaints are made all over the county, that potatoes are rotting very badly.

Uncle Asa Foster, one of the leading citizens of Blissfield, died on Monday of last week.

The blue ribbon club of Clinton had a meeting at the town hall last Sunday afternoon.

The new Baptist church of Hudson, will be completed and ready for dedication on the 27th inst.

The depot building at Riga was broken into on Monday night of last week, and the money drawer rifled of about $5.

The Baptist ladies of Morenci netted $125 out of their eating house on the fair grounds. They do say that Baptist ladies get up extra good dinners.

Geo. Goodrich, of Clinton, has gone into the pumpkin business. He reports one that measures four feet, eight inches one way, and four feet nine inches the other.

At the third annual meeting of the conference of friends of Indian civilization held at Lake Mohawk, N. Y., on the 7th inst., we notice that Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, brother of W. V. Fisk, of this place, was chosen president of the conference.—Clinton Local.

Hudson has a hen ordinance. Every hen caught running at large in the streets of that village can be taken to the pound and the urchin who acts as common carrier can collect ten cents per head for the job. But what do they do with the roosters caught running at large?

The board of supervisors must consider that there is no provision in the drain law whereby a drain may be constructed in two adjoining townships without the intervening of a county commissioner. There are a number of such drains in this portion of the county, and the appointment of a county drain commissioner is made imperative.—Blissfield Advance.

William Deacon, of Hudson, was kicked in the face by his horse last week and received a bad wound over one eye. It's a mighty irreverent horse that will kick a Deacon in the face, but a horse that lives in a town where resides the inventor of a two wheeled cart, has a right to kick not only a deacon, but the minister, and pretty much all of the congregation. —Adrian Press.

S. C. Stacy, of the Tecumseh HERALD, made us a pleasant call last Saturday. Before leaving the city he called on "Philander," of the Record, and tried to get him to set the time for the duel that has been talked of by these two journalists. Everything was arranged satisfactorily. The affair will come off next Christmas at 2 o'clock P. M., and the weapons will be quill pens at 25 paces. May the best man win.—Adrian Press.

And now the Burchard end of the Tecumseh News, rises up and says the Clinton penman of the Tecumseh Herald was in error when it charged that the two chaps who followed a Clinton girl to D. Woodward's house one night, had been made to pay damages to Mr. Woodward or to any one. Well, we are sorry these correspondents will prevaricate, as in making up our collection of news we frequently rely on their statements. If they didn't pay for their impertinence they deserved to and some muscular young fellow ought to constitute himself the young lady's brother, find out the young scoundrels, and lick the "tar" out of them. That's the kind of a threshing machine that is needed in Clinton just now.—Adrian Press.

A most lamentable accident occurred to Mr. S. Z. Foster last Friday morning. Mr. Foster had been sitting up all night by the bedside of his father, and about daylight was about to retire for a few hours' rest. Going up stairs, drowsy and tired out, he became for a moment forgetful, and thinking himself at his home in Toledo, where the stairway and room door are the reverse, he made a miscalculation and instead of entering the bedroom, as he supposed he was, he fell headlong down stairs, striking with the bridge of his nose on a perforated wooden chair, standing some four feet from the bottom stair, crushing the bone to splinters, small particles being driven into the chair, which was broken by the force of Mr. Fosters' weight. His left hand was jammed through the seat of the chair, and badly bruised, as was also his whole body, and it is a miracle almost that the fall did not break his neck. Dr. Parker, who had remained at the house during the night, attended the injured man, and dressed his hurt in the most skillful manner possible. The accident was learned with deep regret by our citizens, by whom Mr. Foster is held in the highest esteem.—Blissfield Advance.

Mrs. Thomas Blacker, of Deerfield, is spending two or three days this week with Tecumseh acquaintances.

An effort is making for a game of base ball next Monday between Adrian and Tecumseh in which Sullivan will do the pitching.

The ladies of St. Peter's Episcopal church will give an oyster supper at "The Patterson," Thursday evening, Oct. 29 All are cordially invited.

We have moved into our new cloak room. Our stock of cloaks is larger and more attractive than ever. We shall be pleased to show them.

W. & S. W. ANDERSON & CO.

Frank Slater, who was arrested last week for an assault and battery upon W. W. Lockwood, was to have had his examination yesterday. Dr. Woodward, who is attending Mr. Lockwood reported his patient as unable to be out, and Justice Burridge adjourned the case for one week. The defendant has been released on bail.

The sneak thief was abroad last Sunday night and got in his work very effectively in the vicinity of the churches. Burt Garlinghouse's horse was hitched near the Baptist church, and when he went to get it about eight o'clock he found that a valuable wolf robe was missing. Alem Titus also lost two buffalo robes, and Elias Brown, whose team was hitched near the Universalist church, went home one robe short.

A pleasant social event occurred at the home of Mr. Gregg in East Macon on the 15th inst., on the occasion of the marriage of his only daughter, Anna J. to Wm. Nickell, of Acton, Ont. The company of guests was large, the feast was ample, and the presents to the bride were many, beautiful and valuable. The bride will accompany her husband in a few days to his home in Canada. While the bride's parents are fully satisfied with their daughter's choice, they grieve at the thought of parting with their only daughter. May prosperity attend the happy couple.

Oscar Palmer is the owner of a fine pair of Texas ponies and last Sunday he hitched them to a carriage for a ride. The ponies had not been driven before in several months and they concluded it would be a colder day than that before they were driven again, and proceeded to demonstrate the fact by lying down and kicking the harness to pieces, after which they arose and tried to kick everything within the radius of half a mile. A front wheel of the carriage was demolished, but no one was injured.—Mr. Palmer concluded that he did not want to ride that day.

On Monday evening, Oct. 26, Shedman Bros., Canine Paradox and Dog and Monkey circus, including the Anglo-American Marionettes, will give an entertainment at the opera house. The dogs and monkeys, which have recently arrived in this country, from Italy, are so thoroughly educated that they do almost everything but talk, organizing steeple chases among the dogs with monkey riders and a miniature monkey fire department, besides other tricks too numerous to mention. Admission 25 and 35 cents with no extra charge for reserved seats. Don't fail to see the street parade of the dogs and monkeys at 2 o'clock, Monday afternoon. Of the Marionettes everybody has heard, and their performance alone is worth the price of admission.

A COALD INTERVIEW.

Our reporter was prancing down Shawnee street yesterday afternoon with his overcoat collar turned up under his ears when he struck Mr. H. M Temple sending out a big load of anthracite from Temple's coal yard.

"How is the coal trade this fall?" asked the scribe.

"Improving—this cold snap has started a great many stoves."

"How about that Jackson Hill Coal?" queried the quill driver, edging toward the stove. "Is it as you advertise?"

"Yes sir, exactly. No soot, no clinker, and comparatively no ash." "Here is some in the stove now," and opening the door the scribe had the satisfaction of beholding with his own eyes the merits of this coal.

"We also," continued Mr. T., "have the Jackson Cannel, a cannel far superior to other cannel coals, for the reason that it does not snap in the grate." "Our Jackson Hill coal surpasses our expectations. One of our customers informed me to-day that they had used it continually, in their cookstove for two weeks and had not as yet taken up the ashes."

"Do you keep other coals?"

"Yes, we also carry other soft coals in stock, Massillon, Massillon Cannel, Wheeling Creek, Briar Ridge and Goshen."

"What hard coals do you handle?"

"Scott's Wilkesbarre, Pardee's Lehigh, Deleware and Hudson Canal."

"Will coal advance?"

"Yes, new freight rates to go into effect next month show advance for this point, and we have heard rumors of an advance in coal."

"Trust?"

"You?"

"Yes!"

"No."

"Good afternoon."

CUTTING CAMEOS.

An Expert Artist Describes the Work and the Materials Used.

"Our principal material is onyx, though we occasionally work carnelian, agate, jade, etc. Onyx—in the rough called 'massick'—is found mainly in Brazil in pieces weighing from five tons downward. Here are some pieces. You see it is marked with veins and layers of different colors. Sometimes in one large piece there are five or six colors; but usually there are only two. When the colors are sharply defined and even after polishing they are fit for the lapidary without further trouble. Of course but a very small portion of the piece found is fit for stone-cutting. The average is about a fifteenth part, usually in the center of the stone. Great skill is necessary in cutting out this part. When the color line is not even, then fit them for use for common work by coloring with various acids. The major portion of the cameo and onyx stones, in stone rings are of this kind. The greater part of the massick found is of the white and black kind. This stone, when cut and polished, is called onyx. When one of the layers is carved with a design of any kind so that the whole of one layer is cut away with the exception of the raised design it is called a cameo. When the design is cut into the stone it is termed an intaglio. The rough massick is not polished or cut into jewelers' sizes in America. The great seat for this branch is in Germany, between the city of Moselle and the Rhine. The workers have great facilities there for water-power, labor is very cheap and well organized, and they can produce stones quite ready for the engraver at extremely low prices. A large amount of cameo and intaglio cutting of a rough but effective kind, is done in this same district. These stones are exported to other European countries, to Providence, R. I., and the jewelry factories here, where they are mounted by the manufacturers in gold of various qualities. These are the goods sold at nineteen stores out of twenty. They pass muster with the multitude as they are showy and the prices very reasonable, but for connoisseurs and those able to pay the price a few of the best stores import artistic work from Italy, or have it cut to their order here. You would hardly believe that I can buy cameos and intaglios at a lower rate than these unengraved stones, but it is a fact. The larger goods, such as toilet bottles, match boxes, and like ornaments of all kinds in onyx, jade, carnelian, etc., are all made in Europe. They could not be produced here for twice or thrice the amount, even when the duty is added to the first cost."

"What are the different processes of your work?"

"The stone is first ground to the shape required on the steam wheels. We commence with the large ones and gradually come down to the smaller as the work is coming to a close. The stone is then firmly fixed with lapidary's cement to this piece of wood, about three inches long and twice the size of the stone. A rough outline is then penciled on. After this all depends on the acuteness of sight and delicacy of touch in the operator. For cameo work I use almost two hundred tools. These can not be bought ready made, but must be manufactured in the workshop here. I often have to make a number of tools of a peculiar shape before I can start in on a commission. These tools are almost all of one kind. Here are a few of them. At one end is a screw which fits into my foot lathe. The other end gradually tapers, and at the point is worked into a sort of circular saw. The sizes of these saws vary from half an inch in diameter to 1-128th. Here is one of the smallest you can not see the saw with the naked eye. The steel must be of perfect temper and the teeth on it even, or they are unfit for use. I first cut around the outline, both horizontally and perpendicularly, with some of the larger saws. Afterward I cut in the portrait and accessories with one of the smaller tools. I use diamond dust in every stage of the work, as the tool alone would make no impression on the onyx. Of course, the fine work takes the most time and trouble. It is not exhausting work, as the eye and the hand must be completely in unison, for the slightest slip would spoil the work of weeks. That three-headed medallion I showed you cost me many a sleepless night. In crest, seal, or name work in relief the process is the same, but I generally make a red wax impression of the etching before I start on the stone. These commissions, when simple, are quite reasonable in price. I have made some for as low as eight dollars, but of course they sometimes come as high as a portrait if there is much work. After the carving is done the stone is polished, first with a lump of lead or zinc, and then with tripoli, rouge and putty. Then the stone is examined with a glass of great power, and any slight defect remedied. The work is then complete."

"What is incrusted work?"

"Incrusting is an old method that has sprung into favor again during the last few years. The design or letters are cut into the onyx and pure or twenty-four-carat gold or fine platinum hammered into the cuts until it is flush with the surface. When properly done this work is very beautiful and durable.—Chicago News.

—Johnny came in out of breath the other day, and, being questioned, said: "I kicked Sammy Smiler; that's what I did, and I ran away." "You kicked Sammy Smiler!" ejaculated maternal authority, repressing a tendency to smile at the ruffled aspect of the small kicker, and sternly didactic of speech: "you kicked Sammy Smiler! I should think that you would be ashamed to kick a nice little boy," with a circumflex on each word of the description, "and then ran away! If I kicked a nice little boy I would stay and take the consequences." "Consequences!" said Johnny, undeterred by the praise bestowed on Sammy and reflected in blame on him—"consequences! Huh! I took the consequences before I kicked him."—Boston Transcript.

CARE OF THE EYES.

The Progress Made in the Manufacture of Artificial Eyes—A Great Scientist's Invention.

"Everybody takes considerable interest in his eyes," said a prominent oculist, "and I don't think any other portion of the human anatomy is worthy of more attention. Yet it is more abused than any other organ. From early infancy it is treated shamefully. The baby's knuckles poke it and the lids are frequently made to open to expose it to the view of admiring relatives and friends. Boyhood's days bring books to be read and lessons to be worked into the brain through its medium. Youth fills it with tobacco smoke in the one sex and needlework and novels in the other. In maturity it is abused of necessity by the use of spectacles. A poor eye is better than no eye at all. Science has made the deaf to hear by means of various little instruments. Manufactured teeth often serve the purpose better than the originals, and patent working arms and legs often replace the natural members. An eye once lost to its sense of sight can never be replaced by anything that will restore that sense. Artificial eyes have existed as long as there has been any demand for them. Step this way," said the specialist, "and I will show you a large assortment of them. The doctor reached up to a shelf in his cabinet and took down two small flat boxes. One of them was labelled:

Left Eyes, Assorted.

And the other:

Right Eyes, Assorted.

The doctor opened the boxes, and there resting on soft beds of tissue paper, were hundreds of left and right eyes. They were of every shape, size and color imaginable, and looked perfectly natural in their upward gaze.

The eye was simply a concave-convex shell, and the doctor explained that the natural working and turning of the artificial eye was not due to improved mechanism, but simply to the modern method of operating on the genuine eye. Instead of formerly only a part was removed, and the artificial organ was fitted on the stump, which would continue to move with the muscles.

"Do they ever wear out?"

"Oh, yes, that's the beauty of them. The acidity of the tear of the human eye will eat up glass, and it makes them rough and honey-combed like sandstone. They usually last a year and cost ten dollars apiece. Many wearers buy two or three at a time to have them on hand in case of an accident."

"Can a person cry just as well with the artificial eye?"

"Yes. The trouble is they usually cry a great deal more from the unnatural irritation. The artificial eye is made from a bulb of glass having a slight ovality blown, on the end of a rod about the size of a pencil. From the sphere thus blown a segment is flattened out for the iris and pupil. A circular patch of black pigment in the centre forms the pupil. The painting of the iris is done with delicate enamel colors, and then a bulb of clear crystal glass is placed over it. The red veins are traced with fine films of red glass laid on and fused. Probably over ten thousand people in the United States wear artificial eyes."

Dr. William Siemens devised an artificial eye which is sensitive to light and to differences in color, gives signs of fatigue when subjected to prolonged action of light, and regains its strength after resting with closed lid; and, by an electro-magnet attachment, may be made to close itself involuntarily at a vivid flash. Such an eye would be worth having. It is well-known, too, that the vibrations of musical tones may by ordinary conducting wires be transmitted and delivered to the ear; and it remains to be seen, says Dr. Siemens, whether light vibrations may not be transmitted to the brain in the absence of the natural eye.—*N. DRIFT OF THE HUDSON.

A Floating Junk Shop With a Full Assortment of Goods.

The river brings its regular supply of drift, writes a correspondent at New York. It brings cordwood, dropped from passing vessels; piles which have rotted away, floated away, and are cruising about to find decent sepulture; campstools tossed from excursion steamers, old boards, new boards, shingles, sticks, chips, bark, old brooms, worn out scrubbing brushes, bits of torn and tangled seine, runaway eelpots, dead dogs, dead puppies, an occasional dead horse, illegally pitched at night off some New York pier, old boxes and barrels, old pantaloons, bottles—some smelling of medicine and others of whisky, corks without bottles, more bottles without corks, hats blown overboard, some old, some new; shad-poles, bean-poles, lunch-baskets, water-soaked bread, empty sardine and lobster-cans, the debris of floating lunch parties; cabbage leaves, cabbage heads, decomposed fruit and vegetables, sometimes a fish-pole, with line and hook attached, old paint-brushes, everything anything all things, cast off, flung off, worn off, torn off, rubbed off of the world's surface, including also old boots and shoes, so long as they float. Every morning I inspect the list of strand near my door to see what the river has brought. It is an interesting lottery. Sometimes I find a late newspaper, soaked, to be sure, but when dried on the rocks it reads as well as if just issued. As we have no regular supply on this bank of the stream, news three or four days old reads just as well, and seems quite interesting until one looks at the date. Some of this drift, when it comes, comes to stay. Particularly old boots and shoes, stuck in the mud. I have become well acquainted by sight with several impaired specimens, regularly appearing before my door at low tide—especially one gigantic boot, presumably the former property of some colossal-footed Jersey shadman. A pair of old pantaloons cling tenaciously to my beach, changing their position but little with each tide, and having a startling resemblance in the various attitude of the legs as flung about by the waves to the limbed part of a drowned man.—Exchange.

HEDGE FENCES.

An Improvement Which Has Not Proved Profitable in the West—A New Method of Fencing.

The practice of surrounding fields with hedges for the purpose of protecting the crops from animals, which was introduced into various parts of this country after posts and boards became expensive, and when fence-rails could not be readily obtained, has, since the introduction of barbed wire, been generally abandoned. The hedge-row, which was so popular in England and in several countries on the continent of Europe, was never a great success in the United States. We have had no hedge-plant that was adapted to the soil and climate of any large portion of the country. The Osage-orange, which was obtained from Texas, did fairly well in localities where the winters were not very severe and where there was good natural drainage. It failed where the winters were very long and cold, and in places where there was insufficient drainage. Several enterprising persons made fortunes in selling seeds and plants, and others realized considerable in selling works on hedges, and implements for trimming them. A few obtained a living during several seasons by taking contracts to set out Osage-orange plants and to keep them in proper condition till they would make an efficient hedge.

Lack of a plant that was adapted to a varying climate and a great diversity of soil is not the only thing that prevented the general establishment of hedges in this country. Few of our farmers understood how to raise, set out and properly manage hedge-plants so as to form a beautiful and useful living fence, such as is seen in foreign countries. Many attempted to perform all their operations by the aid of such information as they obtained from circulars issued by the nurserymen who dealt in seeds and plants or the manufacturers of hedge-trimming implements. It is no great wonder that they failed. Hedging is an art that can not be learned by reading the circular of an advertiser or a short article in a paper. It is a trade that must be learned under a suitable instructor. It must be practiced for a considerable time before one having a natural aptitude for it can become an expert. In countries where hedges are alike beautiful and effective in stopping cattle professional hedgers have charge of the plants from the time they are started in the nursery till they have attained their full growth. Even then they continue to prune them every season.

During the past few years more rods of hedgerows have been uprooted in the West than have been planted. The barbed wire, which was suggested by the barbed bush, has taken the place of it in forming protection for fields. Still, there is a growing interest in hedges in many parts of the West. Especially is this the case among farmers who have their places well improved. They have fields surrounded by fence made of posts and barbed wire. They stop the progress of stock of all kinds, but they are invisible at a distance and unsightly when the beholder is near them. Many farmers are accordingly setting out rows of fruit, barberry, arbor-vitæ or hawthorn on the lines where they intend to have division fences. Some are planting trees a rod apart in these rows, partly with a view of affording variety and partly for supporting barbed wire. It is the intention to attach the wire to the trees instead of to posts. The plan is an excellent one. These fences will be ornamental as well as useful. They will beautify the farm, while they will afford considerable protection against winds. They will greatly improve the appearance of the fields they surround and render them more productive of crops that require some protection.—Chicago Times.

NEW STYLES IN SHOES.

Buckles to be Worn by Men—A New Flexible Insole.

There are no radical changes in shoes which will be offered for the coming spring trade. The men's Oxford tie has been having a large sale recently. It is for party or evening dress. The upper is made of the trade-marked or patent kid. This leather has very desirable qualities for dress shoes. It will not chip off, and wears without changing color, and is soft and easy to the foot. It is also made in patent leather.

Buckles, for fastenings, are an old style—the only fastenings used one or two hundred years ago. They were revived and ran a few years about a quarter of a century ago. They are to run again next season on some of the light low-cut goods.

The child's D'Orsay slipper is a very shapely, pretty slipper for a child, made with or without heel. The vamp is of wine, blue, dark green or other colored leather, and patent leather is used for trimmings.

The flexible insole is new. The inner sole is made of one piece of solid sole-leather to the ball, from there being made of one piece of light leather and canvas joined together with the best rubber cement, thereby giving stiffness to the shank and heel and leaving the ball and toe perfectly pliable and waterproof. The advantages gained in a shoe made by this process are perfect flexibility in both single or double soles, the increase of wear gained by having a light, flexible inner-sole, and doing away with the hard horny edge of the regular inner-sole which has caused so much trouble and expense by its liability to cut the upper. With a perfectly flexible sole it does away with the cracking which so often happens with a stiff sole. This inner-sole being waterproof, the dampness does not reach the foot through the sole.

The Oxford will be the style of tie for ladies for the coming season. The shoe sets better when this fastening is used. The shoe shown is a ladies' tie, patent leather vamp, with tan colored seal top. Other colors are cut in this shoe, which is a very pretty style for the season's wear.—Shoe and Leather Review.

A LOST CHARACTERISTIC.

Shyness an Attribute of Young People Which Has Completely Disappeared.

At one time of day most children used to be born shy. We have always been taught this as a tradition of the race, and, carrying our memories back half a century, we can bear corroborative testimony to the fact. We can remember feeling very shy ourselves even at the age of seven. We should never have thought of speaking till we were spoken to, or coming without being called, or of assaulting the central plum cake, or asking the lady on whose knee we sat how old she was and how much money she had. There were many pauses in the conversation when we went into society at that age, and met other shy little people. The overtures of acquaintanceship between children used to be very slow and tentative; we remember particularly exchanging sweets with a four-year-old in a blue sash, long before we dared ask her what her name was, and long before she dared tell us our hair was rough. Children then required encouraging and "bringing forward." But now! The shy child has disappeared. We have boisterous masters and misses, and we have quiet, self-possessed ones; some are very unruly, and some are comparatively tractable; but none are shy. Some Pied Piper of Hamelin has been round and played all the shy ones away. Similarly, at a more advanced age, it used to be a serious exhortation to young men and maidens to overcome shyness. It was preached to them that bashfulness was a bar to social intercourse and to mental improvement, and they were instructed how to acquire an easy manner; but all those exhortations which we find repeated constantly in old manuals for the modeling of conduct read like so much sarcasm now. You may look round where you will among youths, but that black swan, the shy youth, has migrated for good. You find plenty of pert youths, and of self-sufficient youths; many aggressive youths, and no end of patronizing youths, even now and then a self-possessed youth who is nevertheless modest; but the shy youth—never.—London Globe.

THE MODEST FATHER.—"Father," began a young Detroiter the other evening, "were you in the war?"

"Yes, my son."

"Was it awful?"

"Yes."

"... of dead and wounded men?"

"Did you ... ?"

"Well, I shouldn't like to answer that question."

"Are you very modest, pa?"

"I hope I am too modest to brag."

"That was what Mr. Smith meant, then, when he was telling the men down at the drug store that you hadn't any war record to brag of."

"He did, eh? Smith is a liar!"

"That's what I thought. He told the men that you run so fast he couldn't catch you on horseback, and any boy knows that a horse can catch a man with a stiff knee."

In the Forest City.

Mr. G. E. Bryan, No. 151 Putnam street, Cleveland, Ohio, has naturally much experience in sickness,—with a family of seven children, and his doctors' and druggists' bills are heavy. He states publicly that he has given Red Star Cough Cure a thorough trial in his home, and finds it to be the best remedy that he has ever used for cough or colds. It contains neither morphia nor opium, and therefore leaves no depressing effects.

E. A. Schellentrager, druggist 717 St. Clair street, Cleveland, O., writes: "Your Bitters, I can say, and do say, are prescribed by some of the oldest and most prominent physicians in our city."

CATAARH—A NEW TREATMENT.

From the Montreal Star.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 2000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished he claims the Catarrh is practically cured and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The Application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.

It is the best remedy for Kidney and Liver Complaints, Dyspepsia, Cramp in the Stomach, Indigestion, Malaria, Periodical Complaints, etc. As a Blood Purifier, it has no equal. It tones the system, strengthening, invigorating and giving new life.

The late Judge Hayes, of Lancaster Co., Pa., an able jurist and an honored citizen, once wrote: "Mishler's Herb Bitters is very widely known, and has acquired a great reputation for medicinal and curative properties. I have used myself and in my family several bottles, and I am satisfied that the reputation is not unmerited."

On the 15th of January, 1861, he was united in marriage to Jane Doyle, and the two settled upon a farm in Ridgeway, where they lived until last spring when they moved to Deerfield. The deceased had been in feeble health for more than two years but he was sustained in his affliction by the kindness and care of his affectionate wife. He became a member of the M. E. Church when only sixteen years of age, and was a consistent follower of the Master all his life. He died as the Christian dieth, in the full hope of a blessed immortality.

The funeral services were held last Sunday at Mr. Powell's residence and were conducted by Rev. T. G. Potter, pastor of the M. E. church.

Chas. Thompson was at home over Sunday.

Monday afternoon, as George Larzelere, who had been to the lumber yard for some lumber, was returning to his home, west of here, from some cause, he slipped from the wagon and struck upon the ground in such a posture as to break his neck, and he died in a few moments. He leaves a wife and four children, we understand, who have the sympathy of a large circle of friends, in their sudden loss.

Richmond, Hogan & Gadd shipped a double deck car of sheep and swine to Buffalo, Monday.

Some unruly boys have been throwing stones at houses and troubling quiet citizens thereby. Look a leedle out boys; the strong arm of the law will usually fix such things when all else fails.

The Kengan sisters were in town Saturday, on their way to visit relatives in Bridgewater.

Henry Sarrett and Ed. VanDeMark have been constructing an addition on the north side of John T. Clark's barn. The fact is that premium butter makes a demand for more room, more cattle, and more help. It makes things very lively on the Clark place.

The little Messler boy that was so low, at Lansing with diptheria, died, and we learn that the mother has returned, and is at her father's west of this village, quite sick with that dread disease.

Potatoes are not all dug yet in this vicinity, and corn husking is just fairly commenced.

RAISIN VALLEY SEMINARY.

Scarcely a corporal's guard was left at the Seminary quarterly meeting Sunday. All the students were home or visiting.

Foot ball and Indian clubs have supplanted the National game. Jack Frost regulates field sports as well as field work.

Linton Cox, of '83, has been obliged to drop for the present his collegiate work on account of the death of his father.

Judge Joseph H. Steere, of '71, writes that he is kept busy with his official work and consequently his usual visit to this neighborhood is indefinitely postponed.

Marianna Brown still discharges successfully her duties as teacher in the preparatory department at Earlham College, Richmond, Ind.

Lena Stanley, of '79, and her sister Sarah, of '80, are making a success in the west as school teachers. St. Paul, Nebraska, is their home at present.

Scholars still continue to increase in number. We understand the Board of Managers are talking of enlarging the capacity of the school, as the building is at present nearly filled. We hope they will think favorably of the subject.

The student's literary society seems to be established upon a sound basis. The enrollment is now about forty, and interesting programs are prepared each week. This is a step in the right direction.

The unanimous vote of the students is in favor of a skating pond. What is the matter that the necessary work cannot be done before cold weather sets in? Will not a few dollars spent in this way by the Board be a good investment?

The neighborhood literary society which met Oct. 24th, proved a success. Several selections from Lowell were rendered, and numerous quotations given in the quoting match. Aaron Taylor carried off the honors. Subject for the next meeting, Whittier. An interesting program has been arranged. Meeting to be held at the Seminary, Nov. 7.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Splendid fall weather.

The Indian medicine man has come and gone, and no great harm done. The dupes were wheedled out of their money, and perhaps they learned a lesson.

Dr. A. A. Hallock of Frankfort, spent a few days with his brother here.

Corn-husking is progressing finely.

Our would-be Deputy sheriff has changed his aim. Now his ambition is to be Assistant Surgeon in the Traverse City Asylum. His past experience has taught him that self-appointment is not very satisfactory, so now he seeks his appointment from a more reliable source.

Dr. D. W. Loree is shipping large quantities of hay from this place.

Wheat does not come in quite as freely the past week. The roads are too poor and the farmers are busy with corn.

Syd Howe has a house under way—verily Britton boometh.

Let every body remember the box-social in Britton's Hall, for the benefit of G. A. R. All are cordially invited.

Jas. Smith is a happy papa; a fine boy—may long years be his.

ADDISON ATOMS.

Such of our farmers as have commenced husking corn say the crop is in poor condition to crib.

Mrs. C. Swartout went to Jackson Saturday to visit relatives and purchase goods for the fall and winter trade. She has been engaged in the millinery business here for a long time and enjoys a well earned patronage.

We are glad to hear that Mr. G. B. Lewis is rapidly improving and hope to see him behind the counter in a few days.

Mrs. Cappie Wyend and Emma Rickey Sundayed with friends at Kelley's Corners, and visited the sick room of Mrs. Gusta Lester before returning home.

G. M. Lewis and wife, in company with C. C. Carmichael and others, spent Sunday with Prof. Woodward and family of Clayton. E. A. reports fine school and good success.

Mrs. Margaret Beebe of Somerset, was a pleasant caller at this office Monday forenoon.

Mr. C. E. Strong of Somerset, reports a cabbage-leaf which measures 31½x24½ inches. We should think that such a concern would be an improvement on Jonah's gourd as a roof for a summer resort.

Miss Mary Kempton of Adrian College, spent Sunday and Monday with her mother and friends here. She reports a good attendance and lively interest in College matters at Adrian this fall.

Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Hoag of Iowa, are visiting at Jas. Ash's place at present. They were formerly residents of Lenawee county, and find a host of friends to greet them on their return.

We noticed the familiar face of Mr. Edward Birdsell of Raisin, on the street early in the week.

A sort of juvenile minstrel troupe held forth at the rink Monday evening.

BROOKLYN BILLET.

We are having our Indian summer. The orange buds spoken of in our last have blossomed. On Wednesday evening last, Dr. L. M. Jones was married to Miss Bettie Freeman. The marriage ceremony was performed by the Methodist minister at the residence of the bride's parents.

Master Paul Sheridan is in Detroit attending school.

Miss Lizzie King has accepted a position as cashier in the Farmer's bank, of Brooklyn.

The village is building an engine house on South Main street for the accommodation of the new fire engine. The building is a two story frame and will be finished above for a council room. It will be quite an addition to the village and something it has long felt the need of.

The oyster supper at Mrs. W. S. Culver's for the benefit of All Saint's church, was a success both socially and financially.

Alba Heywood's entertainment at the Hall, next Monday evening. We predict for him a crowded house

TIPTON TOPICS.

Your correspondent failed to put in an appearance last week because of the lack of items.

Rev. Mr. Armstrong, of Addison, preached at the Congregational church last Sunday morning and evening.

The people of Franklin were very much shocked by the sudden death of Mr. George Larzeleer, which occured Monday morning. He left his home Sunday in good health for Macon. While returning Monday, one half mile west of Clinton, he fell from his wagon breaking his neck. Dr. John Tuttle, of Clinton, was immediately summoned, but life was extinct. The funeral is to be held at the house of the deceased Tuesday morning. Mr. Larzeleer leaves a wife and four children. He has long been known in this community as a kind and affectionate husband and father, and an obliging neighbor.

Mrs. Ferguson, an old lady living north of Sand Lake is quite low with a cancer.

Mrs. David Slater, who has been very sick, is convalescent.

A friend of Rev. A. B. Storm's, one Mr. Russell, of Detroit, paid him a flying visit Wednesday.

A drover from Clinton, name unknown, accompanied by his wife had a very narrow escape a few days ago. His horse being frightened by a separator standing in the road, became unmanageable. The gentleman and lady were both thrown from the buggy, but we believe neither were seriously injured.

The young ladies of the Congregational church held a social at the residence of Mr. H. Osborn Friday evening. The principal attraction was the sale of an afghan made by them. The receipts of the evening amounted to about twenty dollars.

The ladies of the M. E. church gave a very enjoyable pumpkin-pie social at the home of George Poucher, Tuesday night.

PECK'S SUN, published at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, is the most humorous paper in America to-day. Geo. W. Peck, its editor and proprietor stands without an equal as a humorist. THE BARBER'S NEW BOY.

A Few Words of Advice to Him and to Older People.

"Got another boy in the shop this week. He's going to learn the trade. Training boys is the trade's a specialty of mine. I like it, and, though the boys are not so well pleased, I have noticed that they become good workmen and good citizens. When a new boy comes into the shop he is usually dullness, slow of tongue and action. In most shops he gives dollar or is spoiled. The reason at that he receives either a kick from a tough or dress at the tongue out of him, and makes a good one impossible. If you have the nerve to take the chance of it. You nourish its edge and temper with its temper at the same time that you are molding the boy, who ought to be an adonis razors. The man who is responsible for the work upon the character of a growing boy has a magnificent opportunity on his hands. Let me tell you. And not one man in a dozen is fit for any such responsibility. I always begin with my new boy by giving him a good talking to in a kind but firm way. I make allusion to the success the barber is usually given, and I have seen more wild and wooly boys than I care to tell by the quiet talk with never a spoonful of the other.

"'Jimmy,' says I to my new boy, 'for what expense do you think I hire you?' says I, 'you are going to be a barber. It is a noble trade, since it makes men fairer and cleaner in every way, softeners, and assists them in being gentle and refined. Don't be as afraid of your trade, Jimmy, because you have to serve other men. Every man's conscience is servant. Please your master and yourself by pleasing others. Don't think that men will not discover your fault if you slight your work. Nine men out of ten carry a pocket mirror, and try to use it frequently, especially after visiting the barber. And while you are increasing the self-esteem of others, don't forget yourself. Great men are always pleased with themselves. Be proud enough to take your own judgment on yourself, and not the world's. To yourself you are the world, while to the world you are a little speck. Be modest, especially as to trivalities and with trivial people. But don't be modest all the time; chronic modesty is worse than the liver, complaint for shriveling a man up so that nobody can see him. Be sure you know your rights in this world, and, knowing them, don't be afraid sometimes to give them up. If a tough wants the whole of the sidewalk pass him on the inside, with your shoulder thrown well forward and your legs well under you; but gentlemen do not sit in horse cars while ladies, lame or elderly people are standing, even if they have paid five cents for the right. If a man accidentally jostles you on the street do not frown. If you smile he may apologize or follow you into the shop for a shave. Always give a lady room to pass, especially if she carries an umbrella. Do not hit the nose of the horse which trots upon the crossing and nearly knocks you down. The driver's nose is the thing to hit. Don't waste your pity on a homely woman, as the chances are she needs no sympathy. If well dressed she is happy, and if not well dressed she is strong-minded. If you make remarks about passing people be sure you do not call a woman a hustler. A man will feel flattered by the term. You may call him a sly dog and he will buy you a cigar, but if you tell him he is a little puppy he will want to kill you.

"'And Jimmy,' I went on, 'you must be observing at your work. A perfect barber is a diplomat, a companion, a workman, an actor and a gentleman. Keep your razors sharp rather than your tongue. Remember that speech is a silver dollar, while silence is old greenbacks. Make friends with all men, but watch your razors as they pass out. Give advice only to customers whom you do not want to see again. In talking as well as in shaving be careful not to rip up old sores. Don't stroke a cat the wrong way unless you do it with your foot. Don't let the man who has many friends get in your debt for more than three shaves. Never convince a good customer that he is mistaken about anything. Learn the value of kindliness and self-denial. One day a good young gentleman who was next kindly kept his seat and permitted an old man to take his turn. The barber's foot slipped and cut the old gentleman's lip into a Cape Cod. Be cautious, too. Ask a man ten times how he wants his hair trimmed—you can cut it but once. If you would be a brilliant conversationalist and acquire reputation as a wit learn to listen constantly and laugh in the right place. Never undeceive a customer when he thinks he had said a good thing. You can afford to laugh heartily at an old joke. Laughter is cheap medicine, and in some kinds of business it draws like a mustard plaster or an advertisement. To him who is aching to tell all he knows everybody seems to talk too much. If you can't beat a man at an argument call him a crank. But don't argue. When a man argues his brain all rushes to one side of his head, and the contrary side at that. A man was never convinced of anything by argument excepting of his own cleverness and t'other fellow's stupidity. Men change their politics and their beliefs only as they do their shirts—when they are alone. They man who talks much and easily may seem to be the smartest, but about the time he gets tired the man who has been lying back in the chair thinking puts in a few words that knock the other man out. Education is a good thing, but too often it is a mere sugar coating to hide ignorance. The best education is that which teaches a man how little he knows of the much there is to learn and shows him the way to think. The educated man is an amateur, while the thinker is a professional.

"'Jimmy,' says I, 'when you want to flatter an intelligent man you must be very careful. It is a delicate operation, and your flattery must be administered as carelessly as your father is. Every man has a little soft soap if you keep it out of his eyes. You can always flatter a man by intimating that he is handsome. Every man will believe you, for no man knows whether he is good-looking or not. A large majority of men, however, have a suspicion that they are. It is different with a woman. She knows all about it, and if not careful in trying to compliment her you will make yourself ridiculous in her eyes. It is always safe to admire her clothes. Be a politician only for an hour every election day. The man who spends most of his time trying to get an office is usually good for nothing else, and unfortunate for that. The cheapest man on earth is the office-seeker. He feeds himself with hope on a lark and thinks he is getting fat. Be ambitious, but remember that man has no wings. He is a crawling animal, and the lady that walks before it creeps grows up so low-backed that even if bounding back over she is in the way it slips through and one is charged against him in the error column.

"'And remember, Jimmy,' says I, 'that you will do well to have good habits course if. Many good men have bad habits, and the man outwardly perfect is likely to have dry rot within. The prettiest apple usually contains the worm, and the most brilliant electric light may shine in front of the tough-est saloon, but as a rule the man with good habits is a safe one to tie to. You always have more confidence of a horse standing without hitching if he has never run away or kicked out a dashboard, and the horse that has played a few tricks must always be watched. It is the same with a man. If you have bad habits remember that the greatest reformer the world ever saw reformed only one person—himself. This is a practical age, and the man who wields a razor artistically is more assured of a livelihood than the artist with his brush. Misery and happiness are home-made articles. You have made your future if you are content, though too often blessings, like liberal customers, are never appreciated until just as they are ready to go away. Always take a sure thing, if it is a good thing, and therefore make the most of this life, because it is the only one any man was ever sure of. Make the most of it by living as long and happily and healthfully as possible. To do this drink to nobody's long life and prosperity, and let nobody drink to yours; be temperate, cheerful, generous and just. Don't gossip about your fellow workmen, or be jealous of them. Don't imagine them to be trying to do you injury and whine about it to others. If you do you may lose some of your best friends. Female gossips may be tolerated—male gossips never.

"'Judge men generously, Jimmy. Look for their best, not their worst, and learn to average 'em. Every man has his average. Jails are full of men whom society wouldn't average, but took in at their maximum. The world is full of spoiled children who were not averaged by their parents. Do not judge by appearances. The customer who wears the best clothes may stand in most need of a bath. The bald-headed man with the baby-like head may not be childishly innocent. Do not deposit your savings with a bank whose cashier dyes his mustache. Young roues talk of vice—old ones of virtue, though love, tight boots, a stubby beard and a vulgar mind can not long be hid.

"'And Jimmy,' I says in conclusion, says I, 'be charitable. If a poor broke comes in do not give him money to buy liquor with—give him a shave and throw in a bath. They may save his soul.'

"I think Jimmy will make a good boy. I know he will if he follows my advice. Your hair is just in style now, sir; red is all the go. A little of the tonic?"—Chicago Herald.

Overworked Menials.

A rather good-looking cook was hired out in the family of a wealthy man living in Dallas, Tex. One day her employer put his arm around her and kissed her, whereupon she dropped a courtesy and said, modestly:

"Don't put yourself to so much trouble. In all the other places where I've been the coachman had to attend to that, but perhaps he is kept busy here kissing the lady of the house."—Texas Siftings.

ICELAND.

Its Inhabitants a People of More Than Ordinary Intelligence.

From the name and situation, one might expect to find Iceland a cold, desolate country, shrouded much of the time in snow and bordered, like the east coast of its neighbor, Greenland, with almost impenetrable fields of ice. The Gulf Stream, however, plays an important part in modifying and equalizing the climate, and though the summers are somewhat cooler and shorter, the winters are far milder than in some parts of our own country. Quite a difference exists between the climates of the southern and northern parts of the island; but if we trace the isothermal or line of mean temperature, equal to that of Akureyri on the north coast, we will find it leading us far south in other countries that boast of a more salubrious climate.

With the exception of the priests (Lutheran) and a few merchants, the people are all farmers. Those who live near the sea, or one of the many fjords, combine several occupations, and thus gain a good livelihood, or even wealth. The priests hold their position under the Government, and are paid from the public treasury, but they generally add farming to their official duties. The merchants have their stores at one of the small villages about the coast, and carry a stock comprising almost everything. Sometimes they employ agents who travel through the country buying ponies, which they ship to Scotland, or perhaps they own a small vessel which coasts around the island, buying oil and codfish. The farmers obtain all the necessaries of life from the land and waters about him. The rocks and turf are his building material, the bogs furnish inexhaustible supplies of peat for fuel, the rivers swarm with salmon during the summer and the sheep yield wool for his clothing. If near the sea, the almost domesticated eider duck contributes its eggs and down, the seals and sharks give oil for his light, and codfish are added to his winter stores. Once a year he journeys to Reykiavik or one of the smaller villages and barters his produce for things that serve to make his isolated life more comfortable. Usually wood and eider down are the things brought. For these he is given credit by the merchant, and permitted to draw his yearly supply of goods, consisting of rye meal, flour, coffee, sugar, calico and lumber. Upon the farms the houses, with very few exceptions, are clusters of low, turf-covered huts with gable ends, doors and window frames of wood, and, if seen from a distance, are not easily recognized by the stranger. Sheep and even ponies are frequently seen upon the roofs in quest of the grass that grows more luxuriantly there than in the pastures; but the interior of the houses is often made very comfortable by paneling and flooring with wood, painted, and sometimes nicely furnished. Not having much to do at any season, not caring to exert himself beyond his yearly necessities, the Icelander finds much time for reading, his favorite occupation. One who can not both read and write is not to be found, and indeed, as a whole, they are one of the best educated people on the globe. Well informed in history, geography, and literature, especially of their own country, the traveler is often surprised to find these people conversing very intelligently about persons and events of all countries and ages, though they themselves may never have been out of sight of their own island. A faculty for learning languages is certainly a trait of these people, as every one meets persons who converse fluently in Danish and English, and perhaps German or French, or even Latin. This in the towns and villages where they come in contact with people of other nations. Further inland no chance is afforded for practice, but many of the people read understandingly languages which they do not speak. There are those on the island who have traveled extensively in other countries, and having studied their institutions and learned of the people, are now trying to give their countrymen the benefit of the knowledge and to gain from other people that recognition to which their native land is certainly entitled. Two or three learned societies lead a flourishing existence here; and after years of inactivity the country is again bringing forth authors and scholars who can not but be recognized among those of other nations. At several places on the island there are well equipped printing offices.—N. Y. Times.

Boston's Funeral Orators.

When Daniel Webster passed over to the majority the choice of the city for eulogist fell upon George S. Hillard, who delivered the oration November 30, 1852. Edward Everett was the orator on the death of the Marquis de Lafayette, September 6, 1834, speaking in Faneuil Hall. Rufus Choate eulogized President Harrison in the same place, April 20, 1841, on which occasion Josiah Quincy, Jr., officiated as chief marshal of the funeral ceremonies. Judge Pliny Merrick was the city orator on the death of General Jackson, July 9, 1845; Judge Levi Woodbury, July 25, 1849, of President Polk; Josiah Quincy, Jr., on President Taylor, August 15, 1851. The memory of Lincoln was honored for the city by Charles Sumner, April 17, 1865, and when the eloquent Senator died, for the first time the city of Boston went outside its own limits for an orator, and April 29, 1874, listened to the eulogy by Carl Schurz. Other eulogies were pronounced before the city government by General Banks, October, 1881, on President Garfield; by George William Curtis, April 18, 1884, on Wendell Phillips; by Edwin P. Whipple, November 26, 1867, on Governor Andrew.—Hartford Times.

—A deal of breakage among glass and crockery can be prevented by the simple precaution of placing lamp chimneys, tumblers and such articles in a pot filled with cold water to which some common table salt has been added. Boil the water well and allow it to cool slowly. When the articles are taken out and washed they will resist any sudden changes of temperature.—Albany Journal.

GAMBLERS' TRICKS.

The Sharper's Novel Way of Entrapping Unsuspecting Countrymen.

"I have found honesty to be the best policy, and have gone into a legitimate business," the boss crook remarked.

"What is that?" the reporter asked, having missed the crook from his usual haunts.

"Teaching the innocent rustic and the unsophisticated suburban. I average one scholar a day, and the scheme pays very well. I struck the racket last winter, and have found it a picnic. How do I work it? I put a card in fifty country papers:

FORTUNE MADE—Gamblers' tricks exposed. Marked cards, loaded dice, bogus and patent boxes for sale, with instructions. Lessons at reasonable rates. Address ——, Bowery.

"The rustic sees this and in the same paper reads of a man winning twenty-five thousand dollars at faro. He writes me and I send him a price list. It is the same as that used by regular dealers in gambling goods, only about fifty per cent. higher. If the fellow wants to buy, I sell and make a decent profit. But what catches is a notice at the end: 'Having been a professional gambler twenty years, I am familiar with every trick of the trade and guarantee to make any novice proficient in three lessons, and skillful enough to meet any blackleg on equal terms. Terms, one dollar a lesson of one hour.'

"The chump reads that and comes on and calls. I have a deal with the landlord of the hotel and receive my pupil in the private parlor. The best racket is to teach him to work loaded dice or marked cards. In an hour he's got the hang of it, but, of course, is very clumsy. We go down to the barroom and throw for drinks. My pal comes up to the bar and looks interested in the game. He asks us to let him in. I say, 'certainly,' and give my bucolic friend the wink. My pal then loses two or three rounds, and wants to throw a quarter a head. We accede. Pal loses, the rustic beats him, but I win. After a few throws I pull my watch out and plead an engagement and get out. As I leave I whisper to the countryman that he has a picnic, and to work the fellow for all he's worth. I then skip. The game continues, and in fifteen minutes my pupil is cleaned out. If he kicks my pal suddenly picks up a loaded dice and starts a row. If the man isn't a fighter my pal hits him on the nose. If he is we call in the gang and bounce him for a blackleg. You can bet he never comes back, and he doesn't complain to the police. Even if he did, we'd have the dead-wood on him, and could easily prove that he rung in loaded dice on us. The racket's just the same with marked cards, but only a little slower. What do you think of the game?"

"Ingenious, but doesn't the landlord object?"

"Na-o! Don't you see we divy up? According to how good the hotel is, we yield from fifteen to forty per cent. Why, I'd pay seventy per cent. if I could work a first-class hotel."—N. Y. Star.

No Lakes South of Pennsylvania.

It is a remarkable geographical fact that while all the groups of mountains of the Atlantic slope, north of the Delaware breakwater, are liberally supplied with pretty lakes, large and small, increasing in size northward to the chain of the great lakes, there is not a lake, large or small, in any of the groups of mountains south of the Delaware Breakwater down to where the Appalachian chain melts away in the northern hills of Alabama and Mississippi. And these mountains of Wayne and Pike and the surrounding counties full of lakes are small compared with the grand Alleghenies and the Blue Ridge range in Virginia and West Virginia, where not a lake is to be found. Again, in the magnificent mountain ranges of North Carolina, in which there are thirty peaks higher than Mount Washington, there is not a lake. Nor is there one, large or small, in the extensive mountain systems of Western Pennsylvania or of Kentucky or Tennessee.—Honesdale Herald.

A worthy farmer and his family of this county have been attending the night services of a protracted religious meeting at a church in the country. Sometimes they would walk, and sometimes they would ride, the distance being about one mile and a half. After the service was over the other night the gentleman, wife and two daughters walked home, and just before going to bed the absent-minded family happened to think that the wagon and horse had been left at the church. The gentleman walked back to the church and found his horse hitched where he had left him.—Marietta (Ga.) Journal.

Healthful Vigor for Girls.

Mrs. Livermore says, in one of her lectures on Girls, "I would give to girls equal intellectual and industrial training with boys. Yes, and give them equally good health too. When your girls are suffering from paleness and debility, it is a sign that their blood is poor and thin, and that they need Brown's Iron Bitters. The only preparation of iron that can be taken safely. Miss Barton, Chestnut street, Louisville, Ky., says, "Brown's Iron Bitters cured me of rheumatism when everything else had failed."

ESTATE OF JOSEPH TAYLOR.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, s.s.

At a session of the Probate Court, for the county of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, on Monday, the 16th day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five.

Present Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Joseph Taylor late of Ravenesmoor in Cheshire, England, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Homer L. Stewart, alleging, among other things, that the property of said deceased is in part at least a mortgage upon real estate owned by petitioner in Lenawee county, which he has assumed to pay, and is past due, and that Edwin B. Wood was duly appointed administrator of said estate and accepted that trust, and that said Edwin B. Wood has deceased without having fully administered said estate, and praying that Charles Burridge, or some other suitable person be appointed administrator de bonis non of said estate. Fadover informs us that Mrs. Fadover says that we can confidently rely upon November weather during the coming month. A cyclone among the poultry houses may be expected about one week prior to Thanksgiving.

N. B. Bacon, of Toledo, has been making his Presidential brother-in-law a visit. In a published interview he says that President Cleveland is not at all concerned about the result of the Ohio election, and that he is fully determined to adhere strictly to his civil service reform policy.

The Mugwumps who assisted in the election of a Democrat as chairman of the board of supervisors in opposition to a Republican, will have time to reflect upon the folly of their act before one of them is chosen by Republicans for sheriff and another for register of deeds.—Hudson Post.

What! Is Lenawee county blessed with mugwumps too? Who would have thought it?

The official count in Ohio gives the Senate to the Democrats by three majority, and the House to the Republicans by six. Thus the Republicans have three majority on joint ballot, which insures the return of John Sherman to the United States Senate. It was a close shave, but John probably consoles himself with the reflection that a miss is as good as a mile.

Capt. Kirk of the Adrian Salvation Army, invited the editor of the Record to attend their anniversary supper, and strange to say the invitation was declined. We lament this faux pas. Such an opportunity for promoting peace and good will among men seldom occurs. The Captain needs the good will of the Record; the editor needs good victuals and a piece of religion How easily both of these happy results might have been attained around the salvation festive board. Our hopes of a reconciliation between these two worthy citizens have again been dashed to the ground.

Virginia has a Deacon Richard Smith also. A Washington dispatch of the 19th says:

Deacon Richard Smith, of Virginia, a colored veteran of 85 years, was at the President's reception to-day. He had shaken hands with every President since Madison, and was anxious not to miss the opportunity of taking Mr. Cleveland's hand. Gen. Eppa Hunton, who was next to the Deacon in the line, drew him into conversation.

"You are a Democrat, of course?" he inquired.

"No, sir," was the reply. "I'm a Baptist, and it don't make any difference about shaking hands with the President, anyhow."

Newspaper editors receive many offers for advertising to be paid for in truck and dicker. Yesterday's mail brought a very tempting one which says: "If you will publish the notice below in your valuable paper at the top of column, next to reading matter, for four weeks, we will upon the receipt of a marked copy send you one of our Economical Corn Shellers, charges prepaid." Now, there is an offer that amounts to something. We have been pining and hankering after an economical corn sheller for years, one that would obviate lugging corn to the mill, save the miller's tolls, and bring the Johnny cake upon the table piping hot, without the aid of a gasoline stove. An order for that economical corn sheller was dispatched by return mail.

The Saginaw Courier has started a boom for Mrs. Gen. Custer, for the Detroit Pension Agency. In a lengthy editorial urging the appointment, it says:

The roll of the heroic host which represented Michigan in the late rebellion contains no name more dear to the people of this state than Gen. George A. Custer, and in gallantry, dash, and all the qualifications that create the ideal soldier, he had few peers in all the States. Gen. Custer, together with five members of his family laid down their lives for their country, at the battle of Little Big Horn River, June 25, 1876, Custer being at that time in command of the Seventh U. S. Cavalry. His military record as commander of the famous Michigan Cavalry Brigade during the war is familiar to all Michigan people. Mrs. Gen. Custer is a lady of more than ordinary accomplishments, and would grace the position which she is eminently qualified to fill; and we believe her appointment as such pension agent, would be especially grateful to the people of this state, as well as a just recognition of the services of her gallant husband on the field of battle.

FARMER'S SOCIAL CLUB.

Friday afternoon Oct. 16, the Farmer's Social Club met at the residence of Mr. F. C. Rector. There was a fair attendance considering an afternoon meeting. About half past 3 the President called the meeting to order, and as the young people had not arrived the literary part, aside from the discussion, was postponed until after refreshments, and the members proceeded at once to discuss the question. "What is the proper method to save seed corn, and which is the most profitable, husking corn to fatten stock, or feeding it without husking?"

Mr. F. C. Rector led the discussion. Said he was convinced that the proper way to save seed corn, was to kiln dry it. As an illustration, he said he had a quantity of corn last spring that had been keep all winter by his furnace where it was warm and dry all the time. This corn was planted by the side of corn that had been kept in his usual way, that was in the chamber of one of his out buildings. His thoroughly dried corn, planted the same day and the day after the other, side by side, came up two days the soonest, and was a great deal the most vigorous, and done decidedly the best all summer. Mr. Rector is a firm believer in feeding cattle to fatten on unhusked corn. Is quite sure they will not waste as much as they will any other way, and will fatten much faster.

Mr. Russell had usually gone to his crib for seed corn, and had sometimes got left. Did not think it the best way to do. Thought perhaps the surest and best way was to thoroughly dry seed corn before winter set in. Mr. Russell was not satisfied in his own mind, that feeding corn without husking was economy; had been in the habit of feeding his corn ground and mixed with mill feed, as he said he was satisfied that corn meal was too heating alone.

Mr. Everhart was in favor of kiln drying corn for seed or keeping it in a room where it could not freeze. Said that he was satisfied that cattle would waste less when fed on corn unhusked than any other way. Said it was impossible for them to swallow it until it was thoroughly masticated. Was not sure that they would fatten quite as fast as when fed on meal.

Mr. R. B. Gillespie had usually been successful with seed corn, by going to his crib and selecting what he wanted. Still he thought it would pay best and be surest to select what seed corn was wanted and put it up where there would be no danger of freezing before it was thoroughly dried out. Thought that feeding stock corn without husking, was a terrible wasteful, slovenly way. Said that a great many ears was so big that cattle could not chew them at all, besides cattle would rummage the stalks all over for the corn first, and then would not eat the stalks unless absolutely forced to it. His manner of feeding, was corn ground into meal. Mr. Rector replied that the cattle would eat everything up clean. Said it was true that some of the ears of corn that we raised, were too large for feeding that way. Said we should plant our corn for that purpose thicker, so that the ears would be smaller. Said he had 7 acres planted on purpose for feeding, would warrant it to yield over 100 bushels to the acre, and on the poorest land he had.

As the clock had struck the hour of five, Mrs. Rector came to the door and called time, and in her most agreeable manner invited the club into the dining room for a season. After refreshments the club listened to the following program:

Inst. Music—Eva Rector, which was performed in her usual happy manner.

Singing—By the choir, which was one of their best efforts.

Essay—Mrs. John Fisher, which was good, and well read by her step daughter, Ellen Fisher.

Dec.—Garland Gillespie, subject, "The old way and the new."

As Lizzie Henderson was not present, the meeting closed with another song by the choir.

Club adjourned to meet at Jacob Everhart's Nov. 13th, evening.

Program for next meeting.

Singing—By the choir.

Select Reading—Mrs. A. G. Hall.

Inst. Music—Miss Anna Everhart.

Essay—Miss Ellen Fisher.

Song—Lizzie Henderson.

Dec.—Frank Gillespie and Artie Bangs.

Music—By the choir.

Question for Discussion—What sized farm can a man handle with the most profit in this section of the state.

Where is the other.—Let us hear from him."

THE NEW SOUTH.

The South is rich in everything but money. The people have too much land; some persons who live in poor cabins and eat corn-bread and bacon the year round, and part of the time are short of these luxuries, own thousands of acres of land. With so much land, only mere strips of bottom are cultivated, and, as the saying goes here, a man can get a living by working two months in the year. The next plentiful thing to land is leisure. There is more leisure taken by one farmer in the South than by twenty farmers in the North and West. Consequently, there is little grown for sale, except tobacco and cotton, and little for use; for Western bacon, Northern butter and flour, Northern or Western clothing, hardware, plows, wagons, and most of the other necessaries of life, are brought in, and money sent out in exchange. Whereas pork, butter flour, and all sorts of provisions, wool, fruit, and all sorts of timber manufactures, might be shipped away in large quantities, or at least made for home use, and the money kept in the country which now goes out so freely as to keep every one poor, and compel them to live on credit.

Every day the railroads are bringing in Western and Northern farmers by scores, and these men are apt to see the wealth hidden under the rough and unattractive surface of the country. They see the rich soil, they enjoy the fine climate; they don't see the venomous snakes, the bitterness of spirit, and the preponderance of the negroes, which foolish and untruthful persons have said so much about falsely; but if it were not for a few physical features of the country, the absence of good farming, the poor houses, the scarcity of stock, and the want of barns, they would not know they were traveling so far from home, and would find no difference between the people here and their neighbors North or West. Scores of farmers in North Carolina have said to me, we want your people to come here and show us how to work; we want to learn; we have plenty of room; there is nothing to hinder; all the old differences are gone; slavery is got rid of, and we are glad of it; it is the greatest relief in the world to have gotten rid of the care of it, and we are far better off as it is, than with the old system of labor. As a rule, the negroes are good laborers, and with a good employer, who will show them how to work, and will pay them regularly, they can be made far better than they are.—HENRY STEWART in the American Agriculturist for November.

While traveling down Logan street yesterday, curiosity led us to stop and inspect Wm. Gray's Knitting Works. We were somewhat surprised to find so complete an establishment. He has four knitters, of different sizes, and is manufacturing a large assortment of ladies', gents' and children's hosiery. He makes both cotton and woolen goods. A large stock of yarn is being rapidly worked up into hose. He has just knit several pair on a plan of his own, with the feet of cotton yarn and the legs of woolen. He believes they will be acceptable for cold weather use. Mr. Gray is a first class machinist and he is now constructing a small steam engine with which to drive his knitting machines. Orders for goods are received every day and he is prepared to "sock it to 'em" as fast as they come.

The skating rink was well filled with people last evening to witness the walking and skating contest between Strokel, the champion walker of the U. S., and Al. Heesen and Harry Corbin. Strokel was to walk one and one-fourth miles while the young men each skated one mile. At 9:11 o'clock the men were called up to start. Strokel wore white tights and shirt and black trunks; Corbin blue tights and shirt and black trunks, while Heesen appeared dressed in a neat suit of gray with white shirt. Al. Heesen skated the first mile against Strokel, and finished it in a few seconds over four minutes, and Corbin immediately started on the second mile, and had made 15 laps when Strokel finished his mile and a quarter, thus winning the race by four laps. Time seven minutes and 23 seconds.

The Baptist state convention held last week at Adrian, was largely attended and was a very interesting gathering. Under the order of presentation of representatives of other bodies, Rev. Mr. Babbitt, of Tecumseh, representing the Presbyterian synod, made remarks. He bore, he said the salutation of the synod, and supplemented the announcement with happy remarks complimentary to Baptists. We are one in Christian doctrines; if we differ it is but little.

The Board of Supervisors last week passed a resolution, substituting the township system of caring for the poor in place of the county plan heretofore in vogue. The township plan is a good one in theory, but we doubt whether it will be found equitable in practice. The rural townships will manage in some way to escape their share of the poor expenses. However, let us give the new system a fair trial for one year and hope that a practical application of the plan may prove successful.

About 6:30 o'clock last Sunday evening, a woman employed in the laundry at the Lilley House by the name of Margaret Crawford, was suddenly seized with an attack of heart disease and before medical aid could be summoned, expired. The deceased was about 46 years of age, and had been working there for several months, but nothing was known of her, and nothing was found in her effects to lead to the discovery of the residence of any of her friends. It was known that she had a husband living and other relatives, but their residences are unknown. The remains were taken in charge by undertaker McCowen, and placed in the vault at the cemetery.

"How does the old Globe Mill prosper now?" asked a HERALD scribe of Jerry Root the other day. "No let up at all," replied Mr. Root. "Three hundred barrels are turned out every 24 hours. When we can't sell, which is very seldom, we keep running and donate to the poor."

If you have any good hay to sell you had better get it baled and sell it to A. W. Slayton. He has already shipped 330,000 lbs. On his return from N. Y. City he will be in the market for baled wheat straw. He pays the highest market price as he has a partner in N. Y., and pays no commissions.

Supervisor Rogers, of Medina, had occasion to pay a visit in the town of Dover yesterday and hired a livery rig from Bachtel & Todd's stables. Late in the afternoon he returned, threw down the reins and left precipitately. The hostlers looked the rig over. Nothing like it had been seen around that stable in many a day. The supervisor was hastily sent for and called upon to explain how it was that he took out a $150 rig in the morning and came back with a $15 buggy in the afternoon. A lawyer friend offered to procure bail for him and advised him to drive back in the country and "swap" back. It is said that nothing will save the supervisor from having sentence pronounced upon him but a box of cigars.—Adrian Record.

THE COUNTY POOR.

Below is a summary of the report made by the superintendents of the poor to the Board of Supervisors:

One hundred and twenty-five persons have been aided at the poor-house during the past year. There are at present 69 inmates, of whom 38 are males and 31 females. The average number for the year has been 65. There have been 8 deaths and 3 births. The expense of the county-house was $3,269.83, which includes $1,300 keepers' salary and $1,551.41 for supplies. The products of the county farm amounted to $1,181.29.

Temporary relief of the poor cost the city $6,028.66 last year, and the townships $8,655.40, a total expense of $14,684.06 in the county.

There are 17 insane people kept at the Eastern Michigan Insane Asylum at an expense of $2,670.48 to the county.

The total cost of the poor to the county last year was $18,617.64. An appropriation of $16,090 is recommended for the ensuing year.

BOHEMIAN OATS.

Most of our county exchanges have done their duty by warning the farmers against the Bohemian oat swindle, and the HERALD has abundant reason to be satisfied with its course in this matter. Some of our farmer friends however, do not take our advice kindly, and to such we commend the following item, taken from the Western Rural, a leading agricultural journal of the northwest. The advice of such a newspaper certainly ought to have some weight with the farmers.

The enterprising Bohemian oats crowd seem to have experienced a revival. Complaints are coming in pretty thick at present. Their plan is to sell their oats to farmers for ten dollars a bushel, and agree to take all he raises at a high price. The man who pays ten dollars a bushel for Bohemian oats is very foolish. Any seedsman will furnish Bohemian oats. They are advertised in some of the catalogues, we believe, for $1.25 a bushel. They are a fair oat, in fact, most excellent, according to the testimony that we have received, for making oat meal. For all practical purposes they are no better than the ordinary oat. They are worth no more to the farmer than any other good oat, and when a man offers to sell them for ten dollars a bushel, tell him to talk to the marines, you are busy.

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

Brooklyn had a big hunting match last Thursday.

The Baptist church of Hudson was dedicated last Tuesday.

Britton's barber has decided to migrate to Clinton. Who will shave the Brittonians now?

Alex. Ellis, of Clinton, picked a number of ripe strawberries from his vines on the 17th inst.

Mrs. Judge Geddes, of Adrian, is visiting several cities in the east in the interest of Adrian College.

The festive burglar made himself very numerous in Hudson last week. Five places were visited in one night.

Wm. Hunter has been appointed janitor of the new Court House. He was the watchman employed by the contractors, and is well fitted for the position.

At the next meeting of the Clinton High School Literary to-morrow evening, they will tackle the question: "Resolved, That Congress was justifiable in impeaching President Johnson."

The county printing was awarded to the Blissfield Advance for the coming year. There were five bids presented, and as the Advance made the lowest bid, the contract was awarded accordingly.

Stacy of the HERALD and Dr. Burchard, the director of the Clinton section of the Tecumseh News, are at it again, and wading into one another with great journalistic vigor, and the fur begins to fly in all directions.—Ring off, gentlemen, ring off, and save your energies.—Adrian Press.

Rev. Mr. Farmer, the Baptist minister at Hudson, has acted as architect and superintendent in building the new church. He has also handled the hammer and saw six days in the week and preached an extra good sermon every Sunday. Mr. Farmer intends to earn his wages.

Beakes & Smith, of the Adrian Record, aver that they were taken for Baptist ministers by the visiting brethren several times last week.—That is nothing strange. In fact, about all they lack to make good ministers is a little religion. We respectfully invite Capt. Kirk's attention to this item.

E. R. Smith and B. O. Randall are making preparations to put in a water wheel near the Chicago street bridge. Part of the power is to be utilized in running John Smith & Son's coffee roaster, and the balance will be transmitted to Randall & Co's store and used to propel the coffee grinder.—Clinton Local.

We pity young ladies who go to the post office for letters from their lovers and receive none. We pity young men who have not heard from their girls for a long while, but above all we pity the man who gets no letters, men who take no papers, but who anxiously inquire day after day the year round. "Any letters for me?"—"Not any—that is all, I don't take any papers." We pity him most.

Last Friday Prosecutor Salsbury came near losing a suit: at least he busted his pants. He was intending to go to Adrian on the freight, but being a little late, tried to mount the frisky caboose after the train had started. As he grasped the rod on the platform his feet slipped, and in a jiffy he was on his stomach, his pants torn, his legs scratched, and his usual dignity sadly demoralized.—Hudson Post.

In commenting upon the suggestion of the Adrian Press that the Blissfield Advance man might turn in drain orders to help pay for a gas well the latter says:

You're right. We will "blow in" all the drain orders we possess. If "orders" will pay for boring a hole in the ground, there would be no trouble in getting enough to go through to China. Possibly the Press has some it wants to donate for the purpose.

The supposition is a reasonable one. We know a printer in Tecumseh who wouldn't object to taking a "leetle" stock on the same condition.

The artistic Vern Wheeler, of Tecumseh, planted his camera down in several prominent and picturesque places in Hudson, a few days ago, and the result thereof can be seen at Wood's Book Store, in a large and beautiful line of stereopticon views of the business streets, blocks, private residences, churches and public buildings. They are all fine, and no mistake. Vern also made some handsome cabinet pictures of Jacob Beehee's and VanNess Schermerhorn's residences.—Hudson Gazette.

The cow stolen from the premises of Mrs. J. I. Tallmadge last week, was found by Mr. Bettis at an Adrian slaughter house, just about to be butchered. He interfered with the process and securing the assistance of deputy sheriff Teachout that gentleman arrested Jim Brown, of this village, as the thief, his description talleying exactly with that given by the butcher as the man of whom he purchased the animal for $25. Brown was arraigned before Justice Long, of Adrian, where he plead not guilty, claiming his ability to prove an alibi. The butcher recognized him in court as the man who sold him the cow.—Blissfield Advance.

Rev. F. B. Cressy, of Detroit, will occupy the Baptist pulpit next Sunday morning and evening.

Guerdon Garlinghouse, of Raisin, was made happy yesterday morning, by his wife presenting him with a fine boy baby.

The smiling countenance of Edgar Ide will be missed from the postoffice delivery window in the future. He ceased laboring for Uncle Sam last evening.

The Court House committee figured the business down pretty fine, as witness their report, make by Secretary Hunter to the Board of Supervisors:

Amount of appropriation,		$50,000 00
Contract price -	$47,460 00
Ex. stone work - -	1,364 00
Ex. inside work -	1,160 00
		49,984 00
Leaving balance after paying all expenses of construction - - - -		16 00

Which sum of $16 the committee recommend be turned into the general contingent fund.

Deerfield has a new daily paper called The Star. It is not as large as the Detroit Free Press, nor as ably edited, but 'tis a daily, nevertheless—that is, it is published in the day time; and printed once a day, at intervals, as the business interests of the city, and the editor's pocket seem to demand. The first number appeared on the 20th inst., and the second number may be expected to twinkle on or about Thanksgiving. We had the pleasure of perusing a copy the other day, and were moved to exclaim:—

Twinkle, twinkle, little Star,
How I wonder what you are:
Put on your specs and you will see
The grandest sheet in Lenawee.

ORANGE BLOSSOMS.

The Young men of Tecumseh are squandering valuable time. Another of our fair maidens has entered into hymen's bonds and the lucky groom hails from a distant state. Last Tuesday afternoon, at the home of the bride's mother in this village, occured the marriage of Miss Eva Clement to Mr. Geo. H. Saxton. The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. T. G. Potter in the presence of a few intimate friends. There was no effort at display, as the ceremony was strictly private. Yesterday the parties left for Delavan, Wis., where the groom has a lucrative position in a large flouring mill, and where their future home will be. The groom is a stranger in Tecumseh, but report says that he is a first class miller and a most estimable man. We believe the bride has chosen wisely, and among all the congratulations she may receive upon the eve of her departure from her old home, none will be more sincere and hearty than those betowed by her business associates in the HERALD office. That Eva may realize her fondest anticipations and find a happy home in her new relations is the wish of each and all of the HERALD employees.

OUT-OF-DOOR SPORTS.

Immensely Valuable as Mental and Moral Helps, but They Should Be Enjoyed Wisely.

Hardly any other change in our common life has been more noticeable during the last twenty-five years than the rapid development of enthusiasm for open-air sports. Then games of ball, such as are played by the hundred every day at present, were almost unknown. Now every daily journal has its base ball column. Tennis probably never had been played on this side of the Atlantic; now tennis courts are abundant. Boat racing was attempted, if at all, only in a tentative fashion, and the annual Yale and Harvard University races had but begun, in a rudimentary form. Shooting was confined to a few persons; now it is the object of many large and well organized clubs, and contests have become international. Horse trotting was not uncommon, but had not been developed as it is to day, and a mile in 2:40 caused as much admiration as one in 2:10 does now. Yachts were built and sailed, and the America, by winning the famous cup, had given yachting a strong impulse, but such "flyers" as the Puritan, the Priscilla and the Genesta were undreamed of.

To-day one sees and hears the evidences of interest in athletics upon every side, and, if he have not actually passed middle life, he must be an unusual person who is not conscious of a hearty and abiding interest in such things. This is by no means a low and vulgar taste, as is charged sometimes. On the contrary, it is thoroughly healthy, honorable and improving. Like every other inclination, it needs to be controlled and directed properly, or it may be injurious, but, if it be regulated, it is a real blessing. No observing person, old enough to remember how people looked a quarter of a century ago, can walk our streets without perceiving how many more persons there are now than there were then who are robust and muscular; through whose veins evidently runs good, rich, red blood; who have the signs not merely of great strength, but also of endurance, and who need not fear comparison physically with any other men and women on earth. The narrow-chested, pallid, wrinkled, nervous, worn-looking people are not all gone from among us, but they are much less numerous than they were formerly.

Now this is a beneficial change. It means a great deal for the future of the nation and the world. And it is due, probably more than to any other one cause, to the fact that, as a people, we have learned to enjoy and practice out-of-door sports. Our girls, even, are growing as sturdy, relatively, as our boys. We fill our lungs fuller of God's sweet, fresh air, and oftener than in the past. We harden our muscles and quiet our nerves by walking, riding, rowing, or whatever our favorite sport may be. And we enjoy that quiet, invigorating sleep at night which God has ordained to follow the thorough but not undue exertion of the bodily powers.

Of course open-air sports have their dangers. That of accident is no greater, when due caution be observed, than one risks in an in-door life. That of over-exertion needs to be specially remembered, for enthusiasm and the desire to become expert sometimes tempt one too far. But the two great evils which beset the favorite out-of-door sports of the day are betting and Sabbath-breaking. Betting is the curse of all sorts of sport. Too often it degenerates into reckless gambling, and in some cases it even seeks to determine the issue of a contest beforehand. Sabbath-breaking, thus far, has been connected with base ball and yachting chiefly, but, if it be not checked before long by a reform in public sentiment, it will cast its evil shadow over the whole broad field of sport. One capital help in checking it will be found to be the Saturday half holiday already, and most properly, becoming common. These are grave dangers, and their mischievious tendencies should not be underestimated.

On the other hand, the immense value of out-of-door sports must not be forgotten, and the fact that, in spite of their actual and possible evils, they are of real mental and moral help. They develop the body into greater vigor, and make it more of a joy merely to live. They entertain and relieve the tired mind, relaying the strain of business cares. They train the eye, the hand and the judgment. They demand that self-control and temperance be studied and practiced. They educate the temper. They help to teach the lesson how to bear adversity calmly, and prosperity without self conceit. They stimulate the love of this beautiful world in which we live, and many a careless mind has received through them impressive reminders of the existence and goodness of the great Creator Himself. Like most other things in this world, out-of-door sports are neither an unmixed evil nor an absolute blessing. But to him who is willing to enjoy them wisely they are among God's best gifts.—The Congregationalist.

Servants' Books in Berlin.

They appear to have an odd way of doing things in Berlin with regard to the characters of domestic servants. I am informed by one who has resided in that eminently conservative city for some ten years that his wife once ventured to discharge a cook, after submitting to a long course of depredations at this domestic's hands. It is the custom there to write the character of the servant in a book which all servants are obliged to keep. My informant in this instance ventured to inscribe the statement that dishonesty was the reason of dismissal. A few days after the discharged domestic appeared with a policeman, who said the character must be altered, as it would be impossible for the woman to get another place if the truth remained in the book. It was thought prudent to accede to the demand of the myrmidons as it appears that six days' imprisonment is the penalty for the slightest remonstrance to one of these officials. This fact—for it really is a fact—show, what a protection to employers this German book system is!—London Truth.

A DISAGREEABLE SET.

Indifferent People Unfit to Live in Civilized Communities.

What is my opinion of indifferent people? They are a disagreeable cross between boorishness and selfishness. They are so thoroughly devoted to themselves and their interests that they can give no thought to anybody else, and they frequently go so far in this exclusion as to be positively uncivil. I have met men who go about with their business, or their cares, so closely wrapped about them, that it was not possible for them to see the world around them. That is the way it looked to the casual observer, but I somehow thought that those men had not mind or heart enough to attend to their own affairs and be polite at the same time. There are those, too, to whom you may talk, possibly not because you want to, but because the necessities of the circumstances compel it, and they will look at you with a kind of idiotic stare which is enough to paralyze a hundred-pound rifle gun loaded to the muzzle. You've seen hundreds of that kind, and they don't seem to decrease in numbers to any remarkable extent as the world increases in civilization and refinement. I can understand and allow for a certain percentage of selfishness in the sum of our existence, but I not believe that any man or woman has the right to increase that percentage to the discomfort or unhappiness of the majority. A very little thought and care for others goes a great way, and those who do not exercise it, differ from hogs only in their difference of anatomy and the clothes they wear.—Merchant Traveler.

VALUE OF THOUGHT.

Deep Reasoning on the Strength of Which a Colored Gentleman Obtained a Useful Implement.

"Let that wheelbarrow alone," cried Colonel Matterson, as he stepped to the end of the gallery and called to an old negro who had entered the back-yard.

"Sah?"

"I say put down that wheelbarrow or I'll send for a policeman."

"Oh, I ken put it down, sah, an' save yer all dat trouble. I neber wants er pusson ter go outen his way ter commodate me."

"All right. Now get out of this lot. First thing I know you'll steal——"

"Now, look heah, mister. I doan know what yer name is, but I wants yer to look heah jes' de same. I wan't thinkin erbout takin' dis thing. I makes dese impurments, sah, an' I wanted ter 'zamine dis one, 'cause it 'peered ter be er new 'vention, but, sah, ef yer's so easy skeered, I'll bid yer good mawnin'."

"You must excuse me if I have wrongfully accused you."

"Oh, neber mine. De ole saints wuz 'cuzed an' pussycuted, sah. Ef da could stan' it widout 'plainin' I oughtenter grumble."

Shortly after the Colonel went into the house, the old negro, after quietly lifting the wheelbarrow over the fence, mused: "Folks is gittin' so 'spicious dese days dat somebody is gwine ter git inter trouble. Dat man ain't got no use fur dis 'borrer. What do de Bible say 'bout de pusson what buried his talen's an' didn' make nothin' outen 'em? Folks oughter think erbout dese things."—Arkansaw Traveler.

Always Late.

Half the value of anything to be done consists in doing it promptly, and yet a large class of persons are almost more or less late. Their work is always in advance of them, and so it is with their appointments and engagements. They are late, very likely, in rising in the morning and also in going to bed at night; late at their appointments also. Their letters are sent to the postoffice just as the mail is closed. They arrive at the wharf just as the steamboat is leaving it. They come into the station just as the train is going out. They do not entirely forget or omit the engagement or duty, but they are always behind time, and so are generally in haste, or in a hurry, as if they had been born a little too late and were forever trying to catch up with the lost time. They waste time for themselves and waste it for others, and fail of comfort and influence and success which they might have found in systematic and habitual punctuality. A good old lady, who was asked why she invariably was so early in her seat at church, is said to have replied that it was her religion not to disturb the religion of others. And if it were with all a part both of courtesy and duty, not to say of religion, never to be unpunctual, they would save time for, as well as annoyance to others, and aid themselves to success and influence in a thousand ways.—How-ebold.

A Lucky Man.

Hostetter McGinnis is one of the most lucky men in Texas. If he takes a chance at a raffle he is sure to win. If he throws dice for the drinks, somebody else has to pay for them. Not long since a New York lawyer said to McGinnis:

"Lend me seventy-five dollars. I'd rather borrow money from you than any friend I've got."

"Why do you prefer to borrow from me?"

"Because you have such good luck that I really believe you would get your money paid back, although I never did did such a thing in my life."

As luck would have it, Hostetter did not have a cent of money with him at the time.—Texas Siftings.

—A female book agent has gone down into some of the deepest coal mines of Pennsylvania and has taken a large number of orders from the men while they were at work.—Pittsburgh Post.

—A man died lately in London from the effects of a bite of a cat. And a verdict of "death from hydrophobia" was rendered by the Coroner's Jury that investigated the case.

—A genuine sealskin is valued at from $30 to $50. That with the necessary work and the silk lining makes a good cloak worth about $400.—N. Y. Herald.

HOW LIVES ARE SAVED.

The System of Work Adopted by the United States Life-Saving Service.

The method of saving lives from shipwreck, at present in use at our United States Life-Saving Stations, may be best understood by supposing an actual case and describing the operations of the surfmen.

If the sea will permit, the people on the vessels are brought ashore in the surf-boat." If a high sea is running, however, this is rendered impracticable, and recourse is had to the "Breeches Buoy." When the discovery of a wreck is announced at the station, all the apparatus is at once carried along the beach to the point nearest the wreck. The Lyle gun, a small brass cannon, which weighs one hundred and seventeen pounds, is loaded with powder. Then into its mouth is slipped a long steel "projectile," to the outer end of which is attached a light but stout line, called the "shot line." Then the gun is aimed and fired. The projectile, followed by the long cord, flies out toward the wreck, passes over it, and drops into the sea, and the "shot line" falls on deck. Thus the first means of communication is established between the wreck and the shore. The crew of the vessel now pull in this "shot line," until they draw on deck a pulley block, which the men on shore have tied to it. Through this pulley block is running an "endless line," that is, a long line which is called endless, because the two ends have been fastened together. It runs also through another pulley block, which has been kept on shore. The sailors tie their pulley block well up on the mast, and the men on shore fasten theirs to a "sand anchor," which they have firmly buried in the sand.

You have often seen the double string which children, living across the street from each other, run between their houses and call a "telegraph." It is a long, endless line, running through a pulley, or a staple, at each end, and when a basket or other article is tied to one side of the double line, and the other side is pulled in, the basket of course moves off across the street. This is like what has now been rigged between the vessel and the shore. So now the men on shore can tie anything on to the endless line, running through a pulley block at each end, and starting the circular motion of the line, soon send it out to the vessel. What they do tie on is the end of a great hawser, or heavy rope, and when this hawser is drawn on deck, it is at once fastened to the mast a few feet above the pulley block. Then the other end of the hawser, which has been kept on shore, is hauled in as tight, or "taut," as possible, and also fastened a few feet above the pulley block, which has been tied to the sand anchor. Now the "breeches buoy" is brought out by the men on shore. This is a circle, or large ring, of leather stuffed, of perhaps two feet in diameter. Hanging below it is a pair of stiff canvas knee-breeches. It is now hung from the heavy hawser so that it can slide freely to and fro upon it. Then it is securely fastened to one part of the endless line, the other part of the line is hauled steadily in, and away moves the buoy, slipping along on the hawser from which it hangs, and drawn by the small endless line to which it is secured. One person is dropped in through the circle, with one leg in each side of the canvas breeches. The circular line, which has been described, is fastened also to the buoy, or rather to the pulley block of the buoy, and is again put in motion, and the buoy retraces its course to the shore. The rescued person is taken out, and again and again the buoy makes the journey, until every one on board is brought safe to land.—Youth's Companion.

THOROUGHLY COMPETENT.

A Steamboat Mate Who Displayed Remarkable Courage in Drowning Out Incipient Flames.

The mate of the steamer was showing me over the boat as we rushed along down the great Father of Waters. The one particular thing he wanted me to take notice of was the fact that the boat was as near fire-proof as a steamboat could be made. Fire hose was coiled up all along the various decks, nozzles all ready to play, and buckets of water were kept standing in various localities to drown out incipient fires.

"It's all right if you have a system," I said, as we finally halted.

"System is dead perfect," he replied. "At the cry of 'fire' I tap the bell. That calls all the crew to the spot. There isn't a spot on the boat which we can't reach with three streams of water, and I rather guess I'm competent to take charge. I'm an old fireman of twenty years' experience."

Well, I went off to bed by and by, but hadn't turned in yet, when somebody shouted "fire!" as loud as he could yell. I rushed out. We were bowling along within fifty feet of the shore, and away aft there was a bright blaze of flame and a rush of smoke. I started that way, but somebody ran over me, sprawled out, sprang up and I heard a splash in the water. A negro ran past me and rang the bell, and a second got down a coil of hose, opened light on the fire, and directed matters so sensibly that the flames were soon subdued. Then the Captain came aft and roared out:

"Johnson! Johnson! Where in blazes is the mate?"

Nobody knew. We hunted for him, but he was not found. He was the old fireman of twenty years' experience who went overboard and struck out for shore at the first alarm, leaving the negro deck-hands to save the boat and one hundred and eighty lives.—Detroit Free Press.

—Let any farmer compute the sum which a full annual crop of apples would produce, even at a low rate per bushel, and he will be surprised to find how much more profitable his apple orchard is than any part of the farm devoted to grain growing. With good management and manuring a full crop of apples may be grown every year with as much certainty as any grain crop and with less expense.—N. Y. Herald

LYSANDER'S WOES.

Why Parents Prefer Industrious Young Men to Social Tramps and Shallow-Pated Dunces.

"Boots are now made to weigh three pounds each. Young men should think of this when they call on their best girls and hear their fathers come down stairs and tremble."

At it again, Lysander! So when you call on your best girl and hear her father come down the back stairs you tremble.

Well, I am not surprised.

Neither is any one else who knows you. The only wonder is how you ever manage to get into the house.

The young girl evidently is not thoroughly acquainted with you, or perhaps she is one of those young and foolish maidens who would elope with a coachman if her father was rich enough to keep a horse. No wonder her father objects to you calling on her.

Though poor, he is not an idiot, Lysander, and he has not clothed, fed and schooled a daughter for eighteen long years to have her wed a shallow-pated, long-eared dunce like yourself.

He works hard for a living, Lysander, if you know what that means, and he finds it difficult enough to support his family as it is, without adding a hungry, ill-bred, idle, shiftless, fat-witted loafer like yourself to the number.

He labors from morning until night, and when he sits down to his dinner he dosen't want to have his intelligence insulted by hearing your feeble attempts to paraphrase antediluvian jokes that were moth-eaten when Noah built his ark.

Of course, Lysander, you regard the father of your best girl as your natural enemy.

He is.

A man doesn't raise daughters to throw them away, unless he is a good Prince in a fairy-story, or a Mormon with more girls than he knows what to do with.

But, Lysander, let a decent, honest, industrious young man, who has some purpose in life other than becoming the son-in-law of a wealthy man or a charge on the county, apply for a girl's hand, and notice how welcome he is made.

Were you ever at the seaside, Lysander?

No.

Not even as a hotel-waiter?

Well, you ought to go there. The salt water will do you good. Just try it once, and see how the mothers of young girls fish for the right kind of young men.

Did you ever hear of match-making mammas?

Well, you try reading a little, instead of writing so much, and perhaps you will learn something. The average mother and the average father are on the lookout for a young man who can do something besides eat and wear out parlor furniture.

The bull-dog is always chained when that young man calls. The father meets him at the door and shakes him by the hand. The mother greets him in the parlor, and asks why he hasn't called before. If the young man stays until midnight, the parents congratulate themselves; and if he proposes marriage, they have a notice of the engagement put in the Society Recorder, and the young lady wears her engagement-ring outside of her glove, and all the other girls in the neighborhood grow green with cankerous, corrosive envy.

That is the way the eligible young man is regarded, Lysander. If he couldn't be caught any other way, Lysander, the father would set out a free lunch for him, and the mother would place the spare bedroom at his disposal.

The mistake you make, Lysander, is in supposing that the father of a marriageable young woman wants to have her marry a man who limits his usefulness to being able to act as a scare-crow in a field of corn.

Such things, though not essential on a farm, can be hired much cheaper than they can be married.

Tramps and old clothes are altogether too cheap in this great country, Lysander, for you to try and enter into competition with them in the matrimonial way.—Puck.

LOST HIS TASTE.

How a Colored Missis-ippian Learned to Dislike Smoked Meats.

I was sleeping in a second-story bedroom of a planter's house in Mississippi, and it was not yet daylight, when something roused me up. I was listening to hear the noise repeated, when there came such a yell as fairly shook me out of bed. I ran to the open window, but it was too dark outside to see anything. As I stood there listening I heard the clank of a chain, followed by groans, and then all was still. I went back to bed with the idea that some crazy negro was prowling around, and slept until sunrise. Then I looked out and solved the mystery. A few rods away was the smoke-house. A big bear-trap had been set at the door, and it had caught a prize. With one leg held as in a vice, and with his hands grasping a young tree to hold him up, a burly big negro looked up at me and called out:

"Say, boss, but I want to git loose of dis!"

When I went down and told the Colonel he expressed no surprise and took no action until after breakfast. Then he walked out to the smoke-house, and, after looking the prisoner over, he said:

"Does it hurt?"

"Nebber was hurted so in my life, sah."

"Can't you get out?"

"No, sah. I'ze bin tryin' eber since midnight, but I can't do it."

"I have hams and shoulders in there."

"Yes, sah, I reckon you has."

"Are you fond of smoked meat?"

"No, sah. I used ter be, but I ain't any mo.' I shall pebber tech smoked meat agin!"

"Like to walk out nights?"

"No, sah. Ize gwine ter bed ebery night at sundown arter dis!"

We got a rail and opened the trap and let him out. He went off dragging his leg behind him, and as he reached the gate he lifted his hat and said:

"Werry much obleeged, Kurnel. If my appetite fur hams an' shoulders eber returns I'll keep gl'ar o' dis plantashun, an' doan' you forgit it!"—Detroit Free Press.

The World's Champion.

Mr. Edward Hanlan, the great oarsman, and until his recent contest with Beach in Australia, the champion of the world, may certainly be looked upon as an authority in everything affecting athletic sports. Before leaving Australia for this country, he wrote a letter in which he stated that he had used St. Jacobs Oil with the most beneficial results. He found it a reliable remedy for muscular pains in the arms and limbs, and from his personal experience took great pleasure in recommending it. No stronger proof of the truth of what is claimed for St. Jacobs Oil could be furnished than this, and it will undoubtedly carry great weight with thoughtful and intelligent people.

CATARRH—A NEW TREATMENT.

From the Montreal Star.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 2000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished he claims the Catarrh is practically cured and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The Application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.

THE DEMI-SEASON.

Dresses Which Are Made for Traveling and Shopping Purposes.

For demi-season dresses for traveling, shopping and for morning wear, navy blue alpaca is being made up in imitation of the graceful gowns worn during the summer by the Princess of Wales and her daughters. For very young ladies silver braid or white mohair has formed the trimmings, the mohair being used as a narrow vest, high collar and straight cuffs, with rows of braid along the edges, and also on the sash draperies that are worn with a kilt skirt. For autumn dresses black braid, or else dark blue Hercules braid, will take the place of metal braids, and either velvet or plush will be used for the vest, cuffs and collar. Long overskirts that are made like the housemaid skirts, and looped up on one side or both, will be used with these dresses, and there may be rows of braid or of velvet ribbon for the trimming. A side panel of velvet will be chosen by those who prefer pleated skirts with Greek draperies. The new shade of brown, called lynx brown, is also being made up in mohair and alpaca dresses for the three autumn months, when canvas dresses will be too thin and cloth too heavy for comfort. Gilt braid will be sparingly used on such dresses, rather as a piping of edging for brown velvet than in many showy rows or in the vermicelli patterns lately used. Wide wool galloons and wool laces that are embroidered lightly with gilt are rich trimmings for lynx brown mohairs, while silver threads are wrought in similar trimmings for gray dresses.

The mixed red and blue laces are also being used to trim blue alpacas, and with these are sometimes seen velvets of the two colors, in stripes or in very small figures, for the small accessories of the corsage. The correct idea however, in such dresses is to have them exceedingly plain, depending on their fine fit for their beauty. When lace is used on mohair, it is most stylish when confined to the lower skirt: a single deep fall of lace, very slightly gathered, crosses the front and side gores, or else there are two or three narrower ruffles of lace across the front and several rows are placed up the left side in the space left uncovered by the drapery. Still another plan is that of edging side pleats with narrow wool lace, and forming the front and sides of the skirt of these pleats. When braid is chosen for trimming, the new fancy is to form the front breadth of two very wide box pleats, covering these with clusters of cross rows of the braid, lengthening each row in the cluster, and curling up the ends toward the sides. A pointed plastron made in the same way then trims the corsage, and smaller points are on the sleeves. To complete such a suit for traveling there should be a long blue or brown cloth ulster, and a bonnet of rough blue straw with the brim covered with blue or brown velvet, as is the most becoming to the wearer. A rosette of braid or of wool lace, or some "donkey's-ear loops" of wool or of crape, should trim the close round hat of felt or straw that many young ladies prefer to bonnets.—Harper's Bazar.

UNDERTAKERS.

How and Why the Term Came to Be Applied to "Funeral Directors."

The earliest known use of this word as applied to conductors of funerals is by Young, who has the couplet:

> Where ravs, undertakers hover round,
> And with his spade the sexton marks the ground.

The present use of the word is no doubt derived from its primary meaning, one who stipulates to do anything, or undertakes the management of any affair. Two hundred years ago a class of people known as upholders were usually called upon to take charge of the funerals. Thus the poet Gay says:

> The upholder, rueful harbinger of death,
> Waits with impatience for the dying breath.

Now, upholders were dealers in second-hand furniture, old clothes and the like, and perhaps were so called because they were so often resorted to as the last resource of failing credit. As these persons were able from their stock of cheaply purchased material to supply what was needed at funerals at less expense than the regular merchant or haberdasher, they came to be thus employed, and also to furnish houses. In time the more ambitious of this class confined their business to the furnishing of houses only, and dealt in goods both new and old, and to avoid the confounding of their business with that of the funeral managers styled themselves upholsters, a name changed latter to upholsterers. Subsequently the more pretentious members of the clan of upholsterers assumed the name of undertakers, deriving the cognomen logically enough from the signification of its parts in the Saxon tongue. An undertaker, one who takes in hand a business or task, or renders himself responsible for its performance. Or perhaps the idea of the word was taken from the French name for the same office, entrepreneur, though the primary idea of the French word is rather that of one who bids for a particular task. Clarendon, in his "History," gives the word with a general meaning in the line, "Antrim was naturally a great undertaker." Honeywood, in "The Good Natured Man" of Goldsmith, speaks thus of Croaker: "His very mirth is an antidote to all gayety, and his appearance has a stronger effect on my spirits than an undertaker's shop.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

—A noted statistican, Edward Atkinson, insists that there is an abundance of room yet in this world. The 1,400,000,000 persons supposed to be on the globe could all find easy standing room within the limits of a field ten miles square, and by the aid of a telephone could be addressed at one time by a single speaker. In a field twenty miles square they could all be comfortably seated.—N. Y. Tribune.

—Dr. C. C. Abbott, the naturalist, recently found upon his farm at Trenton, N. J., a box tortoise, upon the under shell of which was cut his grandfather's name, J. Abbott, with the date 1821. The appearance of the tortoise denoted great age, and there is no reason to doubt the fact that the name was really engraved upon it sixty-four years ago.

The Magazine of Art.

The Magazine of Art for November is an unusually attractive number, and the letter press is of much more general interest than one has reason to expect in a purely art publication. The frontispiece is a portrait of the beautiful lady Hamilton, as "The Spinstress," reproduced in color from Romney's famous painting. Other portraits of Lady Hamilton are given in another part of the magazine, together with a spirited description of the career of that brilliant, though unhappy beauty. Millicent Garrett-Fawcett has the opening paper on "Barnham Beeches," a recently acquired park in the London suburbs. The illustrations are from the pencil of A. W. Henley. The Myth of "Perseus and Andromeda" is set forth by Jane E. Harrison and illustrated from classic models. The department of American and foreign notes will be found as full as it is newsy.—Cassell & Company, Limited, New York, $3.50 per year, in advance.

THE ROYAL BAKER AND PASTRY COOK—A Royal addition to the kitchen library. It contains over seven hundred receipts pertaining to every branch of the culinary department, including baking, rosting, preserving, soups, cakes, jellies, pastry, and all kinds of sweetmeats, with receipts for the most delicious candies, cordials, beverages, and all other necessary knowledge for the chef de cuisine of the most exacting epicure as well as for the more modest housewife, who desires to prepare for her lord and master a repast that shall be both wholesome and economical. With each receipt is given full explicit directions for put togteher, manipulating, shaping, baking, and kind of utensil used, so that a novice can go through the operation with success; while a special and important feature is made of the mode of preparing all kinds of food and delicacies for the sick. The book has been prepared under the direction of Prof. Rudmani, late chef of the New York Cooking School, and is the most valuable of the recent editions upon the subject of cookery that has come to our notice. It is gotten up in the highest style of the printers art, on illuminated covers, etc. We are assured that every can of the "Royal Baking Powder" contains an order for one of these valuable books.

The premium engraving issued by "Peterson's Magazine," for 1886, is of rare excellence and beauty. It is a first-class line and stipple engraving, executed in the highest style of the art. The artists are Illman Brothers, and they have engraved it—size, 21 inches by 27—for "Peterson's Magazine," in their best and most brilliant manner. The picture is called "The Angel of Paradise," and is a companion to the "Not Lost, But Gone Before," published by "Peterson's Magazine" some years ago, and which was so popular. In artistic merit, it is, we think, one of the finest "Peterson" has ever issued, and will go to every mother's heart, especially if she has lost one of her "darlings." Another of the premiums is the "For-Get-Me-Not," an illustrated album, a book of very great beauty. Another is an extra copy of the magazine, etc., etc. You can get any of them, gratis, by raising a club for "Peterson" for 1886. This is a rare chance. Specimens of the magazine sent, gratis, with full particulars, to those wishing to get up clubs, if written for. Address CHARLES J. PETERSON, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

CLINTON CHRONICLES.

The ladies of the M. E. church gave a chicken-pie social in the basement of that church last evening, and although the weather was very unpropitious, they had a very fair attendance.

The work on Mrs. Hattie Johnston's new house on Chicago street is being rapidly pushed forward, making another of the many efforts towards improvement in that part of the village.

The ladies of the M. E. church will meet at the parsonage, tomorrow, (Friday, afternoon. It is hoped there will be a good attendance.

Chas. Clark and Leb. Pomeroy went up to Sand Lake to capture some of the finny tribe last Saturday evening.

The blue ribbon social on Saturday evening at Town Hall, was not as well patronized as it would have been, had it been held on some other evening: however, we are informed that the demand equaled the supply, and in the other event, a shortage might have occurred. Our blue ribbon society has become one of the features of the place under its able management, and should meet with every success.

Our chicken buyers have got to work again, and the squaking of the feathery tribe breaks the monotony at Will C. Rogers' on Jackson street.

J. S. Kies has some of the boss carrots of the season. They are of a turnip shape and the finest we ever saw. We are not sure but the productive soil under Fred's management will make grangers of both Joseph and Fred yet.

John E. McCollum was at his mother's in Manchester Sunday and left his brother Emmett better when he came home, but received the sad intelligence of his death early Monday morning.

Alonzo Clark visited Hillsdale, Monday on business.

The new sidewalks just put down from the railroad west, on the south side of Chicago street and from the same point east on the north side of the same street, maketh the pedestrian smile and addeth much to appearances.

Thomas Roper shipped a car load of cabbage the first of the week.

E. R. Smith shipped two car loads of squashes to Boston last Friday. Ed. had a large field of them and had he found a suitable market for them sooner, might have shipped double that amount.

E. L. Nims, with J. W. Fales & Co., wholesale paper dealers of Detroit, was in town looking over business men Tuesday.

Miss Carrie VanDuyne of Manchester, has been spending several days with Mrs. Pomeroy and Julia.

Two car loads of Dr. Reynolds' "devil's kindling wood" was shipped from this station last Friday, and the prospects are that it will be a long time before the kindling is exhausted, from the appearance of the apples stored upon the ground near the depot, for want of room in the mill.

Stephonawski and "Sid" McIntyre, the Bridgewater chicken thieves, created quite a stir in this vicinity. Constable Burroughs has been trying to trap them for a long time, and has finally succeeded, (after having them fairly snared once before.) He received word Sunday, that they were coming down on the Monday morning train to give themselves up, and upon going to the depot, found the first named individual there, but young Mac was non-est. However, Joe was not to be cheated out of any part of the program he had promised, and having found out what direction Mac was traveling, he set himself to work to head him off, and with deputy sheriff Burch, took the afternoon train for Toledo, and captured their man just as he was about to take the train for New York, and returned to Adrian where they left him in the keeping of Ance Whitmore until Tuesday noon, when he was brought to this village, fined $50 and allowed to visit the house of Correction at Ionia, for a term of ninety days. Too bad that he does not have his accomplice for a room mate during the cold nights of winter. We learn he was only fined. A few doses of the house of correction or a short stop at Jackson will do such fellows "a heap o'good."

The iron pillars decorate the front of Ed. Seamark's new store and the other work is going forward to completion, quite rapidly.

Rev. Pierce was not greeted with a large audience at the M. E. church last Sunday evening, but he gave the few a fine treat.

A lad six years of age, in Bridgewater, named Stephonawski, shot himself last Thursday morning while handling a loaded shot gun. As there was no person in the room at the time but a young brother, and he claiming to be asleep, the facts of the accident will probably remain a mystery, but we think from what we heard that the first story told us looks most feasible. There was a chest in the room and it would seem from appearances that he had endeavored to draw the gun over the chest when it was discharged, the contents entering the boy's head and literally tearing the upper part to pieces.

Last Thursday was a busy day at the depot. A car load of lumber arrived for Mr. Tate of Bridgewater, and eight or nine teams were there to haul it; teams were also busy at work drawing cider and cider timber, and squash, wheat, coal, etc., while the whole force employed by the Hause Bros. were working to their utmost. Even our jolly station agent was trotting in and out of the freight house with the wheat car, with a movement that told too plainly that the wheat must be loaded before the freight reached this station, and we don't know when we have seen things look more like business anywhere in Lenawee county.

"Dr. John" has purchased another horse. He had quite a stable of steeds before, but his growing practice makes it necessary to add thereto, for the doctor is in the habit of getting there when called.

The woolen mill presents a brilliant appearance evenings when lighted with its many gas jets.

Last Sunday morning made one think of the benefit derived from the coal fire, as we gazed around upon the beautiful white crystalized drops of water.

SPRINGVILLE SNUFF.

The corn in this vicinity is scarcely half husked.

Disagreeable weather is making the roads likewise.

The M. E. church is undergoing quite extensive repairs. C. D. Smith has changed the seats so as to allow the building to be heated by one large stove, instead of two small ones as before. Tiffany & McCall are wielding the brush on the outside, and will cover the walls on the inside with elegant paper, which will no doubt aid the minister in keeping the eyes of the sinners open.

The bear show last Monday evening was fairly attended. No one expected very much from it, and therefore were not badly disappointed.

The first ball of the season will be given at C. E. Jessup's hall on Friday evening, Nov. 13th. Knapp & Hubbard's band of Tecumseh, are expected to furnish music. Those wishing to skate will be accommodated until 9 P. M.

R. L. Rogers is favoring one foot, from the effects of a fall, received while at work in the House of the Lord.

RIDGEWAY RACKET.

The cold wave struck us with a little snow, Sunday.

W. P. Cadmus has put a fine assortment of boots, shoes and rubbers in his shoe shop.

Rev. and Mrs. W. J. Clack visited friends at Flat Rock last week.

Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Cadmus, Misses Rhoda and Lou Arner spent the day at Adrian, Friday.

Only three took in the excursion to Toledo, Saturday.

We took in the excursion to Toledo Saturday, and while in the city called on Prof. C. T. Bateman. The Prof. is superintending the Union School at Perrysburg.

The social held at Mrs. Waring's on Friday evening, was quite well attended and all enjoyed the amusements very much. The society will give an oyster supper at the church next week Friday evening.

Regular Meeting of the R. L. S. at the Hall, Friday night, at which time a very interesting program will be carried out.

Rev. C. B. Sutton, State Temperance Lecturer, will speak to the citizens of the village and vicinity next Saturday evening at Cottage Hall. Exe by's Hall, Britton, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 8th, at 2:30 P. M., and at Pennington's Corners Sunday evening.

Postmaster Santus went to Adrian on business, Monday.

The village school closed Friday, after a very successful term taught by Miss Hattie Moon. She will spend a week at her home near Saline, and then begin the winter term.

Mrs. Richmond Cheever is visiting relatives in the village at present.

The little four year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Temple, after a short sickness, passed away Wednesday morning. She had not been well for sometime but was not considered dangerous until within a few hours of her death. The funeral services took place Thursday afternoon at the church.

Miss Lou Arner has just received a new supply of fall and winter goods in the millinery line, of the latest styles, and best assortment, and respectfully invites all her friends to call and examine goods and prices before purchasing elsewhere. No trouble to show goods.

ADDISON ATOMS.

Several of our people visited Toledo Saturday. The excursion run by the M. & O. on that day is reported as being fairly well patronized and successfully conducted.

E. W. Crane, of Adrian, was in town Monday.

Miss Nettie Bench, of Jackson, has been visiting her sister-in-law, Mrs. Lyda Lemmons, this week.

Mr. H. S. Eaton was slightly indisposed early in the week, but is able to get about again now.

DEATH OF GEN. MC CLELLAN.

Another of the chief actors in the great rebellion has gone to his final reward. Gen. Geo. B. McClellan died at his residence in Orange, N. J., on the 29th. ult. He had been ailing for some days, but was convalescing, and on the 28th. he rode from his house on Orange Mountain, down into the village. That night he was seized with an attack of neuralgia of the heart and within five hours his spirit took its flight.

As the eventful years of the war recede into the past, Gen. McClellan's worth is more and more recognized and history will do him justice for the services he rendered to the Union cause. The Army of the Potomac, which was the grandest army of modern times, was the work of his masterly genius. Gen. Grant took this army, ready made at his hands, and with it he crushed Gen. Lee and ended the war. But the instrument in Grant's hands, and without which he would have been powerless, was the handywork of Geo. B. McClellan. "Little Mac" was the idol of his soldiers. We have frequently met and conversed with "boys in blue," who fought under him in the Army of the Potomac, and they always grow eloquent in recounting the deeds of their favorite commander. Many an old veteran's eyes will moisten with tears when he learns of the death of "Little Mac." McClellan's position in history, as one of the leading actors in the civil war, is assured, and his name and fame will grow brighter and brighter as the years roll by.

The following tribute to his memory is taken from the Philadelphia Times, an independent republican paper, which is so fair and truthful that we reproduce it here.

The country was shocked yesterday morning by the announcement of the sudden death of General George B. McClellan. There was no public premonition of the approach of the inexorable messenger, and the announcement of his death came upon the public like the thunderbolt from the apparently cloudless sky.

Of the many men of pre-eminent distinction during the most memorable history of the Republic, General McClellan was like unto none of his contemporaries. He was a man of the purest and best politics; a sincere and thoroughly self-sacrificing patriot; a masterly military organizer; a skillful and brave commander, and one whose political counsels were ever wise and statesmanlike. He came to the command of the Armies of the Union the youngest of all who had held that fearfully responsible trust, and he had to confront the gravest military duties and dangers. The country was unused to and unprepared for war; its trusted chieftain had failed; the Union arms had suffered defeat in the first great battle of the war, and political complications and perils mingled largely with the military dangers which beset him. Lincoln believed in McClellan and meant to give him honest and hearty support; but conflicting methods, political and military jealousies, and the retreat from Richmond on the Peninsula culminated in his removal from command. The disgraceful bombast and failure of Pope, and his retreat into the intrenchments of Washington from the second battle of Manassas, brought the Army of the Potomac again under McClellan, and he exhibited his wonderful organizing military powers by gathering up a defeated and demoralized army and practically defeating Lee at Antietam.

General McClellan was a conscientious conservative, both as a soldier and a statesman, and he was called to act a leading part when conservative methods in both politics and war were not acceptable to the country. The political methods of war times were simply revolutionary, and the military methods finally looked to results regardless of sacrifice. Grant lost more men in killed, wounded and missing between the Rapidan and the James than Lee ever had in front of him, and that method of sacrificing three lives for one destroyed Lee and ended the rebellion. McClellan would never have fought such a campaign, nor would any have fought it but Grant. McClellan would have taken Richmond by overwhelming numbers and strategy and with probably half the loss that Grant sustained; but Lee's army would have been still in the field and the rebellion unconquered. Both these great warriors have passed away. History will give a generous measure of justice to both, and George B. McClellan will rank, in the annals of the nation's achievements, as one of the great generals and unsullied patriots of his memorable age.

The leading article in the November HARPER'S will be an interesting description, under the title of "An Indian Journey," of portions of the Plymouth County coast in Massachusetts, written by Mrs. Lucy C. Lillie. Mrs. Lillie's sketches of travel in England have frequently delighted readers of Harper's; in returning to home soil and native subjects she finds quite as much picturesque material; and almost as much historical association, as in the wonderland of "abroad." If she helps to show Americans how much there is to be seen at home which most of them don't see, she will have done a pleasant service to her countrymen. The article is charmingly illustrated by R. Swain Gifford and his wife, and by other artists.

BITTER WORDS.

Ah, me! those terrible tongues of ours.
Are we half aware of their terrible powers?
Do we ever trouble our heads at all
Where the jest may strike or the hint may fall?

The latest chirp of that "little bird,"
That spicy story "you must have heard"—
We work the story in our gossip's web,
And sometimes, I guess, of course, we smash
What fames have been blasted and troops undone,
What peoples and kings have been stirred,
By a word in bitterness spoken,
By only a bitter word.

A sneer—a shrug—a whisper low—
They are so small, so slight from an ambushed bow,
Shot by the coward, the fool, the knave;
They pierce the mail of the great and brave,
Vain is the buckler of wisdom or pride
To turn the poisoned pointed dart aside;
The lip may curl with a careless smile,
But the heart drips blood—drips blood the while.

Ah, me! what hearts have been broken,
What rivers of blood have been stirred,
By a word in malice spoken,
By only a bitter word.

A kindly word and a tender tone—
To only God is our virtues known!
They can lift from the dust the abject head,
They can turn a foe to a friend instead;
The heart close barred with passion and pride
Will fling at their knock its portal wide,
And the hate that blights and the scorn that sears
Will melt in the fountain of childlike tears.
What ice-bound griefs have been broken,
What rivers of love have been stirred,
By a word in kindness spoken,
By only a gentle word.

A FLAG OF TRUCE.

It Secures a Solid Peace and a Life-Long Union.

"Alfred, I do wish you and Laura could be friends. You are both so dear to me."

Miss Southwell's voice was a little tremulous. She was over sixty-five, a slim, fragile-looking woman. Her face reminded you of a white rose that has lost its early freshness, but has a delicate loveliness lingering about it still. True, its lines indicated more sweetness than strength of character, but the expression was so good, so pure, you felt instinctively she was one to be loved and trusted.

In the fair-complexioned, handsome face of the young man beside her there was not one tell-tale line of weakness. The hazel eyes looked down affectionately into his aunt's, but his voice, though good-humored, kept its decided ring as he replied:

"But, dear Aunt Letty, what am I to do! There's no getting along with Laura unless you give up to her in everything, and I'm not disposed to make myself a slave to the little lady."

"I fear we have petted and spoiled her among us——" Aunt Letty broke off with a sigh.

"Yes; that's just the trouble, aunty. You are so sweet-tempered you can't bear to find fault with anybody, and Uncle Arthur is just like you. Between you both you've made a perfect little despot of Laura. It's too bad, for the girl is naturally a frank, generous, warm-hearted creature. But come, aunty, you ought to box my ears for an impertinent young puppy, as I am. I was always a great hand to preach, you know."

"Yes; but I'm afraid there's a great deal of truth in what you've said, Alfred," in an anxious tone. "You won't let the foolish child drive you away?"

Alfred gave a good-humored laugh. "Aunty, do you think I take it so much to heart as that? No, no; Laura's little airs and tempers are rather amusing than otherwise. Only I hate to see her growing up into an unamiable woman——"

A sharp tap at the door interrupted him. Without waiting for an answer, his cousin pushed it open and marched in.

You could scarcely find a more beautiful little face than Laura's, and perhaps it looked all the prettier for the flush of anger that crimsoned it just then. She threw up her head with the air of a spoiled princess as she said, fixing her eyes on her cousin:

"As the door happened to be ajar, sir, I had the pleasure of hearing your last sentence. I see you've added backbiting to your other amiable qualities, but I think you might be better employed than in trying to set aunty against me, for I'm the same as an own child to her, I'm sure."

Alfred's cheek reddened, but he said, facing her with an unmoved front: "You were perfectly welcome to hear every word. As for your insulting remark about me, I think you owe me an apology, though I've not the slightest expectation of receiving one."

The young gentleman marched wrathfully out, while Laura looked after him with a mixture of resentment and triumph.

"I've actually made his Highness angry. Well, that's something anyway. It's so provoking, the cool, smiling way in which he'll sit and look at me when he's worked me up into a perfect rage."

"Laura!" said her aunt, with unwonted sharpness, "how can you treat your cousin so? I'm afraid what he says is too true, that we've spoiled you among us. And he did justice to your good qualities, I'm sure. He thinks you are frank and generous and warm-hearted."

Something softer than anger sparkled in Laura's saucy black eyes for a moment; but forcing back the tell-tale drops, she flung her arms around Miss Southwell's neck. "You sweetest aunty, I'm so thankful you and dear uncle brought me up instead of a tyrant like Mr. Alfred Hillier. Don't call him my cousin; he's three degrees removed, I'm sure, and I won't own him for a relation. But come, now, cheer up, and get dressed as quick as you can, or you won't be ready to receive the company."

"You would better run and dress yourself, little lady; it's more your company than mine."

"Dress? Yes, I'll try and look my prettiest," thought Laura, as she skipped away, "and I'll flirt a little with Mr. Palmer, too. That Alfred despises him so I'll do it just to provoke him."

But in spite of this careless talk, the girl could not keep her heart from warming a little toward her cousin, as she thought of his expressions of praise.

"Generous, frank, warm-hearted!" she said, half aloud. "Well, I'm glad he does me that justice. But I don't care; I hate him. He's done nothing but contradict and cross me ever since he came into this house."

Laura's room was next to Alfred's, and after her toilette was completed she could not help putting out her head to see if she could catch a glimpse of her enemy. Yes, he was gazing out too, and their eyes met. She vanished, but soon re-appeared, flourishing a stick on which she had tied a piece of black silk.

"Mr. Hillier!" she cried out.

"Miss Laura!" responded the young gentleman, with a smile of provoking coolness.

"Do you see this black flag?" waving it proudly. "This means 'war to the knife' from this hour between you and me."

"As you please," said Alfred, serenely. "But let us keep up at least the semblance of civilized warfare before others."

"Very good," said Laura, retiring with a final wave, while Alfred laughed quietly to himself.

"You are a child, and no mistake," he thought, contemplating his cousin patronizingly from his lofty summit of twenty-three years. "It would be comical enough if the black flag should be exchanged for a white one before I leave, young lady."

Early the next morning Laura stood in the garden waiting for her aunt. The horse was harnessed, waiting to take them to the village where Miss Southwell did all her marketing. She had been trying for some weeks to indoctrinate Laura into its mysteries, and the young lady proved herself an apt scholar.

The old-fashioned, pleasant house which Miss Southwell and her brother had occupied now some thirty years stood on a hill in the outskirts of the village. The grounds were tastefully laid out, the mountain air delicious and invigorating.

There could not be a more glorious morning than this, yet the expression of trouble on Laura's pretty face showed that her mood was not in harmony with the day.

"So provoking," she muttered, "that I should have lost my temper that way! But it was bad enough to have my ball croqueted 'way to the ends of the earth without his looking so pleased over it.

"Sophie Higley, too, 'crowing over' Mr. Palmer and me as she did! It was real fiendlylike. And to think of her whispering to Mary Shaw that I was 'a little stinging cockatrice!' I can never get over that!

"But, oh dear! I did say some dreadfully spiteful things. Well, I don't care; Alfred and Sophie were really aggravating, and Mr. Palmer thought so too. How polite he is, always making you feel so pleased with yourself! I wish he wasn't such a fool."

At this moment Maria, one of their servants, came running down the piazza steps. She looked so freightened that Laura's heart leaped to her mouth.

"Oh, Miss Laura, your aunt's hurt her ankle bad, and I'm 'most afraid it's broke. She was half-way down the stairs, when she fell, and her whole weight come on it."

But Laura was in the house by this time. She found her aunt in her room, a front chamber, opposite the stairs down which she had fallen.

Miss Southwell lay on the lounge, looking very pale, but composed, and said, in a soothing tone to Laura, "Don't be frightened, child; my ankle's not broken, only badly sprained. Katy's drawing me some hot water to shower it with. And now, dear, as your uncle is away, I feel that you and Alfred must be my main dependance."

"You and Alfred." It seemed an odd conjunction. But Laura only murmured, as she laid her cheek against Miss Southwell's. "What can we do for you, dearest aunty?"

Aunt Letty kissed the girl affectionately. "Our friends from New York will be here this afternoon, as you know, and I am sure they will spend at least a week with us. Judging from past experience, I fear I shall be laid up some time with this sprain. Now, Laura, you have proved yourself such a capable little housekeeper on one or two occasions that I feel I can trust you even with company in the house. And then our girls are so capable"—with a smile at Katy, who came in just then with the hot water.

"Bless you, ma'am, we'll do beautiful," said Katy, "though it's sorry I am to see you laid up."

"Well, Laura, I want you to go to market first thing. Your cousin will drive you over, I know. Don't be afraid to call upon him for anything. I've always found him kind and obliging. And then, he has such good judgment. Here is the list of things I want you to order."

"Whatever misgivings Laura felt, she did not make them known. "I'll do just what you tell me, aunty," she said, with unwonted docility. "Now please attend to that poor ankle right away. Sha'n't we stop at the doctor's and ask him to come round?"

"No, no; I'm an old hand at sprains, and can treat it better myself."

"Well, don't worry, precious aunty, for we'll all do our very best," said Laura.

But as she descended the stairs she felt half afraid, half rebellious. "I hate to ask him," she murmured to herself. "How he did treat me last night, and this morning, too! Why, he would scarcely look at me."

Yet in her heart there was a secret longing to be friends with her cousin. She was too proud to apologize, but an idea struck her just then. Her face broke into a smile as, taking out her handkerchief, she tied it to the handle of her parasol.

"My flag of truce," she said, giving it a flourish. "I shall ask for a suspension of hostilities 'till uncle gets back."

Hastening her steps, she tripped off in the direction of the arbor where her cousin was wont to smoke his morning cigar.

Yes, there he was, enjoying that masculine luxury and the newspaper together. Laura slackened her gait now, as she approached, waving her "white flag" solemnly and slowly.

Alfred looked up, and his face relaxed into a smile. "Well?" he asked, glancing humorously at the handkerchief.

"It's a flag of truce," said Laura solemnly. "I've come to request of my honorable enemy a suspension of hostilities for twenty-four hours."

"Agreed," said Alfred, rising, and speaking with such cordial good humor that Laura felt her heart immensely lightened. "But may I ask the reason for this move on my fair enemy's part?"

"O, it's a shame to joke when poor aunty's hurt herself so!" said Laura, with a sudden change of tone. "She's sprained her ankle badly, just when she's expecting company, too. Uncle won't be back till to-morrow, and she feels she must depend upon you and me, and so I thought we might——"

"Clasp hands temporarily over the bloody chasm," broke in Alfred. "Well, I agree to it heartily, and you may command my services at any time. I am sorry Aunt Letty has hurt herself, and if you'll excuse me for five minutes, I'll run up and see her."

"Well, you are a real good-natured boy, after all," thought Laura, as he bounded away.

"And now I understand we are going to market?" said Alfred, gayly, as he returned to her side.

"Yes, I believe that's the first thing on the programme," returned his cousin.

They started off together, Laura very happy, though a little embarrassed. It seemed strange to be on such pleasant terms with her enemy. But this feeling soon wore away. The ride in the mountain air was delightful, and ere long she found herself talking with Alfred as she had never talked before. He was an uncommonly intelligent young fellow and a good student, but not in the least absent-minded. Nothing seemed to escape his observation, and with it all he was so full of fun and boyish spirits. Laura found him a most agreeable companion, and he on his part saw her in a new light, and began to feel decidedly cousinly and affectionate. Always bright and artless, she was this morning really amiable. Only once did a little sarcastic remark escape her, whereupon Alfred, without a word, pointed smilingly to the handkerchief still waving from the parasol that lay across her lap.

A bright color rose in Laura's cheeks, but she looked up sweetly and frankly into his face. "Please forgive me," she said; "I had no business to fire that shot, but I did it from force of habit."

She turned away her head immediately, but Alfred's keen eyes noticed the slight quiver of her lip, and that she had to wink hard to keep the tears back. He changed the conversation at once, and they were soon chatting gayly again.

"Cousin Alfred," broke out Laura, suddenly—"I beg pardon, Mr. Hillier," correcting herself with a laugh.

"Suppose we drop these formalities while we are under a flag of truce," said the young man, pleasantly. "What is it you want of Cousin Alfred, Laura?"

"Why, there's Sophie Higley and that Mr. Palmer," rejoined Laura. "They'll want to stop and speak to us; but don't do it, if you can help it."

A smile of amusement curled Alfred's lip in spite of himself. "How do they come to be driving out together?"

"Oh, he's her cousin, and staying there, you know. Dear me! Sophie is waving her hand to you to stop, you'll have to do it, Alfred."

Alfred reined up the pony sharply, and bowed with his usual politeness to the young lady, whose eyes were fixed with envious scrutiny upon him and his companion. Mr. Palmer looked equally discomposed, but Sophie was the first to find her tongue.

"So the two enemies seem to be reconciled," she said, with a laugh. "How are you both this morning?"

"We are enjoying our usual health, thank you," said Alfred.

"Miss Laura looks—aw—like a rose, I'm sure," simpered her companion.

"Thank you, Mr. Palmer," said Laura; "I always enjoy your comparisons—they are so original."

Mr. Palmer looked immensely flattered. Alfred (inconsistent mortal!) felt not the slightest inclination to rebuke his cousin.

"Well, we must bid you good-morning, as our business is pressing," he said, gathering up the reins.

"But, Laura, dear Laura!" cried Miss Higley, as they were moving off; "do let me speak one word to you!"

"Well?" said Laura, coldly, for the expression, "stinging little cockatrice," was still rankling in her soul.

"My cousin George is coming in from New Jersey this afternoon. He can only spend one night with us, and if you like I will bring him in this evening."

"We shall be very happy to see him," said Laura, more graciously, for George was a favorite of hers. "Then we shall expect you this evening, and Mr. Palmer also, if he feels inclined to call upon us."

"When do I feel otherwise?" asked Mr. Palmer, sentimentally; "at least so far as you are concerned."

"Drive on, Alfred, for pity's sake, or I shall scream!" whispered Laura.

Alfred, with a decided though perfectly amiable "good morning," started the pony again, and they went off at a brisk trot toward the village.

That evening about a dozen young people were gathered in Miss Southwell's pleasant parlors.

The Ransoms, who were old family friends, had arrived that afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Ransom were upstairs talking with Miss Southwell, while the younger members of the family formed part of the merry group below.

Miss Higley had arrived early with her two cousins, and shortly after two or three other friends dropped in, for Miss Southwell's house was very popular with the young people.

Laura, sorry as she felt for her aunt, had found this a very happy day. She was proving herself indeed "a capable little housekeeper." Then Alfred had been so kind, so good, so efficient. He was always on hand to assist her, and to help entertain the company, which none could do better than he.

The evening passed pleasantly away, while they played games, sang and danced by turns.

Miss Higley, who admired Alfred intensely, and who had allowed herself, in spite of the difference in their ages, to entertain hopes in that direction, marked with displeasure how friendly he and his cousin had become. Toward the close of the evening they danced together, and her eyes followed them malignantly as, the dance over, they retreated to a corner of the room and seemed absorbed in conversation.

"They are polite to desert their company that way!" she said with a sneer to her cousin, George Lane.

"Why, they've been doing their best to entertain us all the evening, and 'the company' seems happy enough, I'm sure," said good-natured George, glancing around him. "'Every Jack has his Jill,' and nobody looks neglected. Why shouldn't they have a little friendly chat together?"

Meantime Laura is saying with a sigh, "We have a telegram from uncle—he will be home to-night."

"Are you sorry?" asks Alfred, with a kindly twinkle in his eyes.

"Not sorry to see uncle, but—well, on the whole, I think I prefer peace to war, and should be really sorry to have hostilities commence again," replies Laura, glancing up with a roguish but wistful look.

"Well, is it necessary to resume the campaign?" says her cousin, kindly. "I find the present atmosphere very refreshing myself. Suppose we swear a perpetual peace?"

Laura tries to laugh, but the bright eyes are full of tears, and her voice trembles as she answers: "Cousin Alfred, you are so kind; you give me courage to do what I've longed to do all day—apologize for my badness, and promise to 'try and be good' from this time."

His fair enemy has surrendered at last, unconditionally; but if Alfred feels any masculine triumph, he does not betray it by word or look.

"We'll both start again," he says, heartily taking the little hand in his large grasp for a moment. "For myself, I feel I've been a dictatorial, overbearing sort of a fellow, and I want to ask your pardon in my turn. And now may I ask as a great favor that you'll give me that blessed little flag of truce? I want it for a memento of this auspicious day."

"I'll give you half of it with pleasure," says Laura, with a musical little laugh. "But I'd like to have half myself to remind me always to 'keep the peace.'"

Miss Higley, who, while pretending to talk to her cousins, had been watching the couple furtively, now said, in a sharp tone: "Well, they really seem almost 'spoony;' and to think how they've been sparring ever since he came! George, do you think you see any signs of—well, you know what I mean—over there?"

"Well," said George, his shrewd face breaking into a kindly smile, "I'm not a great judge of such matters, and I don't like to jump at conclusions, but judging from appearances, I should say there were signs not only of solid peace, but of a lifelong union between the two belligerents."

SLOBBERING.

Various Acid Weeds Responsible for the Trouble.

The causes of slobbering of horses that are grazed on the aftermath is the presence of acid weeds in the herbage. Lobelia, St. John's wort and rag-weed often form the larger part of the herbage, and this can scarcely be avoided so long as the second crop of clover is cut for seed from fields infested with these weeds. Lobelia may soon be discovered by its pale blue, small, tubular or funnel-shaped flowers and its oval seed pods. It grows about nine to twelve inches high, and is easily missed in a meadow unless one stoops low to seek for it, when it will be too often found abundantly. If one tastes it he will readily understand why it will produce the effect complained of. It has a strong, acrid flavor like that of tobacco, and may quite often be found in second crop hay. St. John's wort is recognized by its five-petaled yellow flowers, but most easily by its three celled pods, which have three divergent, long, slender styles attached to the top of the pod. These are quite apparent in the flower, being the three styled pistil with the three stamens. The petals have quite a number of purple dots upon them. Ragweed is too well known to need description; it has a strong, bitter, aromatic taste, which is not so bad as that of the preceding weeds, but it will cause some horses to slobber. Horses will refuse to touch these plants if they can avoid it, but when they are abundant they can not help eating some of them. To stop the slobbering give a handful or two of dry corn meal or wheat middlings. The loss of saliva is a serious matter, and greatly weakens the animal.—Colman's Rural World.

THE WONDER

is becoming universal as to how such an immense sale could be created in Lowell for HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. But, my friend, if you could stand behind our counter a week and hear what those say who are using it, the reason would appear as clear as the noon-day sun. The real curative power of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA demonstrates itself in every case where our directions are faithfully regarded. We would that we might get before the people a fractional part of the confidence that is expressed to us every day in this medicine by those who have carefully noted (without prejudice) its effects upon the blood and through that upon the whole system, stimulating all the functions of the body to perform the duties nature requires of them. Try a bottle and satisfy yourself.

Cold Hands and Feet.

LOWELL, Feb. 3, 1879.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—About one year ago my daughter commenced taking your Sarsaparilla. At that time she had very little appetite; could take no long walks, and her face was badly broken out with humor. She was low-spirited; troubled with cold hands and feet; her blood seemed to be poor, and she was in a condition which caused us great anxiety. After taking one bottle of your Sarsaparilla she began to improve; and she now has a good appetite and can take much longer walks. Her humor is nothing compared with what it was one year ago. She is in better spirits, is not troubled with cold hands and feet as previously. And I attribute this improvement in her condition largely to your Sarsaparilla. She has taken six bottles, and intends to continue its use. I was inclined to oppose the trial of it at first. I now have great faith in it as a blood purifier. Very truly yours,

A. L. HINCKLEY,

Two girls, aged seven and nine years respectively, have left arms that are about nine inches longer than their right arms. A Famous Club.

It is a club of world-wide fame—the Travelers'. Even eligible candidates have sometimes been on the proposal book for ten years. The Marquis of Londonderry originated it immediately after the peace of 1814, "as a resort for gentlemen who had resided or traveled abroad, as well as with a view to the accommodation of foreigners," who, properly indorsed, are made honorary members during their stay in London. No person is eligible who has not traveled out of the British islands to a distance of at least five hundred miles from London in a direct line." Gambling is not permitted. All games of hazard are excluded. Cards are not allowed before dinner, and the highest stake is a guinea at whist. Mr. Timbs says Prince Talleyrand, during his residence in London, was a frequenter of the whist tables, and he thinks it was here that he made his felicitious rejoinder in regard to the marriage of an elderly lady of rank with her servant: "However could a lady of her birth make such a match?" "It was late in the game," responded Talleyrand; "and we don't reckon honors."—Art Journal.

New Colonial Competition.

There is to be a new competition in the great colonial scramble. The Swiss are no longer content to stay behind their mountains, or if they emigrate to leave the Federal flag behind them. An influential committee has been formed, including prominent members of all political parties, to bring the advantages of colonization before the public, and to institute inquiries as to available territories. A large sum of money has been subscribed, but in any case it will be some years before any actual start can be made, and by then the leavings of Germany will hardly be very eligible. There can be no doubt however, that the Swiss will make exceptionally good colonists.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Very, Very Little Things!

But very important—your blood corpuscles. They are so small that it takes over 3,000 of them in a line to make an inch. The bright red color comes from the iron in them. When there is not enough iron the blood is thin and watery and impure. Purity and vigor go together. Brown's Iron Bitters is the only safe iron tonic ever made. It enriches the blood, builds up the system, gives health, strength, and enjoyment of life.

THE HERALD FOR 1886.

We herewith submit to the public our terms for the coming year. In making our annual announcement we take occasion to inform our numerous patrons that the HERALD has passed through the business stringency of the last twelve months as successfully as we could have hoped, and is fully prepared to take advantage of the rising tide in business affairs. We enter the campaign of 1886 better equipped than ever to give our patrons a first class local newspaper at a reasonable rate. Recognizing the tendency of the times towards lower prices, we have decided to adopt a club system in lieu of premiums. Subscriptions for any newspaper or magazine published will be taken at reduced rates, but our regular special club list will be short and sweet.—Nearly every subscriber to the HERALD also takes the Detroit Free Press, the Detroit Tribune or the Michigan Farmer. We shall furnish these papers clubbed with the HERALD at the following rates:

Herald and Tribune	$2.00
Herald and Free Press	2.00
Herald and Mich. Farmer	2.00
Herald and any two	3.00
Herald and all three	4.00

Persons who wish the Household supplement in connection with the Farmer will pay twenty-five cents extra.

We are gratified to state that the HERALD list has been increased considerably during the past six months, and we shall endeavor to add five hundred new names between this date and the first day of next March. The present patrons of the HERALD will continue their patronage and it is gathering new friends every day.—Our subscription list is like an old fashioned stage coach—there is always room for one more.

THE NOVEMBER CENTURY.

In the initial number of the new Century year, beginning the Thirty-first Volume of the magazine, special stress is laid on the fiction which includes three short stories and parts of two serials. Of the former, "A Cloud on the Mountain," by Mrs. Mary Halleck Foote, is a stirring romance of Idaho ranch life; a full-page drawing by the author to illustrate the story is the frontispiece of the number and is engraved by Mr. T. Cole, who is now working in Italy for The Century; "A Story of Seven Devils" is one of Mr. Stockton's characteristic tales of humor and ingenuity; and "The Mystery of Wilhelm Rutter" by the late Helen Jackson (H. H.), is a tragic romance, the scene of which is laid among the Pennsylvania Dutch. Mr. James's "Bostonians" is continued. The new serial is Mrs. Foote's mining story, "John Bodewin's Testimony," the opening chapters of which give promise of a novel surpassing in interest the same writer's romance of "The Led-Horse Claim."

The unusually handsome November Magazine of American History is as entertaining as it is valuable and informing. It would be difficult to point out the part of it that would entice and interest the larger audience. It is all good from the first to the last. "The Wadsworth House at Geneseo," by Frederic G. Mather, under the general title of "Historic Homes," is superbly illustrated, the hand of George Gibson being traced in the full-page pictures of the mansion and its interiors. The portraits are also excellent. It will surprise the public to read of "Witchcraft in Illinois," but the paper of John H. Gunn speaks for itself. "The Burning of Washington in 1814," by Hon. Horatio King, is a graphic account of an event never before so clearly and forcibly presented. This publication seems destined to eclipse its contemporaries in many directions. Subscription price, $5.00 a year in advance. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK for November is a genuine Thanksgiving number, calculated to cause gratitude in the hearts of all its patrons. The steel engraved frontispiece of "Without a Care," is a capital study of child life—three little girls cuddling under an umbrella, each with a diminutive pussy in her arms. Mrs. Mary Bradley has a charming poem in this issue "At the Lock," which is illustrated by two handsome full-page process cuts. "The Yoke of Honor" ends satisfactorily this month, while Max Vender Weyde continues his interesting reports of Phillipa's doings in the article on "The Ceramic Club." This series that tells about women helping themselves in a pecuniary way has obtained great and well-merited popularity. We had thought before that Godey's was excellent, but this month she has truly excelled herself.

LETTER FROM LAKE SUPERIOR.

DEAR HERALD:—How pleased we are to receive your weekly visits! It seems indeed like the coming of a friend. Ever welcome visitor! But I would not have you think that we feel out of the world up here. Indeed we could not do so if we would; for we find people crowded in here so closely together that we scarcely have building room. We do not find such roomy, airy lawns around houses as you have in Tecumseh. We dwell close together, so close that the insurance man lightens our purses to the tune of 3, 4 and 5 per cent. per annum for insuring us against fire. Of course, to talk of Lake Superior seems like starting for the end of the earth, the very North Pole, when one is down in sunny Southern Michigan. And I must confess that when one is here and looks up to the heavens from these rugged hill-sides it seems that the North Star has been making rapid strides toward the zenith. But we are really a long way from the much sought after North Pole yet. And after a short residence here we forgot how far north we are. The sun shines brightly, the people are bright and cheery. "Uncle Sam" visits us just as aforetime, bringing cheering messages from our friends, and the news papers with their rich treasure. We find people occupied as in other parts of the world, eating, sleeping, toiling, marrying; dancing, singing, drinking, riding on roller skates and bycicles, etc., etc. So we soon come to feel up here that we are still a part of the great busy world, and our lives flow on as peacefully as before.

But I would have you understand that it is something of a journey up here. It is as follows: Lake St. Clair 25 miles long, St. Clair river 48 miles, Lake Huron 250 miles, St. Mary's river 62 miles, Sault Ste Marie to Hancock about 250 miles, making a voyage of at least 625 miles on water from Detroit. To go from here to Detroit by rail, the shortest route would require a journey of 450 miles. So you see we are some distance from Tecumseh, even by rail. But it is a splendid journey by water when the weather is fine. And in the summer there is not much risk. It is a journey which one can not well afford to miss.

I need not speak particularly of our departure from Tecumseh, only to say that many cares crowded into the last moments of our stay there, so that we were hustled off rather uncermoniously at the last. We would fain have had leisure for a more decorous farewell. But with all our hurry we felt that we were leaving behind us many dear friends, tried and true. We feel indeed that wherever we may go we shall never find warmer, truer friends than we have in Tecumseh. That last generous remembrance, that donation of forty-five dollars cash from the Masonic Lodge and from kind friends, when it become known that we must make the long move, will never be forgotten. And we shall not cease to implore heaven's richest blessings to rest upon the donors, and upon others who so kindly have helped us at other times.

Nothing of importance occured on our way to Detroit except that we rather frightened one of the railroad men who exclaimed, as our numerous family of little girls stepped from the cars, "Have any of them got away?" At Detroit we found the splendid steamer "Idaho" waiting for us, as I had written the agent of our coming. She is commanded by Capt Clark, a careful seaman and a genial christian gentleman. Being out of season passengers were few, giving us choice of staterooms. It was about 8 P. M. when we left Detroit. We saw but little until the next morning which found us well out on Lake Huron and almost out of sight of land. We gathered at breakfast. My appetite was all right, but some members of our party looked paler than usual. They did not eat much, and some even got up hastily, put their handkerchiefs to their mouths and rushed to our staterooms as if dreading a fit of coughing or something worse. About noon we were out of sight of land entirely, crossing the mouth of Saginaw Bay. And some of our party did not seem to care for dinner. Let me say that the mouth of Saginaw Bay is not a good place to dive. There is always swell enough on the lake at that point to make inexperienced voyagers lose their appetite. In storms that portion of Lake Huron is especially dreaded by lake men. As I sat and looked out over that seemingly boundless body of water with the waves splashing against the steamer I could scarcely realize that I was in the interior of our wonderful continent. It seemed that I was out in the ocean. What a wonderful system our great lakes constitute! I read in my guide book, "1200 miles from Buffalo to Duluth," a distance great enough for a respectable ocean voyage. O, the wondrous powers of nature that built the walks of these inland seas and made a highway for the commerce of the great and growing North West!

The second morning found us threading our way up the beautiful St. Mary's River. This can only be passed by daylight. I thought while on Lake Huron that there could not be much commerce on the lakes; but here I changed my mind. We passed steamer after steamer bound east. The channel is very narrow so that we see them all. This river is the most beautiful part of the voyage. Its shores remind a New Englander of his native hills. We reached Sault Ste Marie about noon. We were especially interested in viewing the rapids and passing the locks there. The lock has a rise of 18 feet. It is 600 feet long, large enough to hold four large steamers at once, two passing each way. It is the only lock of its kind in the world. All others admit the water from the upper gates; this "boils it up" all over the bottom. At the bottom are three large mains running its full length, built in solid masonry with apertures at intervals. The water is admitted into these mains and rushes up from the apertures like great boiling springs, and only lifts the vessels instead or driving them against the lower gates. It is a great improvement on the old method. Once past the lock and the rapids we steamed out on Lake Superior, that great inland sea of fresh water 460 miles long and over 900 feet deep. The day was clear, calm and beautiful. But about dark a thunder storm came on. It was not remarkable. It seemed to die away. We retired all peaceful and serene, but were aroused in the night by a fearful gale, the worst I have ever experienced at sea. The wind shrieked, the waves roared and the steamer was tossed up and down. I could tell by the sound of the engine that we were holding on our way. So I was calm and collected. The children never waked up. We were amidships where the least effect is felt. Mrs. Hudson was somewhat alarmed and asked me if I supposed we should ever reach land. I told her I had no fears as long as our steamer held on her way. After over two hours of tossing the waves ceased to dash, the whistle blew and I found that we were at Marquette. We went to sleep again and awoke still in Marquette. The gale was still raging outside and we lay there all day Saturday. We felt disappointed, but our delay was at the steamboat Co's expense. It snowed considerably while we lay at Marquette. Monday morning when we waked up we were nearing the entry to Portage Lake. We threaded our way up the narrow channel and came in sight of Hancock and Houghton about 10 A. M. What a rough looking place Hancock is! The houses are stuck all around over the hill-side. What a contrast with southern Michigan! But we must make the best of it. We found a warm welcome and soon forget the rough appearance of the place. We are now comfortably settled down and into our work.

Of the place and the mines I shall write another time. Truly Yours,

GEO. W. HUDSON.

James Lowry's organ donation passed off very smoothly last Monday. To accommodate all who might come he engaged the Armory Hall, and soon after seven o'clock a crowd of ticket holders had assembled to witness the fun. A committee of five was appointed to superintend the drawing, composed of Thos. Kyle, Tom Elliott, Wm. Ross, Ed. Prichard, and A. W. Slayton. Raynor Sutfin was chosen to draw the tickets. It was decided to draw out one hundred tickets and the next ticket should be counted as the lucky number. The hundred and first ticket was number 958, which was held by J. S. Strong, and so he took the prize. The affair passed off very pleasantly and harmoniously, and those who "got left" now congratulate Mr. Strong upon his good fortune.

The Adrian Times, of Sept. 26th, says: The most wonderful bit of mechanism on the grounds is the Golden Temple of art and music, the handiwork of Prof. Clarence E. Charles, of this city. The structure is unique in form and beautiful in finish. There are 184 connected pieces in the musical apparatus, all of which can be struck at once, but that would produce discord and never occurs in playing. The music consists of reeds, bells, bars, cymbals, etc., and is full of harmony and sweetness. There are ten stages, on which automatic figures of men, women, animals, cars, a stage coach of the regular tally-ho style, a steamboat, etc., appear. 'The Spanish students" appear in miniature, playing on their instruments, and dressed as the famous musicians of that name. The motions of the automata are life-like, the promenaders walking, the horses leaping, the wheels of the stage revolving. The stages are handsomely draped, the figures dressed in the best of material, and the effect of the whole is pleasing to the eye. It is a matter of surprise when one is told that the execution, to the minutest detail, as well as the conception and planning, is the work of Prof. Charles. The parts not made by him, as the bells and reeds, were planned by him and made to his designs. As he says, the temple is the work of a life time, but its building, in its present form, has taken about seven years. With a common jack knife the Professor has made some of the most delicate and difficult bits in the structure, as for instance the state seal of Michigan, which is true in every detail.

Weddings and wedding anniversaries are following each other thick and fast these days, and "there is more to follow." And this reminds us that the place to get your wedding invitations printed is at the HERALD job rooms. A fine line of wedding stationery just received.

Rumor says that the Salvation Army have rented the old Agricultural works building for a barracks. They will have plenty of room in this building, and when a buckle breaks in the harness or a cog slips in the machinery, Peter Welling will be handy by to make the necessary repairs.

The first of a series of club dances will be given by Pitcher & Billington, at Knapp's Hall, in Tipton, to-morrow evening, Nov. 6th. Music by Baker's quadrille band. Single ticket fifty cents. $2.00 for the entire series. Now let the Franklin young man see his "best girl" at once, and engage her for the full course.

The Gaylord, Kansas, Herald, of Oct. 29th, contains the intelligence that our whilom friend, Geo. T. Ketcham, has been appointed postmaster of that town. The appointment, says the Herald, gives universal satisfaction. G. T's old Tecumseh acquaintances will extend the compliments due the occasion and reach out their hands for a shake.

The Sunday School concert at the Universalist church last Sabbath evening was given to a full house, and the program seemed to be well received by the congregation. The exercises were somewhat unique in character, being enlivened by two fine selections rendered by Wheeler's brass quartette. The recitations and declamations were appropriate and well rendered. The rostrum was neatly trimmed with autumn leaves, fruits and flowers.

On Thursday morning, Oct. 29th, a few relatives and intimate friends gathered at the residence of George Keyser to witness the marriage of Dora, his daughter and only child, to Nathan A. Clark, of Cleveland, Ohio. The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. W. H. Babbitt. She was the recipient of many and costly presents. Dora was well known here where she has lived since childhood. She leaves behind many friends who wish her a bright and happy future.

The lecture by Rev. Miss A. J. Chapin last Thursday evening on "Women of the Early World" was an eloquent effort. If we except Mrs. Livermore, we doubt whether a more entertaining woman lecturer has ever appeared before a Tecumseh audience, but it is no disparagement to any woman to be rated as second to Mrs. Livermore. We regret that the audience was not larger, but those who availed themselves of the opportunity to hear her were amply repaid for their trouble.

Read our new club list and pass in your subscriptions.

The HERALD offers better club rates this fall than ever before.

Miss Mabel Hayden is visiting friends in Detroit and Milan.

Will Chiverall and Dike Wilkinson, of Jackson, were in town over Sunday.

Mrs. Frank Snedecor and brother, Willie Drewyour, of Dundee, visited Tecumseh on Saturday.

The examination of Frank Slater which was begun last Monday was adjourned until to-day.

We invite the attention of our readers to several new prospectuses which appear in this week's paper.

The latest piece of ornamental furniture for a corner in the parlor or drawing room is a step ladder covered with plush.

There will be preaching at the Friends' meeting house by the Free Methodist minister on next Sunday at 3 o'clock p. m.

Henry Potter, of Hancock, Mich., son of the Rev. T. G. Potter, of this place, arrived in town Tuesday. He will spend some time here.

We understand that Robert Burnett has accepted a position on the repertorial staff of a Toledo daily paper. He leaves for that city this week.

The firm of Haight and Garlinghouse has been dissolved. Mr. Haight continues in the business alone, and will devote his whole time to it in the future.

F. D. Brooks will be found in the future at Sparks' music store where he is devoting his time to painting pictures exclusively, having gone out of the photographing business.

Loren VanAntwerp went to Addison Tuesday, taking his dog and gun along, for a respite of two or three days gunning for quail. We hope he may return sufficiently well laden to be able to divide with his friends.

When you are in Toledo stop at the Burnett House. Reduced rates, coupled with first class accommodations, are drawing a large and increasing patronage. Try the Burnett once and you will certainly stop there the next time.

C. S. Fitzsimmons, of Lansing is spending a few days in Tecumseh. It is a long time since he has visited us and he is kept busy shaking hands. He is now running a fine farm north of Lansing near the college and seems to be enjoying life.

During a brief business trip to Toledo last week we called on our whilom Tecumseh resident George Smith, who is now the manager of the Ohio & Michigan Paper Co. Trade is picking up in his line and he seemed satisfied with the present outlook.

The Tecumseh Lumber Co. gave up Temple's Planing Mill Nov. 1st, their lease having expired. They will hereafter confine their entire attention to the lumber business, and will carry a large stock of all kinds of lumber. J. H. Smith will continue as manager, who is just the man for the place.

Smith & Ayres will give a social party at the Springville Rink on Friday evening, Nov. 13th. First class music will be in attendance. Skating until nine o'clock. Bill only $1,50. About two years ago the same persons gave the most successful dancing party ever witnessed in Springville, and they propose that the coming party shall eclipse their former effort.

Manager Cash has secured a fine attraction for the rink on next Monday night. The four Powers Bros., acrobats and gymnasts, will give an exhibition of their skill, in the tumbling and fancy skating line that evening, and as they are well known to the public as first class artists, they will doubtless be greeted with a full house. Admission 25 cts. Skates free.

The average Tecumseh smally bo was in his glory last week when Shedman's canine paradox arrived in town, and when not engaged in school duties was hovering around the dogs and expatiating on the merits of each. Mr. Shedman gives a good performance with his four legged actors, which show careful training on his part. Middleton's marionetts proved to be a number of figures dressed up and made to act on the "Punch and Judy" order and was a very amusing and interesting part of the entertainment. The attendance was small at all three performances.

Ticket 958 captured James Lowry's organ.

All Soul's Sunday was observed last Sabbath at the Universalist church with appropriate services.

Beers' Post G. A. R. is fitting up the rooms over Sparks' music store, and will use them for Lodge rooms.

There will be a twenty-five cent dancing party at Sage & Cary's hall, Macon, on Friday evening, Nov. 13th. The best of music and a good time for all.

Edgar Ide has taken a position in the HERALD counting room, where he may be found during business hours to wait upon customers and make himself generally useful.

Thos. Adams, who had Frank Davidson officiate as auctioneer at his auction, says that Frank did bravely and that he is a chip of the old block. We felt satisfied that he would give satisfaction.

We stop the press to announce the thrilling intelligence, just received, that the Salvation Army will open a campaign in Tecumseh on Saturday next, the 7th inst., at 7 o'clock, P. M., by candle light. Full particulars in our next.

Dr. and Mrs. R. B. House left home yesterday for a flying trip west and south. They expect to visit Chicago, Louisville, Nashville, Chattanooga, Montgomery, Birmingham, and will be gone from home about six days.—May good luck attend them.

The letter of acceptance of the Rev. Mr. Adkins, who preached at the Baptist church a few Sundays ago, was read last Sunday at that church. He has accepted the call extended to him and will enter upon his duties about the first of December.

There will be missionary concert exercises, conducted by one of the bible classes of the Sunday school, in place of the usual preaching services, next Sunday night at the Presbyterian church. Hour of service, 7 o'clock.—All are invited. The pastor desires especially the attendance of all church members in the morning.

The HERALD receives regularly the reports of the East Buffalo cattle market from Stacy & Bement, commission dealers in live stock. Owing to the length of the reports we find it inexpedient to publish them. Shippers who are interested are invited to call at our office and examine these reports whenever they choose.

Stacy, of the Tecumseh HERALD, is making quite a feature of his weather reports from the surrounding towns, but does not increase the price of the paper to subscribers however. Of course, the reports may be a little incongruous at times, but Scove says on the whole and in the long run it will be a very interesting feature of the paper, and they can be depended upon, rain or shine.—Hudson Gazette.

Yesterday morning, at the hour of six, at Mrs. Webster's home in this village, Rev. Thos. E. Webb was united in marriage to Miss Eleanor Webster, the nuptial ceremony being pronounced by Rev. T. G. Potter. Miss Ella as she is familiarly known among her friends, will be sadly missed from the circle in which she has been a favorite for so many years.—She will be missed in the home, in society and in the church. Her modest and womanly demeanor, her faithfulness to church and friends seem to fit her peculiarly to fill the somewhat difficult role of a minister's wife. We trust she may be blessed with happiness in her new relation, as we know she will be faithful in performing all the duties incident thereto. The bridal couple departed on the early train yesterday morning for their home in Valentine, Ind. May prosperity and success attend them.

THE DETROIT TRIBUNE.

The first number of the Detroit Tribune appeared last Sunday under its new management. If the initial number is an earnest of what is to follow, the new paper will be a credit to Michigan journalism. We extend to the present owners our best wishes for their success. In their salutatory editorial they say;

No doubt very many of the readers of this morning's Tribune know the history of its beginnings and of its several and various transformations better than its new publishers know it. No doubt, also, they care as little about its repetition as its new publishers care about learning it—since the paper is to be printed for the benefit and advantage of people now on earth, and will make no attempt to pose as a relic of past greatness.

What remains to be said, therefore, is simply this: The publishers of The Tribune own it. They do not own an "option" on it, or a "contract to buy" it, or any other sort of juggling tomfoolery. They own the newspaper and all of its appurtenances and franchises, and they propose to continue its publication for the city's good and advantage, and for the state's, and for their own.

The Tribune will be as to its politics, republican: radically so as to the fundamental principles of free government, and independently so as between separated or individual elements of the party. It will heartily and aggressively support the sound principles and wise policies of national republicanism, but it will not support for any official position any candidate of any party whom it deems unworthy of the confidence of the people or unfit for official station. It will owe allegiance to no faction, and it will not be tied to personal ambition anywhere.

Our friend Bacon, of the Petersburg Journal, has been gorging himself with pumpkin pie for a week or so, a kindhearted farmer having left at his office a premium pumpkin weighing 126 pounds. Bacon eats a whole pie at each meal, and one more at bed time. He is waxing fat on this diet.—Adrian Press.

The number and miscellaneous character of the Halloween exercises by Young America Saturday evening, required official notice to be taken of them. A house in the Fourth ward was smeared with ink, gates were taken off, carriages driven off by hand, etc., etc. The marshall this morning made the following arrests, and the parties were arraigned this afternoon before Justice Payne: Dan Fulton, Charlie Boyd, Burt Judd, Andrew Knight, Willie Burch. The defendants were fined $5 each, and paying the fine and costs were released.—Adrian Record.

A Palmyra citizen from near Lenawee Junction a few days ago hitched up his team and drove to the city. Here he had the strange misfortune to swallow something that confused his mind, and mistaking the road he drove to Blissfield and hitched his horses, quite late in the evening. He woke up an acquaintance, and staying with him a short time, departed, but missed the locality of his team, and walked on and on, down through Deerfield and nearly to Petersburgh. Then he tacked, concluding that he must be wrong, and in due course of time arrived at the village of Riga. By this time he had recovered his bearings sufficiently to steer for Blissfield, which he reached about five o'clock in the morning, tolerably well "tuckered out," and locating his team at last, succeeded in getting home. He is resolved not to undertake another journey so far from home without a guide board on his head.—Adrian Record.

C. K. Spafford has loaned us a copy of a newspaper published at Tecumseh, dated September 3, 1839. It is a six column folio, and bears the somewhat pretentious name of "Village Record and Lenawee County Agricultural Intelligencer." A goodly portion of the advertisements were mortgage foreclosures, and the name of C. A. Stacy (Judge Stacy) appears as attorney in most of the cases. One thing which appears odd to us younger citizens, is a grain buyer's advertisement, in which he proclaims that he will pay the highest price for wheat in "New York funds." This sentence will probably not sound so queer to the older ones, who well remember the days of "wild cat" money—when a farmer took a load of wheat to market, sold it for the cash, and, perhaps, the next day his money would not be worth the paper it was printed upon. The name of the editor and publisher, or the subscription price of the paper, is not given.—Clinton Local.

Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Cowley, of Hudson, celebrated their china wedding last week. Several Tecumseh friends were present on the occasion. We gather these few items about the affair from the Post:

At the wedding in "china" last Monday evening, to wit: the twentieth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Cowley, the enjoyment of the occasion was only limited by the capacity of their domicil. To say there was a goodly company is drawing it mild. There was a house chock full of the goodliest kind of company from near and far. Relatives, friends and old time neighbors of the bride and groom of a score of years, met to commend them for what they had done to "multiply and replenish," and counsel a continuance of faithfulness to the end. From abroad we note the presence of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Blood, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Waldron, Mr. and Mrs. G. Griswold and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Russell and daughter, Mrs. Chas. Burridge, Mrs. Hialey, Mrs. M. E. Conklin and A. Bangs and wife, of Tecumseh, —— Kinney and wife, of Adrian, and Mr. and Mrs. P. Sutton, of Clayton. Mr. and Mrs. Blood who stood by the timid young couple at the marriage service twenty years ago, they having had a full day's hymenial experience, now met with this same couple and compared notes and recount the perils and disasters as well as the pleasures of their voyages over the "great sea" of matrimony.

BIRTHDAY PARTY.

A number of relatives and friends gathered at the home of R. W. Mills, Franklin, on Tuesday Nov. 3, to celebrate the seventy fourth birthday of his mother, Mrs. A. Mills. Children, grand children and great grand children, gathered about the aged mother to give expression to their love and esteem for her. After a few remarks by the pastor, appropriate singing, and prayer by the Rev. E. P. Pierce, of Clinton, a mammoth switch was brought in with which to whip grandma seventy four times. By common consent, however, caresses took the place of blows. The company then sat down to a sumptious repast, prepared by Mrs. R. W. Mills, and old and young gave themselves up to the enjoyment of the hour. There was not only a feast of good things for the inner physical man, but a "feast of reason and a flow of soul." Rev. E. Pierce, former pastor, made some very appropriate and feeling remarks. Two of Mrs. Mills' grand children, Miss Gray and Myrtie Mills sang and recited, very nicely, some pieces selected especially for "Grandma." Four children of Mrs. Mills were present; Mrs. Wm. Smith, Mrs. Mason Camburn, Miss Emma Mills and R. W. Mills. John Mills, younger son of R. W. Mills read the following:

TRIBUTE TO GRANDMA.

Kind relatives and friends, how gladly we greet you to day. What day in all the year can be looked for with greater joy and pleasure; than the birthdays of our parents and grand parents. The thought occurred to me that I too must do something to commemorate the event that has called us together, the seventy fourth birthday of our grandma.

Old age is the shore against which dashes an eternity.

The dear old mothers and grand mothers—God bless them—who will follow us through all our vocations of life. They live in our lives, and sorrow in our griefs. The high and holy title of mother, cannot fall too reverently from our lips; but, ah, how many times do we forget this.

In this family circle there are to-day four vacant chairs, three which have been vacated by the cold hand of death. One in answer to his country's call, to-day lies where southern breezes fan his lonely grave. Sorrow for the dead is the only sorrow from which we refuse to be separated. Christ said, "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted;" and when we glance at the silvered locks and trembling steps of our aged parents, we feel too forcibly the strength of the adage. She who has struggled and toiled for nearly four score years, and has striven amid the many trials and temptations of life, to live an exemplary Christian, and to imbue only true Christian principles upon those remaining to comfort her in her declining years. May she be spared many years to come, that her genial love and inspiring influence may be bestowed upon her grand children and great grand children, is my most fervent prayer.

TO OUR READERS.

We cannot too strongly urge upon our readers the necessity of subscribing for a family, weekly newspaper of the first class such; for instance, as The Independent, of New York. Were we obliged to select one publication for habitual and careful reading to the exclusion of all others, we should choose unhesitatingly The Independent. It is a newspaper, magazine, and review, all in one. It is a religious, a literary, an educational, a story, an art, a scientific, an agricultural, a financial, and a political paper combined. It has 32 folio pages and 22 departments. No matter what a person's religion, politics or profession may be, no matter what the age, sex, employment or condition may be, The Independent will prove a help, an instructor, an educator. Our readers can do no less than to send a postal for a free specimen copy, or for thirty cents the paper will be sent a month, enabling one to judge of its merits more critically. Its yearly subscription is $3.00, or two years for $5.00.

Address; The Independent, 251 Broadway, New York City.

Last Monday, forenoon about ten o'clock the fire bell sounded an alarm and in less than a minute the whole village was on the street. The report was that Supervisor Bresie's house in Brownville was on fire. The department responded promptly and the engine and hose carts were transported with all possible speed to the scene of the fire. Upon crossing the river at Heck's mill the fire was discovered to be in Mr. Gage's house. The inmates were cleaning house and by some accident a carpet caught fire, which raised the alarm. The flames were easily extinguished before the department got there, but the boys are entitled to credit just the same for the manner in which they hustled around.

The Tecumseh Library Association held their annual meeting last Tuesday evening, at which time the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year:

Secretary—Minnie E. Keeney.
Collector—Mrs. O. B. DeWolf.
Treasurer—A. W. Mills.
Directors—Mrs. Wm. Hayden, Mrs. S. W. Anderson, Minnie E. Keeney.

Tickets may be procured this year on the same terms as last year, viz: $1.00 per year for stockholders and $1.50 for non-stockholders. Fifty cents to the latter for three months. The association is in a flourishing condition and is making an arrangement for a public entertainment at an early day.

COST OF PRODUCING MEAT.

Researches Showing That It Depends Upon the Mode of Feeding and the Preparation of the Food.

When, with the aid of science, the farmer can so govern his operations as to regulate the cost of production, and adapt his pastures and crops to special objects, he will not only be enabled to convert his produce into the most salable commodities, but understand how to secure the greatest amount at the lowest cost. In order to determine the relative value of different feeding materials, Professor Brown, of the Ontario experimental farm, devoted nine years to careful experiments for that purpose, and his results show that while a greater and more rapid increase of flesh is secured from certain feeding materials, yet they are not always the cheapest. The heaviest weight per day was obtained by feeding sugar beet, assisted with hay and a mixture of grain, which gave 2.70 pounds at a cost of 12¼ cents per pound, while permanent pasture produced 2.05 pounds at a cost of only two cents per pound. No doubt the difference in cost was the labor of preparing the food, the pastures being ready for the stock, while the mixed diet was prepared. There was also a difference in the quality of the pasture. Permanent grass gave better results than pasture from which a crop of hay had been taken, as the hay pastures produced only 1.15 pounds, at a cost of five cents per pound.

Even when using hay its value depends upon its preparation and quality. Hay, roots and bran, without grain, gave a daily gain of 2.14 pounds, at a cost of nine cents per pound; but the most costly food, though apparently the cheapest, was uncut hay and roots, with bran and corn, which produced 1.76 pounds, at a cost of fourteen cents per pound, while cooked hay, roots and bran, with uncooked grain, gave 1.80 pounds, at a cost of only nine cents per pound. Thus it appears that cutting the hay and using gave a larger profit than the uncut hay, roots and corn, the difference being so great as to be easily noticable. Simply cutting the hay added to the profit and lessened the cost; for while the uncut hay and roots, with bran and corn, gave 1.76 pounds, at a cost of fourteen cents per pound, the same food, excepting that the hay was cut, gave a gain of 2.10 pounds, at a cost of a fraction over eleven cents a pound. Here we have more labor employed in order to cut the hay, but the daily gain was sufficiently large to more than compensate for the labor and lessen the cost of production. Although turnips and mangolds are considered cheap feeding materials, and gave large daily gains when used in connection with other foods, yet they did not lessen the cost to the extent expected, for when mangolds were fed with hay and a mixture of grain, although the daily gain was 2.38 pounds, yet the cost per pound was 10½ cents. Turnips fed in the same manner gave nearly equal results.

The concentrated foods gave good results on the gain, and in some cases were cheaper than was supposed, but much depended upon the manner in which they were fed. Corn, with hay, roots and bran, produced two pounds daily, at a cost of 9½ cents per pound. As this is almost the same food that gave 1.76 pounds, at fourteen cents per pound, it is owing to the difference in proportions that the cost varied. Oats, fed in the same manner as corn, gave 1.64 pounds, at a cost of ten cents per pound.

From the above it is deduced that profit does not depend upon the rapidity of grain in weight daily, but upon the cost per pound, and that the cost is regulated not only by the labor required and the value of the food, but upon the mode of feeding and the preparation of the food. It must be so varied as to attain the best results in the cheapest manner, and the kind of food does not affect the result so much as improperly mixing them or giving an excess of something not required, while omitting that which may be very important. The value of feeding materials should be studied by all farmers. The experiments mentioned above show that a farmer may have a valuable amount of feeding material that might be converted into beef, and yet such beef would be costly unless the materials were fed in such manner as to cause rapid increase at the least expense. The addition of a single material may alter the result, and even the character and quality of the stock are important factors in the matter.—Philadelphia Record.

CHANGE IN COMPLEXION.

The Important Part Hammocks Play in Beautifying Women.

Humbug permeates life, even in its politest circumstances. A hammock hung in the rear veranda of a suburban residence. One end was considerably higher than the other. The occupant of the graceful couch at the beginning of my visit was the eldest daughter of the family, a round, roseate creature, whom I had previously deemed rather too natural for unqualified admiration; but now she looked positively beautiful, as she lay picturesquely disposed, with her head lying on one bent arm at the higher end of the hammock, and her feet dangling barely visible over the side at the lower portion. Pretty soon her half sister took possession of the hammock, but in a reverse position, her head being below the level of her heels. Strange to say, she also appeared to better advantage than usual. The yellow bilious pallor commonly hurting her complexion was somewhat abated by a faint tinge of pink, and I marveled much. Then I asked wherein lay the magic of that hammock. "I don't wish to enchant you," was the reply, "and so will tell you all about it. You notice that the hammock is hung with one end up and the other down. That's not done for comfort, except such as arises in a girl from the consciousness that she is prettier than usual. My sister is fat and full-blooded. She lies here with her face elevated, so that the blood runs out of her cheeks, and for the time her complexion is about the right thing. I'm too bloodless in the visage you know. I pose in the hammock, t'other end to making the blood settle into my face instead of draining out of it—inducing mild vertigo, you understand—and thus produce a rosiness that I can't hope for when standing or sitting.—Albany Journal.

COD-FISHING.

How the Cod Saves Himself from Death by Taking Ballast.

That a fish should ever do anything so unfishlike as to take in ballast would strike many people as paradoxical. Yet those who have gone down to sea in ships and have learned in fin-bearers' lore testify to the reality of this phenomenon. The cod is the fish which lays himself open to this cruel charge, and it knows to actually gulp down stones, almost as large as a foot ball and more than one of them, too. Why it does so a reporter learned from a veteran cod-fisherman yesterday.

"Why, yes," said he, "of course cod-fish take in ballast. Why, I've found eight or ten stones inside the fish's maw after we've caught him. The cod takes in stone in order to keep himself at the bottom during a gale. When you are cod-fishing you can always tell if there is to be a gale, or whether a gale has just passed that way. Then you get in a regular quarry. A good gale of course carries the cod up to the surface, where he has a hard time of it. You see there is a sort of bladder which forms in his jaw and runs out sometimes as far as a foot or so. This bladder fills with air and floats the fish, and keeps him from going down. So in order to prevent that he picks out sound stones on the sea bottoms and swallows them. Sea elephants do the same thing, and often huge stones are found in their stomachs."

"How is the cod caught?" the reporter asked.

"They are caught on 'trollers.' There is a long line, a 'runner,' fishermen call it and at every fourteen or eighteen feet a short line five or six feet long is fastened. I used to have on my runners as many as three hundred hooks baited. The line would be baited on board ship, and the whole 'snood' would be coiled up into a tub tapering toward the bottom so as to give the line play. The coiling is very important, and you must take great care with it so as not to snarl the lines. For bait, dogfish, whitefish and such like in chunks bigger than your hand are hooked on. The boats put off with the tub in the bow, and when we'd get to a good spot the man in the bow passes the line all baited to the stern man, who throws it overboard as fast as it is paid out. It used to go out pretty fast sometimes when the tide was running strong, and many a fellow has got his fingers ripped open on the hooks. The whole line would then be anchored, and we'd wait until back water came, which would be in five or six hours, and then haul in.

"That used to be hard work. The fish would run small and large, and we would hook on skates and dogfish and whitefish and others besides the cod. Once when we were pulling up anchor we hauled in a big stone which weighed three hundred pounds, and was full of scallops and mussels and long and round clams.

"When we got the catch back to one smack we'd dress the fish and stow them away in fine ice. We used to work day and night sometimes, and once, off Cape Sable, I slept only nine hours out of five days and nights. A shipload which averaged sixty pounds to the fish used to be considered a good one. Sometimes the average would run as high as one hundred pounds. The cod runs all the way from fifteen to two and three hundred pounds in weight. I once caught one which weighed over three hundred pounds."—New Haven News.

A BEAUTIFUL LAKE.

Description of Crater Lake, One of the Wonders of Oregon.

There can scarcely be as great a natural wonder within civilization, and at the same time so little known, close at hand, as Crater Lake. Situated twenty-two miles west of north of Fort Klamath, in Klamath County, directly on the summit of the Cascade Mountains, and about ninety miles east of Medford, it is easily accessible, there being a good mountain road to the very top of the walls surrounding it, and fine camping grounds about half a mile distant. The lake itself is about six by eight miles in diameter, and ranges from east of north to west of south. The surface of the water is six thousand three hundred feet above sea level, and is completely surrounded by cliffs or walls from one thousand to nearly three thousand feet high, which are scantily covered with fir trees. To the southwest is a circular island, which our party named Wizard Island. It is six hundred feet high, and in the top is a circular hole, or extinct crater, four hundred and seventy-five feet in diameter, named by us the Witch's Caldron. The base of the island is covered with very heavy and hard rocks, over which scarcely a score of human feet have ever trod. Further are deep beds of ashes and cinders, giving evidence of the most intense heat in days gone by. Within the crater, as without, the surface is entirely covered with volcanic rocks, but here it forms one of the hottest places on a clear day in August that it has ever been my lot to witness. Ninety feet below the crater's rim not a breath of air can penetrate, while the sun beats down upon the rocky surface and reflects its rays from ten thousand upturned stones, forming a very furnace and heating it beyond all endurance. Nevertheless, we sat within it, at the lowest point, and partook of our Monday meal with one hand, while with the other great drops of sweat were brushed from our brows. We took with us from Portland a light canoe, which was lowered to the lake by the aid of ropes, and by means of which we were enabled to reach Wizard Island and see the surroundings from a point of observation seldom attained by visitors. We were also well paid for the trouble and expense, for the reason that, while the view from the shore is grand beyond description, that obtained from the lake is remarkable, and inspires one with a feeling of awe and awakens a depth of appreciation for the sublime unequaled.—*Portland (Ore.) Modern Architecture.

Mr. W. W. Armitage, architectural draughtsman, No. 402 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California, writes that having a severe cough, which he found it difficult to remove, he tried Red Star Cough Cure, and after a few doses was completely cured. Encouraged by this remarkable result, he gave it to the young members of his family who were sick from a like cause, and it produced similar effects upon them. He recommends its use in every household.

After a druggist has filled a prescription it belongs to him, and not the customer who brought it to his store.

Catarrh

Is a very prevalent and exceedingly disagreeable disease, liable, if neglected, to develop into serious consumption. Being a constitutional disease, it requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, acting through the blood, reaches every part of the system, effecting a radical and permanent cure of catarrh in even its most severe forms. Prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

The colored women of Mobile have organized an art association.

Mishler's Herb Bitters is prepared by a physian and chemist of the highest repute, not only in the community in which he lives, but abroad as well. Mishler's Herb Bitters is an absolute cure for dyspepsia, liver complaint, cramps in the stomach and every form of indigestion, and affords almost immediate relief in dysentry, colic, cholera morbus and diseases of the kidney or bladder.

Many a man who had lost nerve, vigor and energy, has been cured by Hunt's Remedy.

Why continue the use of irritating powders, snuffs or liquids. Ely's Cream Balm, pleasant of application and a sure cure for catarrh and cold in head, can be had for 50c. at druggists. It is easily applied with the finger, is safe and pleasant and is curing the most obstinate cases. It gives relief at once.

Being a sufferer from chronic catarrh and having derived great benefit from the use of Ely's Cream Balm I can highly recommend it. Its sales are far in excess of all other catarrh remedies.—B. Franken, Druggist; Sigourney, Iowa.

Same Foolish People.

Allow a cough to run until it gets beyond the reach of medicine. They often say, Oh it will wear away, but in most cases it wears them away. Could they be induced to try the successful medicine called Kemp's Balsam, which we will sell on a positive guarantee to cure, they would immediately see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial size free. For sale by Baker & Hall, Tecumseh.

The three outlets of disease are the bowels, the skin and the kidneys. Regulate their action with the best purifying tonic, Burdock Blood Bitters.

The Rev. Wm. Stout, Wiarton, Ont states: "After being ineffectually treated by seventeen different doctors for Scrofula and blood diseases, I was cured by Burdock Blood Bitters." Write him for proof.

It is worth remembering that nobody enjoys the nicest surroundings if in bad health. There are miserable people about to day with one foot in the grave, to whom a bottle of Parker's Tonic would do more good than all the doctors and medicines they have ever used.

CATAARH—A NEW TREATMENT.

From the Montreal Star

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 236 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished he claims the Catarrh is practically cured and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The Application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.

DIED.

At Portland, Oregon, on Saturday, October 24, 1885, of dropsy, Mrs. Phoebe Ann Davenport, wife of John Davenport, of this city, in the 76th year of her age.

Mrs. Davenport was born in Dutchess county, N. Y., in the year 1809, and moved to Wisconsin during the early settlement of that State, where she resided till she came to Greene county in 1866. Fifteen years ago she married Mr. John Davenport, being at that time a widow, and since then has spent most of her time in, and about Jefferson. Her health failing some ten years since, she sought by change of climate to obtain help, going to Kansas, Texas, and other points. Last November she went to Oregon, where a son and daughter by a former husband resided, and with whom she remained until her death as stated above. She had been gradually failing for some time, and died at a ripe old age. She was buried at Portland. Mrs. Davenport will be remembered by this community as an exemplary woman, and a good wife and mother, enduring with patience the suffering incident to ill health, and her death will bring sorrow to many hearts who prized her friendship and honored her personal worth. "Uncle John" and the entire family have the earnest sympathy of our people by reason of this sad bereavement.

The above notice is taken from the Jefferson, Iowa, Bee of October 29. The old acquaintances of Mr. Davenport in Franklin and Tecumseh, will unite with his western friends in extending their sympathies.

McCOLLUM.—At the home of his mother and sister, in Manchester, Sunday evening, Nov. 1st, 1885, of quick consumption, Emmett McCollum. Aged 41 years, 2 mos. 5 days.

The subject of the above notice, Emmett McCollum, was born in the Township of Duanesburg, Schenectady county, State of New York, August 26th, 1844, and was the youngest of three children who came to Michigan with their parents in the spring of 1847, the other two being John E. who resides in Clinton, and Mary C., at Milisburg, Dakota. His health failed him about a year ago, though it has been only a little more than three months since he was compelled to quit work. Some ten weeks ago he was brought to Clinton, to his brothers, for medical treatment, but in spite of all that warm hearts and skilled hands could do for him, he gradually failed. Two weeks ago he sought his mother's roof once more, expecting to return in a few days, but from that time he rapidly grew worse, until death released him from his sufferings. An aged mother, two brothers and two sisters weep for the dead. Yes, he is sleeping now, with that broad soft mantle of human charity for his pillow; the same which in life he loved so well to spread over the faults and frailties of his fellow men. Nearly nineteen centuries ago, on the hills of Judea, the Incarnate God, "again stooping down wrote on the ground, and said": "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone." But there was not a stone cast; no! not one. Farewell dear brother; we shall meet again.

J. E. McC.

ASSIGNEE'S SALE.

ESTATE of Woolston Comfort, Insolvent.—By virtue of a power in me vested by a certain trust deed and assignment made by Woolston Comfort to me, Edgar A. Tribou, I will expose to sale at public auction at the north door of the Flouring Mill on the premises hereinafter described, on Wednesday, the thirtieth day of December next, 1885, at one o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular, the right, title and interest owned and possessed by said Woolston Comfort before said assignment, and now belonging to me as assignee in trust for the benefit of said Comfort's creditors, to wit: All those certain tracts and parcels of land situate in the township of Raisin, Lenawee county and state of Michigan, known and described as follows: The south half of the west half of the northeast quarter (fractional) of section number three, 3, township number six, 6, south, of range number four, 4, east, containing about thirty-eight acres of land, more or less, except about half an acre on east side of the pond, deeded to Nehemiah M. CLINTON CHRONICLES.

Thos. Roper and Will Marshall shipped a car load of Hubbard squashes Tuesday.

There was a large turn out at the corn social Tuesday evening at Town Hall, given by the ladies of the Episcopal church and their finances were swelled to quite a handsome sum.

Deputy Sheriff, Jas. Aten, was in town Tuesday on business connected with the Bridgewater transgressors.

E. B. Sutton delivered a lecture on temperance at Town Hall, Monday evening, to a small but appreciative audience. He took the ground of history repeating itself, and made some very fine points in favor of prohibition from results of the past. He came in the interest of the State Alliance.

Rev. Geo. Wallace, of Manchester, filled the pulpit at the Congregational church last Sabbath morning and evening.

New developments are being bro't to light in the Bridgewater chicken plunder. Joe Stoffenaski, quite a young lad, brother of the accomplice of Sid McIntyre, who was arrested and fined previous to Sid McIntyre's arrest was brought before his Honor, Squire Brown, on Monday as an accomplice in the chicken trick also, and after taking considerable testimony in the case it was ascertained that one Wm. Wade, a valuable witness, was not to be found, and an attachment was made out to bring him forthwith and the case adjourned until yesterday for further proceedings. It also appeared from the testimony that the lad had made off with a pail of groceries from some person's buggy on the streets one evening about three weeks ago.

Don't tell Geo. DePuy the mercury is not down to zero already.

Harry Corbin and Walter Kinney were in the village Sunday last.

The cider mill was quiet last Saturday. Want of barrels.

Richmond & Gadd transported a drove of wool dispensers to Grass Lake for shipment last Saturday.—They had sold them to S. M. Baker, who is to ship them to the far west.

E. R. Smith has had men at work on the old mill race, digging it deeper.

Miss Mary Fitzgerald entertained a party of schoolmates and friends at her home last Thursday evening.

The ordinance of baptism was administered at the Baptist church last Sunday evening, Miss Ada Stanclift being the recipient.

Hundreds of bushels of corn are on the ground awaiting for sunshine to dry it, preparatory to cribbing.

Mrs. Alonzo Clark has returned from her northern trip, and reports having had a good time, although she states that they had considerable snow up there when she left for home.

Following up the chicken thieves has given J. C. Burroughs quite a liking for the feathery tribe, and he has at once entered the field as a poultry buyer. He shipped one load last week, one Tuesday, and is gathering them in for another shipment to-day.

The city fathers have adopted measures for the immediate repairing of the sidewalks in all parts of the village, and have given the street commissioner instructions tending that way. We hope none of the bad places may be overlooked, as a hole in the walk makes perambulating very unsafe on these dark nights.

David Woodward received some very choice apples to add to his stock of winter fruit from Ingham County. May we be lucky enough to greet Dave with a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year.

A new sidewalk has taken the place of the old one on the north side of Chicago street, west of railroad.

Dr. John Tuttle and family returned from Flint, Tuesday, having been there on a visit to friends and relatives.

Chas. Goodrich, who has been up in Ingham county, packing apples for Hiram Saxton, returned home Monday morning.

"Lubricity," "Not for Joe," "Get there Eli," and the appropriate "Victor," compose the polite and attentive force at John Smith & Son's.

The household effects of Chas. Lawrence of Tecumseh, passed through Clinton on their way to the township of Manchester, Monday, and it is now an undoubted fact, that Chas. has steadied down to farm life for a certainty.

Dr. Begel has moved his house on to a wall and is building on nearly as much more and the end is not yet.

James McIntyre and wife are visiting at Saline.

Time brings wondrous changes. Our old friend Scotty has gone to Palmyra, and now the sound of the sausage chopper greets our ears as we pass by Mac's. Who is the next man to run Mac out.

Joe Dennison has moved into Al. Machan's house, lately vacated by W. J. Scott.

Thomas Ott's baby is very sick, with but little prospects of recovery.

Mrs. Al. Hoxsie returned to Detroit Monday.

ADDISON ATOMS.

E. M. Brown is making frequent shipments of hay from this place to New York city.

Friday night witnessed a terrific storm and something like a feeble attempt at the cyclone business at this point No particular damage is reported however, and our people congratulate themselves on having escaped results which it was entirely within the power of old Boreas to make serious.

Willis Bertram reports a turnip of the common variety as having acquired the unprecedented weight of 15½ lbs. Who will turnip a mate to it?

T. H. Swartout made a trip to Jackson with a heavy load of goods during one of the rainy days of last week. It is useless to state that he got sprinkled, but not with holy water, nor was the operation accompanied by any ceremony which partook of that nature to any great extent.

The bear show barely made expenses at the rink Friday night. There was altogether too much bare faced tomfoolery about it to bare it a long in good style in this town.

Mr. Louis Gans, of Cincinnati, has 2,000 barrels of apples stored at this place ready for shipment.

While the aged mother of Henry Taylor, of Woodstock, was visiting at the residence of her grand daughter, Mrs. Jack Lumsden, in Rome township, last week, she accidentally fell down cellar with such force as to break the board upon which she struck. The old lady was unconscious when taken up and was in a critical condition when last heard from.

Last Saturday we inspected the job of wood work now in progress, which completes the interior of Curtis's new banking house. It is a creditable job both in point of design and execution. The well ventilated and roomy apartments on the second floor are especially well adapted for office purposes.

BROOKLYN BILLET.

To-day is the first day of genuine sunshine in nearly two weeks.

Nearly two years have elapsed since the Crouch's were so cruelly murdered in the dead of night, yet the wind storm of last Friday night made one think of the time very distinctly as they lay awake and listened to the house rock on its foundation. Brooklyn was not prepared for a cyclone, nevertheless it came near experiencing one.

The Alba Heywood entertainment at Union Hall, was a success in every respect. The hall was crowded as never before and all were well pleased evidently.

Miss Jennie Bertram of Jackson, is visiting Brooklyn friends.

The ladies of All Saint's church are preparing for a Bazaar to be given about the 1st of Dec.

Mrs. Slater's sons from Dakota, have been sent for, but up to Tuesday night had not been heard from. The afflicted family have the sincere sympathy of the entire community.

Mr. Warner, an old gentleman, living in the German district, retired Sunday night apparently in good health, but was found dead in his bed in the morning. Old age was evidently the cause.

Mrs. Furgeson, of North Sand Lake breathed her last on Sunday night. Grim monster death seems very busy in our town; Rev. Mr. Storms having four calls in two days to attend funerals.

Mr. J. VanNess and family, together with Mr. and Mrs. Conklin, of Tecumseh, spent Sunday with Mr. VanNess' father, of this place.

There will be a Methodist oyster supper at the residence of Mr. Wm. Fisher, next Friday evening. A general good time is anticipated.

Farmers will be glad to see a favorable change in the weather. We hope it will continue for a season.

Mr. J. Fridd will be at Adrian this week acting as juryman.

Mr. Malby, Mrs. Frank Mangus' father, left for New York, last Tuesday.

SPRINGVILLE SNUFF.

Mrs. Nicholas Stafford, mother of J. H. Stafford, is very sick.

Mrs. Willard Furgeson, Sr., who has been suffering intensely for about two or three months from the effects of a cancer, died at about 7 o'clock Monday morning. Services at the Junction, Wednesday, 2 P. M.

Henry Daniels came home last week from Adrian college, on account of sore eyes. He expects to return as soon as able.

All those signing for the repairs of the church are being reminded of it this week. Meetings have been held in C. E. Jessup's Hall for the past two Sundays on account of the church being all torn up.

Quite a splurge was made last week to have another P. M. appointed at this place, and at the same time have it remain with the present incumbent. How successful the scheme is remains to be seen.

The Nation New York offers a "trial subscription" of two months to new readers for 25 cents—half rate. The Nation is a weekly review of politics and of literature, from an independent standpoint, conducted with the aid of the most competent writers obtainable. The list of contributors whose services are thus enlisted includes most of the leading names in literature, science, art, philosophy, and law in this country, and many abroad. The Chicago Dial recently remarked: "It is not too much to say of the Nation that no single agency has done so much in the past twenty years to advance and dignify the calling of journalism in America. In all departments it has been singularly able and impartial, and its success is a cause of gratification in which American scholars generally will share." While not professing to be a newspaper, the Nation yet gives a carefully edited "news summary," in the best shape for permanent record.

The Circuit Court opened last Tuesday at ten o'clock, A. M. The criminal calendar contains the following cases: Harvey Marshall, assault with intent to commit rape; George Riley, bastardy; James Brown, larceny; Jas. BULL-TERRIERS.

How One of the Rascals Lost Jack a Fortune.

Unburdening His Soul on the Subject of Rich Uncles and Bull-Terriers—Why He Is Not Struck Over Bull-Dogs.

I was strolling down Montgomery street one day last week with Jack Wetherall, when a seedy-looking individual, leading a bull-terrier of the most pronounced type, approached us and asked that question which Sennyder has made so famous. "Don't you want to buy a dorg?" As neither of us cared about investing in dog flesh just then, we moved on to escape the man's importunities. As we did Jack remarkedly "Curse those bull-terriers. One of the accursed brutes cost me a fortune."

"How was that, Jack," I inquired, the more anxiously because Jack was known to have experienced some great disappointment in money matters, though he was most reticent upon the subject.

"Well, it's a pretty longish yarn, but if I shan't bore you, just let's slip into C's back-room, and I'll unburden my soul on the subject of rich uncles and bull-terriers."

So we lit our cigars, ordered some fluid comfort, and Jack Wetherall gave the following graphic account of his troubles.

"When I was at Cambridge, in '68, bull-terriers were the fashion among a certain somewhat fast clique. Not great, ungainly mongrels like that brute we saw just now, but high-bred, handsome little fellows weighing from eighteen to twenty pounds, and bred in such a manner as to contain as much force as possible in the smallest amount of space. Of course I was bound to have one, and as money in those days was not much of an object I determined to get a good one. It was some time before I could find just the dog I wanted, but at last I succeeded in buying, for twenty pounds, the most incarnate little fiend in the shape of a dog that man ever owned. It was milk-white, with bandy legs, a round bullet head, a tail fine as a black-and-tan's, and ears that had been most artistically trimmed. It weighed only fourteen pounds and some odd ounces. When I took it to the stables, where I kept my horse, the ostler, upon whose authority I lord the greatest confidence, assured me that it was a 'perfect beetle beauty.' My college chums all went into ecstasies over Snap (for that was the name of the ill-omened brute), and I felt quite a sense of added grandeur in being the owner of so fine a dog. The man from whom I had bought Snap had not by any means exaggerated when he said it at the dog "'d face Old Nick." He would. He was immense on rats, but the vast amount of bull in him made him hang on too long to his game ever to make a first rather. He was game, however, to the backbone. I've put him in a pit with twenty-five big old sewer-rats, and, although all bitten to pieces, he did not quit until he had killed every one. Cats he detested, and whenever opportunity offered took no pains to disguise his feelings. He had, however, one very bad trait in his character, he was quarrelsome to a degree. The old lady's fat, wheezy pet spaniel was his pet aversion, and many are the awkward predicaments into which he got me. One incident I shall never forget. It was summer vacation, and my people were stopping in Cambridge Terrace, Regent's Park. Of course I had Snap home with me, for we had become inseparable. Well, opposite the terrace is a garden (public to the terrace folks), where nursemaids were wont to air their babies, and where the old ladies of the terrace used to exercise their dogs. One summer morning, just as I was quietly smoking my meerschaum pipe, with Snap beside me on the garden seat, a stout lady passed, followed by the fattest of fat spaniels. In a second, before I had time to think or act, Snap had thrust my pipe bowl bodily into the turpit. "Take it off! Take it off! It will kill my Fido!" screamed the stout old lady, as she belaboured both dogs with her parasol. Tragic though the affair was, no doubt, to the fat lady, I could not help almost bursting with smothered laughter. The spaniel must have weighed quite forty pounds, and there was little Snap tugging at it with all his might, while it spoil I like a stuck pig. I lost no time, however, in closing Snap's jaws, and apologized most humbly to the irate old lady. She was like Rachel weeping for her children, only a good deal more wrathy, and would not be comforted. She left me with this parting shot: 'Only costermongers and rat-catchers should go about with such dogs as that.' At the time I felt offended and hurt; now I think she was right. But here, I'm getting away from the chief and most expensive of Snap's misdeeds.

"I had a certain rich uncle, a crusty old bachelor, who lived in Warwickshire. The same vacation in which the old lady episode occurred, about which I've just told you, I had an invitation to spend a week with him at his lovely place near Guy's Gult. Knowing that the old gentleman was fond of animals I had no hesitation about taking Snap with me. The old boy met me at the railroad station with his carriage. As I jumped into the carriage, with Snap at my heels, the old gentleman shrank back and exclaimed 'Surely, Jack, that common-looking dog can't belong to you?' But Snap had a most winning way about him, and soon he and my uncle were on the best of terms. He looks like a fighting dog, Jack, and is hardly the dog for a gentleman to own,' observed the old man, as Jack pulled up his ears and made frantic efforts to get on of the carriage to get at possession dog. I assured him that Snap was most peaceably inclined, and promised to quote a sou' giving a dog a fair chance, etc., and so things passed along pretty smoothly.

"When bed-time came I was retiring with Snap (who always slept at the foot of my bed) when my uncle stopped me and said: 'Now, Jack, I have so far put up with your pet, but I can not and will not allow dogs in my bedrooms. As a compromise it was agreed that Snap should sleep in the butler's pantry that night, for the future, in the stables. Accordingly a bed was made up for Snap in the pantry, and we all retired for the night.

"I had been asleep some hours when I was awakened by a light tapping at my door. I sprang out of bed in an instant, and found the butler, trembling in his shirt sleeves, outside my door. 'Oh, Master Jack,' he said, in accents trembling with excitement and fear, 'whatever is to be done? That dog of yours has killed Tab, the master's old cat, that he's had for ten years.' I said not a word, but hastily getting into my trousers I silently followed him down stairs to the scene of the murder. There, sure enough, was poor Tab lying stone dead in the sink, with the murderer, Snap, still vigilantly watching the remains, ready to shake her again should the slightest signs of life appear. I took him up by the scruff of the neck and banged his head against the wall in my wrath. He did not utter a single sound, but got up wagging his tail as if such rough treatment was rather fun. It appeared that Tab had a habit of sleeping in a certain cupboard, and that when locking up for the night the butler had forgotten the fact, but waking in the night it had suddenly flashed across his mind, and rising at once he had gone to the pantry. Alas! too late to save the life of my uncle's pet cat.

"The butler and I then had a council of war, and it was decided to bury poor Tab in the garden, and profess entire ignorance as to the cause of her sudden disappearance. Accordingly the butler and I sallied forth in the gray dawn of that July morning, and buried poor Tab in a sequestered part of the garden.

"'Dear me!' said my uncle at breakfast that morning, 'what can have happened to Tab? She hasn't missed coming for her milk at breakfast time for eight years, unless she had kittens. It must be that ugly brute of a dog of yours that has frightened her.'

"'Frightened her?' I thought to myself 'I should rather say so!' but I said 'Perhaps Tab has engagements elsewhere. I fancied I heard a cat serenade last night.'

"After breakfast the old gentleman handed me a box of choice Havanas and proposed a stroll in the garden, and soon we were sauntering about that miniature paradise, with Snap at our heels. A little while afterward I missed Snap but, thinking he had just gone off for a run, took no notice of his absence. Five minutes passed and no Snap. Then I began to be uneasy. I called him and whistled, but to no avail. At last I saw him in the distance, sneaking and tugging furiously at some long object. My curiosity was excited, and we both hurried to the spot. O, horror of horrors! There was that wretched dog shaking the corpse of poor Tab, my uncle's pet cat, which he had scratched up from its grave. I shall never forget the look my uncle gave as he turned to me and said 'Ah, I see it all now.' Then, pulling out his watch, he looked at it and remarked 'The train leaves Leamington for London at 8:40. You had better pack your portmanteau, and the carriage shall be around in half an hour. Good-bye.'

"He then turned on his heel and left me to my own bitter reflections. To cut a long story short, the old man died three years ago, worth $70,000, the bulk of which he left to my sister and cousin. There was a clause, however, in the will, by which I came in for twenty dollars. The will read: 'To my nephew John Wetherall, the sum of five pounds, to be expended by him in the purchase of muzzles for whatever bull-dogs he possesses or may possess.'

"And that's why I'm not struck over bull-terriers or bull-dogs," said Jack, as he gulped down his beer in a semi-desperate way, and bade me good-bye."—San Francisco News-Letter.

A Patience-Trying Prisoner.

"I was never in a court of law before in my life," said a thin-haired, snabbly-dressed man to Justice Murray in the Yorkville Police Court yesterday morning.

"Do you work?" asked His Honor.

"I live near Milburn, in New Jersey."

"What were you doing last night?"

"I was going to my employers."

"But how came you here?"

"I can show you letters from New Jersey."

"Will you answer my questions?"

"I am a respectable, hard working man, Your Worship, and was never drunk."

"How old are you?"

"I don't think, I work."

"What is your employer's name?"

"I am telling the truth. I live in New Jersey."

"You can go to a place."—N. Y. Herald.

DORDRECHT.

A City in Which Nine Tenths of the Houses Are Two Hundred Years Old.

Dordrecht is a place of contrasts. It has no famous [illegible] the Renaissance Hotel de Ville, no [illegible], no [illegible] terminus [illegible]. I am [illegible] I do not pretend to be a [illegible] of Holland, but I am [illegible] who do possess that knowledge [illegible] all places to [illegible] more than all Dutch cities [illegible] other place south of the Zuyder Zee. I do know that in the towns [illegible] Holland [illegible] I have seen [illegible] of a [illegible] I took for [illegible] so many to one of buildings having date [illegible] that at a glance. For [illegible] a purpose of old houses, brown red and yellow, brought together in tangled confusion, large and small showing each other how to cope in a crowd.

Dort's pictures are surrounded by steam from the river, but it is a picture indeed when first seen from a railway station. The railway is not ten years old at Dordrecht yet, and this is, of course, the newest end of the town. Two or three of the brand new French villas which are such hideous abominations in the outskirts of every Dutch town, dot the road and damp the ardor of the visitor. But soon the true Dordrecht reveals itself, lying straight in front, the delicate spire of the cathedral rising from the midst of crow stepped gables and autumn tinted trees. It is as less to adopt landmarks or to take bearings here. Make up your mind to be lost at once, and you will have no further anxiety.

In Dordrecht there is something new, or rather something very old, in every street. The houses are tall and fantastically gabled, and as the streets are mainly very narrow one can take a walk in the grateful shade on the hottest summer day. Nine-tenths of the houses are at least two hundred years old, and many of them are a century and a half old. In many of the busier streets and along most of the canals, the old gables lean totteringly forward, as though to meet their venerable friends on the other side of the way. The builder's men were very gingerly demolishing a fine gabled old place, colored a mellow russet brown, which was in danger of falling down, owing to some settlement in the sandy shifting soil. Great figures of beaten iron upon the front attested that it was built in 1580. Every now and again, in the streets of Dort, I came upon a house large enough to have looked well in an English park. A double flight of steps, well-nigh wide enough for the passage of the trade road-coach and six, led up to a massive front door, behind which, when it was occasionally opened, I caught a glimpse of a hall ample enough to hold an eligible detached villa-residence. Sometimes a coat of crowded quarterings was florally sculptured above the broken pediment of the door, sometimes a bit of allegorical carving ornamented the windows. There are a very few old towns anywhere which have retained the olden homes of the departed merchant princes in such numbers or in such admirable preservation as Dordrecht.—Cassell's Family Magazine.

The Inevitable Master.

There is nothing that can quite supply the place of a full acquaintance with the rudimentary facts and suggestions of any of the callings in which men strive for wealth and fame. The man who begins by learning the alphabet of his chosen pursuit, and progresses by degrees and with trained facilities, is the one who in the long run will come off conqueror. This applies as well to those of remarkable natural gifts as to those who are more slenderly equipped in that regard. An eminent philosopher has said, with apt and signal force, "genius is an infinite capacity for receiving discipline." It is discipline that tells, and without that there can be only partial success, at most and under any circumstances. There's no royal road to first-class triumphs, no short cut by which the necessity of close and hard preparation may be avoided. Dore discovered this, even if he did not acknowledge it; and if a man of his splendid talents could not cause an exception to be made to the rule, with all his determined and prolonged efforts, it is safe to say that it must be a rule which nobody has power to overcome. The moral of such a struggle and such a failure appeals to all classes of people. Men may prosper in a measure by natural energy and cunning alone, but prosperity thus obtained is incomplete and uncertain. The thorough man is the inevitable master, and thoroughness comes only by timely and persevering discipline.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Changing the Subject.

"Always," said papa, as he drank his coffee and enjoyed his morning beefsteak, "always change the subject when anything unpleasant has been said. It is both wise and polite."

That evening on his return from business he found his carnation bed despoiled and the tiny imprint of slipered feet bearing witness to the small thief.

"Mabel," he said to her, "did you pick my flowers?"

"Papa," said Mabel, "did you see a monkey in town?"

"Never mind that. Did you pick my flowers?"

"Papa, what did grandma send me?"

"Mabel, what do you mean? Did you pick my flowers? Answer me, yes or no."

"Yes, papa, I did; but I fout I'd change the subject."—Athol (Mass.) Transcript.

HOUSEKEEPING.

Valuable Hints For Young Wives Just Entering Upon This Responsibility.

The first year of housekeeping is usually a trying one for most young housekeepers. The natural desire to have everything in order and to show that one is capable of keeping house as it ought to be kept, often associated, it is, with ignorance of methods and unfamiliarity with domestic industry, places the neophyte in most unpleasant situations. She may yet know just where her province ends and that of her husband begins, or what, for her, is a reasonable quantity of work to demand of a servant; she doubtless thinks she would worry over it and wonder if others had to do as much, and, in short, she will be sensitive about it, as well as about other things, until she has learned by experience that there is a way of doing everything, even the smallest, commonest operation, so that a succession of steps to be taken, which if taken in their natural, logical order, make the work possible and even easy. She has to learn how to hold a score or more of threads in her hand so that not let them get tangled or fall out of each other or let a knot or tangle be broken.

There are certain rules of procedure, which will aid one very much in keeping her housework well in hand, and at the same time keep her mind not only free from doubt and vexation, but serene and cheerful. The first is to show that one is capable of keeping house as it ought to be kept, either associated, as it is, with ignorance of methods and uniform habits of

The latest sensation is that an Ohio woman has given birth to five children at once. This story should be taken with many grains of allowance as an honest count is not fashionable in Ohio these days.

The Toledo Bee says: A minister of Upper Sandusky, formerly of this city, writes the Bee as follows: "I think President Cleveland's Thanksgiving proclamation one of the best ever sent out by an Executive. A bad man at heart could never have produced it."

Fadover reminds us that Mrs. Fadover wants a new seal skin sacque.—She prophesies a falling barometer, with westerly winds and snow squals. Heavy storms may be expected in the vicinity of the Fadover domicile until the seal skin sacque is forthcoming.

Capt. Kirk, of the Adrian Salvation Army, having despaired of success in his efforts to convert editor Smith, of the Record, has concluded to open a campaign in Tecumseh for the especial benefit of editor Field of the News. Unless we are sadly mistaken the Captain will find Tecumseh a more congenial Field to work in than Adrian was.

Honors are about easy in the elections held last week. The Democrats carry New York, Maryland and Virginia, the Republicans Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Iowa. The result shows that the revolution of last fall is not going backwards. Every state carried by Cleveland & Hendricks the Democrats hold by increased majorities, and in Virginia they will gain a United States senator. They also gain handsomely in Iowa.

The salvation army notified Tecumseh that unless the 'hosts of sin' capitulate unconditionally by Nov. 7 they propose to move immediately on their works. News from the seat of war is awaited from our special correspondent on the field. It was hinted that the HERALD end of the town would be made a special point of attack.—Adrian Record.

We are happy to state that the barracks are located within a stone's throw of our office, and that Captain Kirk shall have the moral assistance of the HERALD establishment in waging his war upon the "hosts of sin." Gather them in, Captain, gather them in.

The Toledo Bee, in commenting upon the erratic course of the Cincinnati Enquirer towards the administration, echoes the sentiment of Michigan Democrats to a dot:

The course of the Cincinnati Enquirer in its attacks upon Mr. Cleveland, will receive very little support in Ohio. Mr. John R. McLean is not a good enough Democrat himself to question the orthodoxy, or to criticise the Democracy of Grover Cleveland, or indeed of any other Democrat. His newspaper has given the party a spasmodic support, often doing more to further the success of the Republicans than the Democrats.—The Enquirer injured Mr. Cleveland and assisted Mr. Blaine all it could last fall. John R. McLean did not vote for Grover Cleveland. He has never said he did, and never denied the charge that he did not.

REMINISCENCES OF M'CLELLAN.

No one but his most intimate friends ever heard McClellan talk of his military experiences.

General McClellan was a deeply religious man, although his religion was conspicuously unobtrusive. He had family prayers every morning and evening.

The most unbounded hospitality always prevailed within General McClellan's doors, and his house at Orange was always filled with a gay company of young people.

When General Fitz John Porter heard the news of General McClellan's sudden death he exclaimed: "My own 'Mac' My own 'Mac'" and put his head down on his desk and cried.

General McClellan was one of the founders of the St. Cloud Presbyterian Church at Orange, N. J., which was organized about ten years ago, and been one of its elders since its organization.

While abroad he was received with a hospitality at the courts and other distinguished circles of every capital of Europe he visited such as has never been extended to an American with one exception—General Grant.

As illustrating McClellan's ability as an engineer and his caution it is remembered that one of his critics in 1862 said he could build the best bridge in the world and then would want to crawl across it on all fours.

For twenty years General McClellan has kept up an intimate correspondence with the Orleans Princes, who were on his staff, during the war. Only a few weeks ago he received a long and important but confidential letter from the Comte de Paris.

Devoted to his family, he was a model husband and father. With the proceeds derived from his war articles in the Century he purchased a pair of solitaire diamond earrings for his wife, which she facetiously christened "Antietam" and "Malvern Hill."

McClellan succeeded in inspiring the Trenton potteries with the ambition to produce fine work. At first they laughed at him, but he finally won them over, and to-day Trenton pottery finds its way everywhere, including a handsome yearly sale in England.

W. H. Burns, of the army, writes to the World to say that General Grant, on a visit to New York after his first election to the Presidency, said to General McClellan: "You came to the front too soon. Had I been in your place then you would have been in mine now."

General Cox, of Ohio, says he was by McClellan's side when he sent Franklin to the relief of Pope, with the injunction: "Go and do all you possibly can. Let it not be said that any part of the Army of the Potomac failed in its duty to General Pope."

Describing his last night on earth, Dr. Seward said: "The man showed his heroic character that night. If he could say a cheerful word to Mrs. McClellan to the effect that he felt better he would do so. Otherwise he would bear his agony in grim silence. I had to ask him he how felt, that I migat get some hint as to the necessary treatment."

For many years General McClellan has had his summer residence in a country villa high up on the crest of the first Orange Mountains, two miles above and back of the village. From the veranda you look across a stretch of thick woods, over the stretching spires and steeples of the pretty town of Orange, across the city of Newark and the waters of Newark Bay.

General McClellan was a most charming conversationalist. Few men of his generation have had such wide and such close acquaintance with foreign and American politics; with literature, ancient and modern; with art; with theories of religion, Christian and pagan; with history; with military affairs, of course, as he. He had a delightful manner, unassuming to a degree and gracious, and a peculiar quality of humor.

After the Peninsular campaign, when McClellan was in the trenches in front of Washington, he wore no insignia of rank. Most of the time he had on a plaited hunting shirt and a military cap. Speaking of his enforced abandonment of the campaign against Richmond at this time, he said: "I would not have any cause for complaint if General Pope had relieved me of the command of the Army of the Potomac at Harrison's Landing. But as sure as fate the ground that has been abandoned by my withdrawal will have to all be worked over before Lee's army is whipped and Richmond captured."

General J. D. Cox, of Ohio, explains McClellan's popularity with his troops as follows: "In the first place he was always attentive to their wants, and always returned any salutution they gave him; besides he impressed them as he did every one, with the fact that he was a thoroughly equipped, reliable man, who at all times knew exactly what he was doing. Few men will question but what he was a superior man and soldier. He possessed a thoroughly trained analytical mind. While he had great gifts of organization, he possessed much greater qualifications. He had the power of concentration as well as of analysis, and on the field he was composed as well as energetic and efficient in handling his troops."

The General's final order taking leave of the Army of the Potomac on Nov. 7, '62, was as follows: "In parting from you I cannot express the love and gratitude I bear to you. As an army you have grown up in my care. In you I have never found doubt or coldness. The battles you have fought under my command will probably live in our nation's history. The glory you have achieved over mutual perils and fatigues, the graves of our comrades who have fallen in battle and by disease, the broken forms of those whom wounds and sickness have disabled—the strongest association which can exist among men—unite us by an indissoluble tie. We shall ever be comrades in supporting the Constitution of our country and the nationality of its people."

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
LANSING, Nov. 5, 1885.

According to custom adopted by our forefathers and observed ever since, one day in each year has been set apart especially for thanksgiving.

Therefore, I, Russell A. Alger, governor of the state of Michigan, do designate Thursday, the 26th inst., for such observance. On that day let us all show our gratitude by acts of charity, abstaining from business, gathering in places of worship, and around our firesides with family and friends; and thanking God for preserving us from pestilence and danger, for prosperity and peace, ask Him that these mercies may be continued to us as a people. RUSSELL A. ALGER.

By the governor, H. A. CONANT, secretary of State.

The Shakspearian class, under the management of Miss A. L. Hitchcock, of the High School every Monday, seems to be a success, as new members are being added every week.

Bert McNair, class of '85, will begin next Monday his career as a teacher in the Culbertson district about two miles north of the village. If he succeeds in teaching as well as he did in school his success is assured.

Home decoration is something which every good housewife is interested in. The Decorator & Furnisher is a new publication specially devoted to this purpose. It is an elegant magazine and is gaining a large circulation. Read their prospectus in another column, and send for a sample copy. Clubbed with the HERALD.

Have you seen the Golden Temple of Art and Music? If not, do not fail to do so before the close of this week, as Prof. Charles will terminate his engagement here on Saturday next.—It is a most wonderful piece of mechanism. We gave a somewhat extended description of it in last week's HERALD, but the original must be seen to be appreciated. We can assure our readers that the small sum charged for admission will be well spent to see this mechanical and musical wonder.

The Missionary concert at the Presbyterian church last Sunday evening was well worth mentioning. The program was gotten up by Mrs. David McNair and carried out by her class. The subject of the evening was on Persia, the missionary work done in that country. The scholars all did very nicely and deserve credit for carrying out their part so well. The pastor gave a few very interesting remarks. The choir was assisted by Will McNair with the flute and John Richard with the cornet. On the whole it was a splendid entertainment and was well received by the people.

THE NEW COUNCIL BUILDING.

The improvements which have been in progress on the Council building during the past three months are now fully completed. The last brick has been laid, the last nail has been driven, the last pint of paint has been spread. We venture to say that Tecumseh can now boast of the most commodious and convenient public building to be found in any village of its size in the state.

An addition twelve feet in width was erected along the entire north side of the old building and one about twenty feet deep on the east end, both two stories in heighth. These additions more than double the capacity of the original building. The stair case and cells are taken from the main room and moved into the north part, which enlarges the apartment for the steamer and hose carts, giving plenty of room for storage purposes, and a cupola is constructed in the rear of the engine room for the proper storage of the hose. Back of the engine room in the east wing is located the stable. Doors open between these two rooms, allowing the team direct access from their regular quarters to the engine room. In the north addition are located the stair case, and three cells for "sobering off" subjects. Over these in the second story are two small rooms which can be used for special purposes. One is now used for a band room. Adjoining the stable in the east end is a sleeping room for the teamster, which is nicely fitted up with stove and all the necessary furniture to make it comfortable, and over these two latter rooms is the hay loft. In the back portion of the yard a shed has been erected about fifty feet in length for the storage of straw, tools, sewerpipe, the corporation wagon, ladders and other articles of like nature belonging to the village.

With Geo. Snell as teamster, Wallace Gray as lamp lighter, Billy Jordan as manipulator of the highways and Jas. Moir to keep people in the traces generally, our citizens can rest satisfied that the corporation affairs will be well taken care of.

Strong & McNair, Adamson Bros., W. & S. W. Anderson & Co., Whitenack, Bordine & Co., G. P. Sparks, Dr. Snyder and Dr. Steinhoff, of Tecumseh, are all represented by advertisements in the Addison Courier.—They believe in printers' ink.

Wesley Burchard, cashier of the Farmers' Bank, of Grass Lake, has skipped, leaving a shortage of $20,000 in his bank account. Here is something that demands the attention of the Clinton medical editor.—The family name is in danger.

A. W. Haight has relinquished his position in Lilley, Bidwell's & Co.'s bank, as his increasing insurance business demands his entire attention. The place vacated by him has been taken by Frank Bauer. It is a good position and we believe Frank will fill it acceptably.

The Scientific American still holds the lead among papers of its class.—It has an immense circulation and better facilities than any of its competitors for making a thoroughly first-class scientific and mechanical paper. Its weekly lists of new patents issued is alone worth the price. Clubbed with the HERALD.

The Cultivator and Country Gentleman published at Albany N. Y., is one of the best agricultural weeklies. There are three departments in which it has no superior—farm crops and processes; horticulture and fruit growing; live stock and dairying. Specimen copies free. Subscriptions received at this office.

Dr. Hause started for Florida on Tuesday morning last. A few Adrian people and nearly twenty Hudson residents accompany the party, which numbers altogether twenty-six persons. The party will go directly to Jacksonville and most of them will visit Sorrento, where Dr. Hause's orange plantation is located.

The Powers Bros., proved to be a drawing card at the rink last Monday evening, as the floor was crowded with skaters and the seats with spectators. Their juggling acts were well performed, and the fancy skating by the two brothers was the best ever witnessed in Tecumseh. Quite a number drove down from Manchester and Clinton to see the entertainment.

The water pipes having arrived, a gang of workmen are digging the trench and laying the pipes on the eastern extension to the Chicago street main, from Oneida street to the Globe mill hill. They expect to complete the work this week. This extension has long been needed. It will extend the water facilities two blocks further east and will furnish a way of emptying the mains to prevent freezing in severe cold weather.

The American Newspaper Annual for 1885, published by N. W. Ayer & Son, of Philadelphia, is the most complete work of the kind that has come under our notice. In addition to the usual list of American Newspapers, it contains a special list arranged by counties, separate lists of class and trade publications of all kinds, co-operative newspaper lists, publications in foreign languages, the population of all cities of 5000 inhabitants and over, and other information. The book should be in the hands of every extensive advertiser as well as of every newspaper man. The price is not the least recommendation of the work, which is only $0.00.—

Miss Jessie VanCourt, of Detroit, spent Sunday with friends in Tecumseh.

Mrs. Jas. Glasgow slipped on the sidewalk last Monday and broke the little bone of her left wrist.

Harry Stevens now mourns the death of his valuable dog, which accidently broke its shoulder, and was chloroformed to death.

C. S. Fitzsimmons, of Lansing, enjoyed his visit in Tecumseh very much and started for home last Saturday.—We tried to persuade him to remain over Sunday and visit the Salvation Army.

Ten members of the Orange lodge of Tecumseh went to Jackson last Thursday to assist in the organization of a lodge in that city. They got the Jackson boys started in good shape.

T. I. Sutton, of Raisin has been raising some extra good pumpkins this fall. He did'nt raise them to brag on, but they make prime pumpkin pies just the same. We have sampled one of them and know.

The New York Sun is one of the best metropolitan papers published. It is always able, independent and entertaining, sometimes erratic but always reliable and readable. Clubbed with the HERALD at reduced rates.

Science has removed its publication office to New York in order to become more strictly a newspaper. It will aim to treat all public questions of scientific interest as well as to give the latest scientific news.

Science desires to be known as a journal for all educated men. It aims to be to science what The Nation and other literary journals have been to literature—a paper for the general reader rather than the specialist.

John Messler, the village teamster, who was seriously injured several weeks ago, held a policy in the Travelers Ins. Co. He has lately settled with the company and received $260. A. W. Haight is the agent for Tecumseh.

Friend Chidester, the painter, went gunning for squirrels down the M. & O. road the other day and returned with the carcasses of 34 of the little jumpers. Seventeen of them are hung in C. A. Wright's show window and make a fine show.

The contest over the Detroit Pension agency has been settled by the appointment of Robert McKinstry, of Jackson; a one legged soldier. There were several applicants for the place, but no one will dispute the special fitness of the appointee.

Nathaniel Erskine, a former Tecumseh resident was in town visiting friends last week. He now lives in Allegan County, near Lake Michigan. It is 18 years since he left Tecumseh and he finds many changes have taken place during that time.

The Tekonsha News says: A Hillsdale man chased, caught, and spanked a youngster, owned by another fellow, the other day, under the supposition that it was his own. Tekonsha needs about 32 such near-sighted men to help spank unruly children.

Evening News:—A learned physician handed in his "ad." to the Reed City News as a healer of "rheumatism, female weakness, scald head, new ralegy, sa't rhume, sore eyes, liver complaint and itch."

We respectfully call the attention of the medical editor to this item. He may gather a valuable hint therefrom.

We have made arrangements by which we can furnish THE OHIO FARMER, the leading weekly agricultural, live stock and family journal of this country, and the TECUMSEH HERALD, both one year, postage paid, for only $2,00. This is a bargain that every farmer should accept.

Frank Silvers has purchased a fine lot on Railroad street, first block north of the M. & O. railroad and will erect a large barn thereon in which to keep his throughbred stock. The barn will be built especially for this purpose and he intends to have the best building of the kind in Southern Michigan.

On Thursday, Oct. 29, there was a reunion of the survivors of the Raisin Institute, which was the home of the oppressed of whatever hue, and was founded about forty years ago. It has been presided over by Profs. Patchin, Walker, Haight and other noted teachers. Its aim was to educate in all that makes life free and noble, and the life to come sure. It was the birth place of the Home for the Friendless, which is now located at Coldwater, a state institution. After being organized in Raisin it was removed to Adrian, and under the fostering care of Rev. Asa Mahan (who was president at one time of Oberlin college, Adrian college, and now resides in London, England), was taken under the care of the state, and will endure as long as the state exists to bless the unfortunate. Twenty-two assembled at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Edwards and had an interesting time in relating old school day reminiscences of the good old days of long ago. The next reunion will occur the first Thursday of June next at Mr. Chester VanDorens, of Bent Oak, and may all of the old survivors meet to cheer each other and brighten life's pathway.—Adrian Record.

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

The Adrian Knights of Pythias will soon move to a new lodge room.

Huron, near which is the Morenci settlement, has been made the capital of Dakota by a vote of the people.

Canandaigua is being troubled by some person or persons who put up indecent written notices at night.

H. W. Bronson, of Wheatland, has purchased the short horn bull, 7th Duke of Lone Oak, of Eugene Pierson.

The Circuit court convened last Tuesday in the old court house, as the new court house has not yet received the furniture.

The Morenci debating club have settled the rink question. They have decided that the practices of the rink are a physical and moral injury.

Joe Denison has moved his family from Adrian to Holloway, where his business is located. He got tired of traveling five miles every night to take tea.

The Salvation army will labor in Tecumseh. Now, there's Stacy, of the HERALD—but hold; "Philander Perkins" will look after him.—Morenci Observer.

Last week Thursday night Hall's drug store, Hudson, received a visit from burglars. They worked for a time at the back door, but abandoned the job, being unable to effect an entrance.

A new circular relating to special delivery, has been promulgated from Washington. It includes postal cards ank sealed packages in matter entitled to special delivery if properly stamped.

The Auburn, Ind., Republican, sensibly advocates this motto: "If you can't talk up your own town, don't talk." It would be well for every place if all its citizens would constantly act upon such good advice.

Lost, between Adrian and the Baptist church in Rome, a new upholstered bug—Adrian Press.

There were two more lines in this item, but they were blotted in our exchange copy and we couldn't decipher them.

Seems as if Editor Kempton, of the Addison Courier, is just a little ungrateful. He received a poem on "mud" during the delightful April weather of last week, and declined to print the same because it was not signed.—Adrian Times.

James Patterson, of Pittsford, has a half-blood Holstein heifer, born the 6th of April, 1884. She had a calf the 31st of October, 1885, about five days less than nineteen months old when she had the calf. Both mother and calf doing well.—Hudson Post.

Here's a warning to girls not to sit in an open window when pulling on their stockings:

A Fremont girl, living at Muskegon, was sitting in an open window pulling on her stockings, when her hands slipped and she fell out, striking the ground on her back 20 feet below.—Her injuries were fatal.

A Bohemian oat chap down in Ohio has just been sentenced to state prison for 10 years. It was for forging notes. He was tried on a note fraud instead of on an oat fraud. If $10 oats won't keep a man in pocket money he had better go to the poor house.—Adrian Press.

There are two prominent classes of men in every community. The one goes ahead and does something, while the other sits back and grumbles because it was not done some other way, or why it should be done at all. There is no such thing as smooth sailing in life. We are all very selfish and unreasonable.

There seems to be a large amount of thieving in the country hereabouts. We hear of a number of farmers who have lost sheep within the past week or two, while chicken roosts seem to be common property, and no chicken knows when he goes to roost where his head may be in the morning. We hope the thieves may be discovered.

Potatoes retail at fifty cents a bushel. But they are cheaper at this price than we can dig them at night in our neighbor's garden, if we can not find a better yard than we have experienced thus far.—Adrian Press.

Can it be true that editor Stearns has so far forgotten his official dignity as to go prowling about his neighbor's potato patches in the night time? Here is a case which demands Captain Kirk's serious attention.

The Addison ladies are bound to have a sidewalk across their mill pond. Another meeting was held last Monday evening for that purpose. Let the good work go on. If the ladies will build a good plank walk between Smith's corner and the Courier office, we would—well,—if there is any good looking single woman on the committee, let her introduce herself.

Here is a late decision of the supreme court. No town or city has a right to give a man a license or permit to sell any wares or merchandise on the sidewalk or on the street in front of the property of another person. The street in front of a man's place of business is held to be an appurtenance to the lot upon which his store is erected and situated, and belongs to him and his business as against all others, except only the right to travel thereon.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Their First Appearance in Tecumseh—A Brilliant and Successful Opening.

An epoch has arrived in the history of Tecumseh. But two "modern improvements" were needed to give our town a metropolitan air—the electric light and the Salvation Army. The electric light is in futuro, but the Salvation Army is now an established fact. Tecumseh has been favored with a skating rink, with Barnum's show, with the Canine Paradox, and with several circuses, during her eventful career, but it was reserved for Saturday, the 7th day of November in the year of grace, 1885, to introduce to this enlightened and religious community, a genuine bona fide detachment of the Salvation Army.

The day was ushered in with a cloudless sky. Old Sol sent down his rays with a cheering smile to mellow the hearts of the faithless and dry up the mud in the streets. The little blue-eyed school girls were happy in the enjoyment of a Saturday's holiday. All nature, including the female sex, seem to conspire to render the advent of Capt. Kirk's battalion most auspiciously auspicious.

The battalion consists of twelve members, viz: 1 Captain, 1 lieutenant, 4 sergeants, 4 corporals and 2 privates. Please to observe, kind reader, that five-sixths of the members are officers. This is a very wise provision in their organization. It is a great inducement to new converts, for a large majority of them are eligible to the offices. Capt. Kirk, who fills the position of high-cock-o-lo-rum, and chief linch-pin of the army, is an old campaigner. He has seen service during the past three months in Adrian. He has stormed the ramparts of sin in that wicked city; he has poured spiritual balsam upon both youthful and aged Adrian sinners; he has wrestled, figuratively speaking, with the Adrian editors; he has administered the balm of Gilead to Adrian widows. Please to observe, kind reader, that the Captain has attacked the cohorts of Satan in Satan's own fortress, and that he has been trained for his responsible duties in the best of all colleges, the school of experience. It has already become apparent that Capt. Kirk is the right man in the right place.

After the evening rations had been disposed of and before the hour arrived for opening services in the tabernacle, the army gave a dress parade in full uniform on Chicago street. They formed ranks on the plaza in front of the Opera House, ambled down the side walk on the north side from the HERALD office to Kies Bros. corner, thence across the street to Williamson's egg and chicken emporium and thence they perambulated up the street on the South side to the tabernacle. This parade was witnessed by a throng of people, some of whom wore gold rimmed spectacles, and many did'nt. Upon arriving at the sanctuary, the Army assumed their position on the rostrum, and the congregation quickly filled the pews. The orchestra chairs were filled with the elite of the city, while the dress circle was reserved for young men who were attended by their best girl. Not only were youth and beauty present, but many of our oldest citizens, with white locks and bowed with age, lent their august presence to the occasion.

The first selection on the program was a chorus by the entire company—

Roll, Jordan, roll
From pole to pole.
Cheer up, my soul;
Thy name enroll
Upon the scroll
Of Kirk's patrol.
Roll, Jordan, roll.

This song was gracefully rendered. The reverberations shook several spiders out of the cob webs in the ceiling, and unjointed the stove pipe in three places.

Then followed an invocation by the captain.

Then another song entitled, Salvation is free.

Salvation is free
For you and for me.
Come let us agree,
While bending the knee,
Our sins for to see,
To sign the decree
And shout jubilee.
Salvation is free.

This song was accompanied by a cornet accompaniment, sandwiched with a tamborine solo, the latter being executed by the cow boy. During a hiatus in the program occasioned by the cow boys stopping to take breath the captain kindly informed the congregation that the cow-boy's lasso had slipped a link and was laid up for repairs, but that it would certainly be present at future entertainments.

Hereupon a squint-eyed sister passed through the audience selling song books. The members of our city bands and glee clubs all invested. The Library Association purchased a dozen as they could be bought in quantities at wholesale rates. The News reporter purchased three copies—one for his own use, one for his best girl and one for his prospective mother-in-law.

A collection was then taken up to buy oil and gas and a new link for the lasso. Upon counting out the collection the hat was found to contain three brass buttons, an old English farthing, twenty five nickels, a bogus half dollar, sixty three one cent bits, an old style two-penny, a box of pills, a trade dollar with a hole in it, a plug of tobacco, and two silver skin onions. The entire lot was turned over to the treasurer except the onions, which the Captain stowed away in his coat tail pocket as a preventive against rheumatism.

A few voluntary prayers and songs followed, after which the Captain pronounced the benediction, and the vast audience slowly emerged from the sanctuary and wended their devious ways homeward.

Our reporter was not present at the Sunday evening services. The meetings held on Monday and subsequent evenings will be faithfully and tearfully and truthfully chronicled in the next issue of the HERALD.

ANTHONY—DOLE.

The residence of D. P. Anthony, in Raisin, was the scene of a happy social event last Thursday, the occasion being the marriage of Miss Jennie Anthony to Mr. Milo Dole, of Auburn Ind. Although the weather was not what it should be for an ideal wedding day, it did not serve to lessen the attendance to any extent, and the house was full of friends and relatives to witness the event. At half past eleven the pair proceeded to the parlor where the nuptial knot was tied by the Rev. Jas. Vincent, of this village. The bride was dressed in a beautiful suit of cream nun's veiling, while the groom wore the usual black dress suit. After the congratulations were over the company sat down to a collation of good things that would satisfy the most fastidious epicure.

Although the bride was not a resident of this village, she was well known here and had by her kind disposition and manner gathered around her a large circle of friends among the young people, most of whom were present to see her take the important step, and bid her God-speed. The groom was formerly a resident of Adrian, but is now living in Auburn Ind. He is a member of "the art preservative" and has a good position in a printing office there. He is a young man of good sterling qualities, and business ability, and will undoubtedly rise in his profession.

A large number of beautiful presents were received by the bride, among which were $100 in gold from her father, an elegant hanging lamp from her mother, and a beautiful table spread and pictures from other members of the family, together with a large quantity of silver ware. The bridal pair departed for Adrian where they took the train for their future home in Auburn, followed by the best wishes of their many friends.

TECUMSEH LUMBER COMPANY.

The Tecumseh Lumber Co., have now got fairly settled in their new quarters on the corner of Shawnee and Pearl streets, and are fully equipped to supply their customers, with everything in the lumber line. We paid a brief visit to their office and yards the other day and were most favorably impressed with the "lay of the land." The large yards are crowded to their fullest extent with a complete assortment of undressed lumber and shingles. A shed extending the entire length of the west end of the yards is filled with dressed and seasoned lumber and mouldings of all kinds. The office building is two stories—the first floor being devoted to the business office proper and the second story is used as a glazing and paint room. The company will take orders for sash, doors, frames, mouldings and all kinds of finished work, and are prepared to furnish the same in large or small quantities, of the very best quality and at reasonable prices. They also keep on hand a full supply of paints. Jos. H Smith, who has been the efficient business manager of the firm since its organization on the present basis, is retained in the same position, which is a sufficient guarantee that the business of the concern will be well managed. Mr. Smith will be happy to see all of his old patrons at his new office on the corner of Shawnee and Pearl, whenever they want anything in the lumber line.

At the annual meeting of Franklin and Tecumseh Farmer's Club held at H. Wilson's residence on Wednesday evening, Nov. 4, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

A FEVER CURE.

Mr Alex. E. Sweet, in an Open Letter, William Nye, Esq., Imparts Some Valuable Medical Information.

NEW YORK CITY,

TO WILLIAM NYE,
Still at large.

In one of your recent pastoral addresses to the general public, you describe with ghastly relish the sufferings of an unfortunate man whom you, and some other people, so imperfectly understood, the cure of a fever by strange and abnormal methods long out of countenance in respectable practice.

It seems that you were out in the woods on a pleasure party, probably hiding from the officers of the law. Under the pretext of curing the invalid you stood him against a tree and filled his garments with warm ashes. The man with the fever began to perspire, which moisture formed a chemical combination with the ashes, and produced what is known to commerce as concentrated lye in a liquid form. The lye, I don't say which one, began to remove the cuticle of the sick man, consequently he lifted up his voice and jarred the geology of the eternal hills with it.

You seem to regard the sufferings of your victim with levity, but I, who have suffered similar injuries, will shed a silent tear for him as soon as I can get an off day.

What your victim suffered on the outside I suffered on the inside. I was made to drink a pint of tea made of Mexican chilli-nee peppers, compared with which cayenne pepper tastes like a spoonful of ice cream.

I was a mere boy in San Antonio, Tex., when chills and fever, which were doing a large retail business in the town, seized me and flopped me down hard on a couch of illness. The usual remedies were tried and acquitted, and then a regular ordained doctor was called on. He immediately went to work. He did not break up the fever, which was perpetual in session, but he succeeded in transferring into my system most of the materia medica of a drug store in which he owned a half interest.

The more strong medicine I took the weaker I got to be, so the doctor was requested to hunt up another boy.

My condition had now become very serious, particularly to me personally. The fever was chronic, and once every day the chills called around and shook me to see if I was alive. On such occasions the neighbors could hear my bones rattle, so thin had I become.

Kind friends and neighbors drifted in. They stood over me, looking down on me with sad eyes and saying: "This is what we all have to come to. Death loves a shining mark," etc.

A lady who lived next door took my hand and said she thought my pants would fit her little boy Johnny, and she spoke reproachfully of my holding out so long. She wanted to wrap up the pants and take them with her. For all I cared she might have wrapped up my skeleton, too, and taken it with her for Johnny to play with. I had no idea of ever having any more use for it myself.

Just at this crisis an old lady, named Brown, came up from the country, and hearing that I was lying in state, and that it was a free thing, came in to take a look at me.

She scoffed at the idea of my dying. She knew of a plain, simple, Mexican remedy that would get me out of that bed in two weeks. Her remarks were prophetic. It got me out of bed in two seconds—but I anticipate.

"I'll have that boy up and stealin' peaches again in no time," she said.

N. B.—She had once been a neighbor of ours, and owned a peach orchard.

"Now," said she, "if you will keep that reskelly boy alive for ten minutes till I fix him up some chilli-nee pepper tea, he will be up to some devilry before to-morrow night."

She went into the kitchen and in a short time she returned with a bowl of pepper tea which she bade me quaff. I quaffed about a pint of it, and then I had to use my mouth to yell. It was scalding hot, and my throat, and all thereunto belonging, was parboiled.

She passed out of the door just in time to avoid stopping the bowl and the rest of the pepper tea with her head. Arrayed in a long graceful robe de nuit I arose from my couch of illness and executed a beautiful song and dance movement among the broken furniture and the weary watchers who oozed out through the windows and left me alone with my grief.

Looking back at this little incident through the vista of years, I am still convinced that the old lady was trying to get even with me for stealing her peaches, and I can lay my hand on my heart and say that she did. I am also persuaded, Mr. Nye, that you had a spite at the man on whom you tried the hot ashes experiment. If you had known about the red pepper tea, I expect you would have simultaneously given him a gallon or so of it to soothe him internally. Yours truly,

ALEX. E. SWEET.

Experimenting on Criminals.

A well-known physician in British India wants to make criminals who have been sentenced to death useful as subjects of experiment for the purpose of ascertaining how to treat cholera successfully. He would take any prisoner under sentence of death who gave his consent, experiment upon him, and if the experiment itself did not result fatally, spare the prisoner's life. As the number of capital convictions in British India is between three hundred and four hundred a year, there would probably be plenty of candidates for the chance of escape thus afforded.—Chicago Tribune.

—Mrs. Boozer—How did you happen to lose so much money while you were in bathing at Coney Island, love? Did you carry it under your oil-skin bathing cap? Boozer (absent-mindedly)—Bathing? When? Lost money? How? Mrs. Boozer—Why, I heard you tell Mr. Tompkins you had dropped fifty dollars in the pool.—Tid Bits.

POPULAR SONGS.

American Productions That Have Attained Wide Popularity.

Speaking of "John Brown's Body," the tune itself is an old Methodist camp-meeting tune and the words were adapted to it by a glee club in Boston in 1861. It was first published at Charlestown, Mass. Captain James Greenleaf, an organist of the Harvard church, set the notes for music, and a Massachusetts regiment made them first noted by singing them in Fort Warren in 1861.

The author of "Maryland, My Maryland," lives at Washington, and you may see him in the press galleries of Congress almost any day during the session. His name is James R. Randall, and he is a fine-looking, dark complexioned man of forty. He must have been very young when he wrote that beautiful poem. His ideas are broader now, and he is as liberal in views as any member of the gallery.

"America" was written by the Rev. Samuel Francis Smith in 1832, and it was first sung in Boston on the Fourth of July of that year. Like the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," it was inspired by a great tune, viz: "God Save the King." This tune is in use in nearly every country, and it has been ascribed to Handel. The writer of the words still lives in Massachusetts and he says he wrote the song at a sitting.

John Howard Payne's "Home, Sweet Home," was written for an opera, and he never got anything for it but his tombstone in Oak Hill Cemetery. It was first sung in the Covent Garden Theater in London, and made a big hit. One hundred thousand copies were sold the first year, and by the end of the second its publishers cleared ten thousand dollars from it.

Robert Treat Paine wrote "Ye Sons of Columbia" early in 1800, under the title of "Adams and Liberty," and he was paid seven hundred and fifty dollars for it. Paine was the son of one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. He was a Massachusetts man, and died in Boston in 1811.

Foster got fifteen thousand dollars for writing "Old Folks at Home." Charles Dibdin netted several weeks' board for writing "Poor Jack," while his publishers made twenty-five thousand dollars out of it. Crouch, the writer of "Kathleen Mavourneen," received twenty-five dollars for the production, and afterward became a begging tramp, while his publishers could have built a brown stone front out of its sales. George P. Morris wrote "Woodman, Spare That Tree," because the purchaser of a friend's estate wanted to cut down a tree which his grandfather had planted. His friend paid the purchaser ten dollars to spare it. Morris was touched by the story and wrote the song.

"Hail Columbia" was written by Joseph Hopkinson in the summer of 1798, and it was first called "The President's March." It was always sung when Washington came into the theatre, and one of the objects of its writing was the cultivation of a patriotic spirit among the people of the Republic. Joseph Hopkinson was twenty-eight years old when he wrote it. An autograph copy, penned in 1828, was shown at the Centennial. It was first set to music by a German music teacher, at Philadelphia, named Roth.

"The Star-Spangled Banner" was written by Francis Scott Key while watching the bombardment of Fort McHenry. He was in a small vessel among the British ships and he saw his countrymen win the victory. All through the fight he watched anxiously to see if the flag was still standing, looking for it at night by the flash of the bombshells and anxiously waiting the dawning. The song was printed in the Baltimore American eight days after the battle, under the title of "The Defense of Fort McHenry."

Many people will be surprised to know that "Yankee Doodle" is not of American origin. Even the words date back beyond the days of Queen Anne, and the tune is still older. "In the wars of the Roundheads," says Commodore Preble, in his book on the flag of the United States, to which, by the way, I am indebted for much of this information, "'Yankee Doodle,' or 'Nankee Doodle,' was applied in derision to Cromwell, and Professor Rimbault, a prominent physician of London, wrote the song directed at Cromwell under this title. The jingles of these two songs are about the same and the words are not much different. Dr. Schuchburg first introduced the song into this country in 1775, and this was also in contempt of the ragged colonial soldiers. At Concord and Lexington the British, when advancing to fight, bravely played "God Save the King," and after they were defeated the Yankees, as they watched their retreat, struck up 'Yankee Doodle.'"

"Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean" was written by Thomas Beckot, an English actor, who in 1879 was a teacher of music at Philadelphia. "The Blue and the Gray" was written by Francis Miles Finch, and delivered before a reunion of the Army of the Potomac. It was drawn out by the fact that the women of Columbus, Miss., strewed flowers on the graves of Confederate and Union soldiers alike. It was published in the Atlantic Monthly, September, 1867.

Joseph Rodman Drake wrote "The American Flag" when he was twenty-three years old, in 1818. It was written quickly and its author was not satisfied with the last verse. He showed the poem to Fitz-Greene Halleck saying: "Fitz, can't you suggest a better stanza?" Halleck sat down and wrote the four concluding lines and Drake incorporated them in his poem. Drake died at the age of twenty-five. His last poem was "The American Flag." He did not think much of his poems, and when on his deathbed, a friend asking him what should be done with them, he said: "O, burn them; they are quite valueless."

"Sheridan's Ride" was written by Buchanan Read. James E. Murdock, the actor and reader, claims to have incited it. He was reading at Pike's Opera House, in Cincinnati, shortly after Sheridan had made his famous ride, and he asked Read to write him a poem describing it. Read did so, and the result was the greatest effort of his life.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

Startling Experience.

Next to scarlet fever, there is no disease among children more dreaded by parents than whooping cough. It is liable to come at all seasons of the year; it exhausts the strength of the little ones, and physicians are often unable to check it. Mr. F. W. Harbaugh of the Telegram, Baltimore, Maryland, had six of his children, aged from six to thirteen years, prostrated with this malady at one and the same time. A complete cure was, however, effected by Red Star Cough Cure, and Mr. Harbaugh writes that the cough, which generally lasts nine weeks, left in four weeks, and he is confident it would have disappeared sooner if he had been aware of the existence of such a valuable remedy.

After a druggist has filled a prescription it belongs to him, and not the customer who brought it to his store.

The First Keen Twinge.

As the season advances, the pains and aches by which rheumatism makes itself known, are experienced after every exposure. It is not claimed that Hood's Sarsaparilla is a specific for rheumatism—we doubt if there is, or can be such a remedy. But the thousands benefited by Hood's Sarsaparilla, warrant us in urging others who suffer from rheumatism to take it before the first keen twinge.

The colored women of Mobile have organized an art association.

Gentle woman is so often the victim of sick headache that she hails as the dawn of a new era, the introduction of a medicine that is guaranteed as a sure cure. Mrs. Morris Tanner, of Hoboken, N. J., writes: "I have been a martyr to sick headache, the result of indigestion. One bottle of Mishler's Herb Bitters used according to directions, has cured me."

Many a man who had lost nerve, vigor and energy, has been cured by Hunt's Remedy.

Why continue the use of irritating powders, snuffs or liquids. Ely's Cream Balm, pleasant of application and a sure cure for catarrh and cold in head, can be had for 50c. at druggists. It is easily applied with the finger, is safe and pleasant and is curing the most obstinate cases. It gives relief at once.

Being a sufferer from chronic catarrh and having derived great benefit from the use of Ely's Cream Balm I can highly recommend it. Its sales are far in excess of all other catarrh remedies.—B. Franken, Druggist; Sigourney, Iowa.

Same Foolish People.

Allow a cough to run until it gets beyond the reach of medicine. They often say, Oh it will wear away, but in most cases it wears them away. Could they be induced to try the successful medicine called Kemp's Balsam, which we will sell on a positive guarantee to cure, they would immediately see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial size free. For sale by Baker & Hall, Tecumseh.

Woman's names adorn more than half the American sailing ships.

The three outlets of disease are the bowels, the skin and the kidneys. Regulate their action with the best purifying tonic, Burdock Blood Bitters.

The Rev. Wm. Stout, Wiarton, Ont. states: "After being ineffectually treated by seventeen different doctors for Scrofula and blood diseases, I was cured by Burdock Blood Bitters." Write him for proof.

Parker's Tonic kept in a home is a sentinel to keep sickness out. Used discretly, it keeps the blood pure, and the stomach, liver and kidneys in in working order. Coughs and colds vanish before it. It builds up the health. No wise mother will be without it.

Vassar girls ate 692 pounds of candy last year. Sweets to the sweet. But alas! they ate also forty bushels of onions.

Some genius proposes to introduce paper shirts. This might do for Japan but would prove a "big thing" for the doctors, because rheumatism, etc., would become frequent. If, however, people would keep Salvation Oil convenient, paper shirts might still be a success. It costs only 25 cents.

"Age cannot wither it nor custom stale its infinite variety." Flesh is hardly heir to an ache or pain which cannot be cured by using Salvation Oil.

CATAARH—A NEW TREATMENT.

From the Montreal Star.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 2,500 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination. In this accomplished he claims the Catarrh is practically cured and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The Application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.

CLINTON CHRONICLES.

Ed. VanDeMark came home from Detroit where he is attending court as a juryman, Saturday, and returned Tuesday.

Joe Steffenaski, the boy on trial for being implicated in the chicken robbery with his brother, John, and Sid McIntyre, was upon the calling of the adjourned suit, on Wednesday last, found guilty and sentenced to the house of correction four years, but an appeal was taken to the Circuit Court and he was bonded in the sum of $200, Jas. Hogan, Frank and Will Muir having gone bail for the lad. Considerable feeling is manifested for the boy as the neighbors all claim that he has heretofore shown himself worthy and upright.

Rhefuss & Amspoker, of Manchester, have opened a meat market in the Reynold's block, and have secured Charley Goodrich to attend to the wants of the public who favor them with their presence. Chas. has many friends in the community and is the right man in the right place, in this case.

Regular meeting of Lodge 179 F. & A. M., on Saturday evening next.

Robert Terryberry has been giving the old ashery building upon his lot, a new dressing up and it makes quite a respectable looking barn now.

Misses Lizzie Dillingham and Minnie Martin of Bridgewater, and Miss Aggie Kirk of Iron Creek, were guests of Miss Grace Spafford last week.

Mary C. McCollum, sister of J. E. McCollum of this place, arrived at her mother's in Manchester, last week, but too late to see her brother Emmett. She lives in Dakota.

Deputy Sheriff Burch came up from Adrian Saturday, and took under his charge one Patrick Redman, who is well known as Pat the Ditcher throughout Lenawee county. He had taken too much budge and became a wee-bit noisy, ludicrous and indecent on the streets, and Esquire Brown thought six months over to Detroit would improve him somewhat.

The hearse of J. S. Kinney, of Tecumseh, was called into requisition by Bainbridge & Hause last Wednesday, they having two funerals to attend upon that day.

David Woodward has employed two or three teams to draw moulding sand and they have been busy at that work for two days. That looks as though he was going to do some business in the line of castings yet. He says about fifty-two loads of nice sand were secured.

Ed. Sisson and Fred Taylor were in town last Sunday, and the latter remained over Monday, the guest of his cousins A. W. & Grace Spafford.

Thos. Roper had five men at work Monday in his pop-corn.

The exercises of the blue ribbon club at Town Hall last Saturday, were good, and were listened to by a large audience of admirers of this little temperance band.

The ladies of St. John's church are sparing no efforts in their preparation for the coming fair, which we understand is to take place about the 12th of next month, and if we are to judge by the occasions in the past, we are to be greeted with a special treat in way of bargains that should not be overlooked, besides an evening of general enjoyment. They understand it.

The majority of the force at work on the grist mill have finished the labor alloted to them and returned to their homes, leaving but the few to put on the finishing touches, and Clinton will soon boast of as good a roller mill as her sister villages in full operation.

Some persons may think from former mention of the coffee roasting establishment in preparation near the woolen mill, that the job was merely a trifling one, but it has been quite an undertaking, and is but barely completed now, but it has the appearance of having been well done, and should add still another laurel to that enterprise of those undertaking the sheme, as it is really a nice little manufactory and deserving of merit.

SPRINGVILLE SNUFF.

School commenced last Monday with Mr. Turrel as teacher.

Missionary social at Mr. and Mrs. C. Cooper's Thursday afternoon and evening.

J. C. Kinney has vacated the upper story in Henry Smith's house, but the rooms were immediately taken again by the school-master.

J. H. Smith spent Saturday and Sunday with relatives and friends at this place, and also helped to discourse the music at Brooklyn Rink Saturday evening. Come again, Joe.

The party given by Smith & Ayers last Friday eve. was a success socially, but the proprietors died about two in the ring. They are happy to say somebody made something out of it however.

School has commenced in district No. 8, with an average attendance thus far of 28 scholars. Miss Cynthia Monaghan is instructor.

Mrs. R. L. Rogers is making quite an extended visit among relatives in Penn.

There has been nothing done for over a week at the church. Been waiting for paper.

Mrs. M. Groger has tickets out for a hop Thanksgiving night.

Henry Daniels returned to Adrian College this week.

RIDGEWAY RACKET.

Plenty of corn to husk yet.

Our post office progresses finely.

Rumor says Detroit will build her post office after ours, when they build. Ridgeway gets there just the same.

Geo. D. Arner received the lithographs of Prest. Cleveland and Vice Prest. Hendricks, Monday. They are very fine.

Mr. Lank Smith of Macon, called on his brother, Ase Smith and family, Sunday.

Thanksgiving next week Thursday at which time many a turkey will gobble his last gobble, and man will gobble his first gobble.

Misses Belle Barlow and Lou Arner took a trip over to Adrian Tuesday to call on college friends.

Dr. D. W. Loree was at Detroit Saturday, and Sunday.

Quite a number of young people from Tecumseh attended the Oyster supper Friday night.

Miss Hannah Raymond of Dixon, Ill., arrived last week and will spend the winter with her sister, Mrs. Hall.

Miss Fannie Schwab has been h[illegible] for the past few days to witness the marriage of her sister Theresa. "We would say go thou and do likewise."

Miss Nellie Freer, who is attending school at Tecumseh, was at home over Sunday, being the first time in nine weeks.

Mrs. David McNair and Mrs. C. A. Sharp of Tecumseh, spent Saturday with Mr. and Mrs. Sharp.

Mrs. Potter and daughter Ada, of Tecumseh, visited Mrs. Coryell, Saturday.

Miss Sena Coryell spent Sunday in Tecumseh with her friend, Miss Potter.

Rev. L. and Mrs. Barns of Adrian, spent Saturday with Mrs. Sharp, her sister.

One night last week Mr. Frank Hering dreamed he was out hunting, got up in his sleep and fell down stairs, receiving some quite bad bruises, but nothing serious.

The attendance at the oyster supper Friday evening was all that could be expected, considering the state of the roads. The Society cleared $14, above all expenses, for which they are very grateful to their friends. The next social will be held at the home of the treasurer, Miss Ada Linn, next Friday evening.

Those persons who marred the walls in the class-room halls and vestibule of the church, last Friday night, had better look a little out, or they may get a free ride over the road. It is strange that persons who would like to be called gentlemen should disgrace and lower themselves by such doings. It is no one but loafers that would be guilty of such a miserable deed.

Our citizens were somewhat surprised last week Tuesday, to hear that Mrs. Fred Fagan had left her home and could not be found, but on Thursday the sheriff from Adrian presented Mrs. Fagan with a bill of divorce, she having taken oath to having been treated cruelly, and showing marks of violence, having her life threatened with a butcher knife. Moral: Never marry, for it is not all gold that glitters.

If you want to laugh, come out to the Literary entertainment Friday night, at Cottage Hall, and see Dr. Sharp, the quack doctor. There is being a charade prepared that is well worth the admission fee, and a song by two little girls, that will take the cake.

ADDISON ATOMS.

The editor of the Addison Courier has been presented with a half bushel of potatoes, and intimates that his cellar is too small to hold them. Brother Kempton should have secured a house with a cellar of as large a capacity as his stomach. It is said half a bushel of potatoes makes a very light meal for him.—Hudson Post.

Well yes—all prosperous news paper men are good feeders, and as the brethren of the Post initiated us into the work, we expect to grow more and more like them until we can surround double the quantity named, without injury to our pants, buttons or business facilities either.

Uncle A. P. Austin arrived home last week from Wedgwood New York, where he has been stopping since the burial of his wife.

F. C. Parker is building a new woodshed and shop at the rear of his house. It will make quite an improvement to the place.

Miss Birdie Bacon went to Hudson Sunday, where she will spend a few days visiting friends, prior to going with her parents to Virginia.

ONSTED ODDS.

S. C. Stacy of Tecumseh, was in town last Saturday.

S. D. Evans will soon move into his house a mile south of the village.

David Corwin has sold his wagon-shop to Jacob Russell, who will take possession January first.

Dike Daniels has his house nearly ready to occupy, and will probably soon be living in it.

Three of our citizens have been married within the last two weeks, and dame rumor says that more will follow soon.

Arrangements have been made so that in the future we shall get the weather reports daily at this place. The signal flags will be displayed from the top of the elevator.

DEVILS' LAKE DOINGS.

Joseph Turner has gone an a visit to Morenci.

Born, to wife of Walter Marshall, a son.

Mrs. Ferrell has been shingling her house.

The frame of the elevator is up.

John McGee was taken sick last Tuesday and closed the school.

James Wheaton and Ada Briggs were married last Sunday.

A. Bedell has commenced plowing for corn.

James Turner went to Adrian this week on business.

Lewis Swartout was the guest of John Swartout this week.

The post office is completed and ready for business. Now rent you a box.

The rainy weather has stopped the work on the elevator.

FARMERS' SOCIAL CLUB.

The Farmer's Social Club met Friday evening, Nov. 13th, at Jacob Everharts. The literary portion of the program was not full, as Mrs. A. G. Hall and Mr. E. L. Russell were not present. The little people on the program fulfilled their portion creditably, setting an example worthy to be followed by the older members.

The discussion was very animated, but the weight of opinion seemed to be in favor of farms of 120 or 160 acres. When farms consisted of 40 or 80 acres the expenses were quite liable to equal the income, consequently there was little or no profit; but the same machinery used on 80 acres would run 160 acres equally well, with the added expense of an extra hand, while the income would be greater, thus leaving a margin in favor of profit. When farms consisted of more than 160 or 200 acres there was much added expense, the seasons were too short, help too unreliable, there was land left uncultivated, and many things neglected which decreased the profit.

The next meeting will be held at Uncle John Rector's, Friday evening, Nov. 27th.

PROGRAM.

Music—Grant Schreder and Henry Horton.
Select Reading—Mrs. A. B. Bangs.
Recitation—Grace Gillespie.
Essay—Mr. E. L. Russell.
Chip Basket—Mrs. R. B. Gillespie.
Music—Grant and Henry.
Acting Charade—Mrs. F. C. Rector and Mrs. J. Fisher.
Music—The choir.
Question—Which is the more profitable, shallow or deep plowing? Discussion opened by A. B. Bangs, followed by R. B. Gillespie.

Let every body come and fill Uncle John's house. He will make all welcome, and remember, to come early as it tries our Presidents' good nature to be so late in opening the meeting.

F. V. HORTON, Sec.
Mrs. F. C. RECTOR, Reporter.

The mail route, No. 24104, between Tecumseh and Macon by way of Lake Ridge has been changed. Instead of going from Tecumseh to Lake Ridge and thence to Macon, it will hereafter leave Macon at 10 A. M., arrive at Tecumseh at 11 A. M.; leaving at 12:30 P. M., arrive at Macon via. Lake Ridge at 3 P. M. This will give Macon the benefit of getting their mail away sooner and receiving it from the noon train every day. Mr. Philetus Snedicor, the carrier, is moving to Macon this week.

The Adrian Record says:

Why not build up the city? Why not provide work for working men? Why not increase the trade of our merchants? Why not?

And echo answers: Whine not.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT, NOVEMBER 1, '85.

For this report returns have been received from 892 correspondents representing 881 townships. Six hundred of these returns are from 406 townships in the southern four tiers of counties.

The weight of the measured bushel of wheat of the crop of 1885 is 100 per cent of full weight, or sixty pounds.

The area seeded to wheat this fall in the southern four tiers of counties is estimated at 101 per cent and in the northern counties 102 per cent of the area seeded in 1884, indicating a present acreage in the southern counties of 1,276,359 acres, and in the northern counties of 222,664 acres. The condition of wheat November 1 was 96, the comparison being with vitality and growth of average years.

Compared with 1884 there is a decrease of about one-tenth in the area of clover seed harvested, and of 5 per cent in the yield per acre.

The acreage in potatoes this year is not quite as large as in 1884, and the yield per acre is fifteen to twenty per cent less than in that year. A few fields in the State have been plowed up or abandoned because of rot, but in many localities, and especially where grown on sandy soil, the crop has suffered little injury from this cause. The rot is reported by 161 correspondents in the southern four tiers of counties, representing every county in this section except Branch and Cass, and by 71 correspondents, representing 19 counties in the northern section of the State. The total loss by rot will amout to about one-fifth of the crop.

Reports have been received of the quantity of wheat marketed by farmers during the month of September at 331 elevators and mills. Of these, 272 are in the southern four tiers of counties, which is forty-eight per cent of the whole number of elevators and mills in these counties. The total number of bushels reported marketed is 2,153,491, of which 419,677 bushels were marketed in the first or southern tier of counties; 652,976 bushels in the second tier; 380,128 bushels in the third tier; 527,088 bushels in the fourth tier; and 173,622 bushels in the counties north of the southern four tiers. At 21 elevators and mills, or 6 per cent of the whole number from which reports have been received, their was no wheat marketed during the month.

The total number of bushels of wheat reported marketed in August, September, and October, is 6,241,843, which is 2,608,027 bushels more than reported marketed during the same months in 1884.

The yield of corn in the southern counties is about 32 bushels per acre, and in the northern counties 28 bushels per acre, a bushel less in each section than estimated in September. The proportion of soft corn is greater than usual owing to damage by frost as mentioned by correspondents in October.

AT THE BARS.

I wait in the dusk at the bars in the lane,
Waiting and watching at close of day.
When the world is stilled in the solemn hour
As it yields for a space to thy night's brief power,
And the moonshine chases the daylight away.

In the mystical purple of twilight the hills
And valleys are wrapped, and the forces of night
Have conquered the day and driven him far
To the west, where the sentinel evening star
Keeps a watchful eye on his sullen flight.

From the darkening meadows the tinkling bells
Ring low and clear on the perfumed air,
Where a thousand delicate odors blend
From flower and bud that to Heaven ascend,
An offering purer than human prayer.

The querulous plaint of the whippoorwill,
Hiding away in its lonely nest
Quivers and thrills with a note of pain,
Like a lover mourning who loves in vain,
Or a lost soul crying to Heaven for rest.

Why cometh she not, my beauty, my Bess!
With the tender eyes, so gentle and kind;
She's late, even now with noiseless fall
O'er the dull earth settles a gossamer pall,
And the bat darts by on the rising wind.

With a nameless dread that I can not quell,
And a fancy filled with doubts and fears,
I peer in vain where the ghostly trees
Frolic and play with the wooing breeze
And the winding path on the hill appears.

At the bars I wait, though the dews are falling.
She will surely come though the hour be late;
Hark! there's a step on the path coming near.
Aha! and a call that I know, low and clear.
So well does my brown beauty know I will wait.

She is coming at last! How the glad earth smiles
And the breezes of Heaven grow sweeter;
See the clover heads bend in a dying caress
As they tremble and bow beath her feet's light press.
On the path where I'm waiting to meet her

Her foot falls as light as the dew on the grass
So quiet and shy as she comes to my side.
As her brown dreamy eyes look so softly in mine,
They rival the glow of the calm star shine.
Where's any can equal my Bess in her pride?

All day she has gathered, in meadow and wood,
Sweet grasses and flowers and buttercups white;
But now, in the gloaming, when the mists lie low,
On the river brink and the faint stars show
She comes to me here in the fading light.

So, I let down the bars and my pet comes through;
With a step that a Duchess might envy, and now,
With a grateful moo and a musical low,
She enters, so glossy and stately and slow,
My three hundred dollar prize Alderney cow.

LOST HER FACULTY.

The Minister and the Arithmetician—Letty's Escapade.

A strong soft south wind had been blowing and the trees had dropped nearly all their leaves. There were left only a few brownish-gold ones dangling on the elms and hardly any at all on the maples. There were many trees on the street, and the fallen leaves were heaped high. Mrs. Wilson Torry's little door-yard was ankle-deep with them. The air was full of their odor, which could affect the spirit like a song, and mingled with it was the scent of grapes.

The minister had been calling on Mrs. Torry that afternoon, and now he stood facing her on the porch, taking leave. He was very young, and this was his first parish. He was small and light and mild-looking; still he had considerable nervous volubility. The simple village women never found him hard to entertain.

Now, all at once, he made an exclamation, and fumbled in his pocket for a folded paper. "There," said he, "I nearly forgot this. Mr. Plainfield requested me to hand this to you, Mrs. Torry. It is a problem which he has been working over; he gave it to me to try, and wanted me to propose, when I called, that you should see what you could do with it."

She seized it eagerly. "Well, I'll see what I can do; but you an' he musn't make no great calculations on me. You know I don't know anything about the 'rithmetic books an' the rules they hev nowadays; but I'm willin' to try."

"Oh, you'll have it done while Mr. Plainfield and I are thinking of it, Mrs. Torry."

"You 'aint neither of you done it, then?"

"He had not at last accounts, and—I have not," replied the young man, laughing, but coloring a little.

The old lady's eyes gleamed as she looked at him, then at the paper. "I dare say I can't make head or tail of it," said she, "but I'll see what I can do by-an'-by."

She had something of a childish air as she stood there. She was slender, and so short that she was almost dwarfed; her shoulders were curved a little by spinal disease. She had a small round face, and a mouth which widened out innocently into smiles as she talked. Her eyes looked out directly at one, like a child's; over them loomed a high forehead with bulging temples covered with deep wrinkles.

"You have always been very fond of mathematics, haven't you, Mrs. Torry?" said the minister, in his slow retreat.

"Law, yes. I can't remember the time when I wa'n't crazy to cipher.

"Arithmetic is a very fascinating study, I think," remarked the minister, trying to slide easily off the subject, and down the porch steps.

"'Tis to me. An' there's somethin' I was thinkin' about this very forenoon—seein' all them leaves on the ground made me, I s'pose. It's always been a sight of comfort to me to count. When I was a little girl I'd 'most rather count than play. I used to sit down an' count by the flour together. I remember the pewter porringer I had, that I used to fill up with beans an' count 'em. Well, it come into my head this forenoon what a blessed privilege it would be to count up all the beautiful things in this creation. Just think of countin' all them red an' gold-colored leaves, an' all the grapes an' apples in the fall; an' when it come to the winter, all the flakes of snow an' the sparkles of frost; an' when it come to the spring, all the flowers, and blades of grass, an' the little new light green leaves. I don't know but you'll think it ain't exactly reverent, but it does seem to me that I'd rather do that than sing in the other world. Maybe somebody does have to do the countin'; mebbe it's singin' for some."

She stared up into the warm blue air, in which the bare branches of the trees glistened with a sweet, solemn wonder in her old face.

The minister in a bewildered way pondered all the old woman had said, as he rustled down the street. Later, Mr. Plainfield (the young high-school teacher) and he would have a discussion over it. They often talked over Mrs. Wilson Torry.

After her caller had gone, the old woman entered the house. On the left of the little entry was the best room, where she had been entertaining the minister; on the right, the kitchen. A young girl was in there eating an apple. She looked up when Mrs. Torry stood in the door.

"He's gone, ain't he?" said she.

"Why, Letty, then did you come?"

"A few minutes ago. School's just out. I came in the back door an' heard him talking, so I kept still."

"Why didn't you come in an' see him?"

"Oh, I didn't want to see him. What you got there, grandma?"

"Nothin' but a sum the minister brought me to do. He an' Mr. Plainfield have been workin' over it."

"Couldn't they do it?"

"Well, he said they hadn't neither of 'em done it yet."

"Is it awful hard?"

"I don't know. I 'ain't looked at it yet."

"Let me see. He didn't get it out of any of our books, I know. We never had anything like this."

"I s'pose it's one he come across somewhere. I guess I'll sit down and look at it two or three minutes."

An old bureau stood against the wall; on it were arranged four religious newspapers in the exact order of their issues, the latest on top, Farmers' Almanacs for the last four years filed in the same way, and a slate surmounted by an old arithmetic. The pile of newspapers was in the middle, the slate and almanacs were on either side.

Letty, soberly eating her apple, watched her grandmother getting out the arithmetic and slate. She was a pretty young girl; her small, innocent face, in spite of its youthful roundness and fairness, reminded people of Mrs. Torry's.

"I don't think much of Mr. Painfield, anyhow," said she, as the click of her grandmother's pencil on the slate began; "and he knows I don't. He overheard me telling Lizzie Bascom so to-day. He came right up behind us on the street, and I know he heard. You ought to have seen his face!"

"I don't see what you've got agin him," remarked Mrs. Torry, absently, as she dotted down figures.

"I haven't much of anything that I know of against him, only I don't think he's much of a teacher. He can't do examples as quickly as you, I know, and I don't think a man has any business to be school-teaching if he can't do examples as quickly as an old lady."

Mrs. Torry stopped her work and fixed her round, unwinking eyes full on the girl's face.

"Letty Torry, there's some things you don't understand. You never will understand 'em, if you live to be as old as Methuselah, as far as that's concerned. But you'll get so you know the things air. Sometimes it don't make any difference if anybody's ignorant, an' 'aint got any book-learning; air old, an' h'd a hard-workin' life. There'll be somethin' in 'em that everybody else 'ain't got; somethin' that growed, an' didn't have to be learned. I've got this faculty; I can cipher. It 'ain't nothin' agin Mr. Plainfield if he 'ain't got it; it's a gift."

Her voice took on a solemn tone and trembled. Letty looked at her with childish wonder. "Well," said she, with a subdued manner, "he has no right to teach, anyhow, without it. I guess I'll have another apple. I was real hungry."

So Letty ate another apple silently, while her grandmother worked at the problem again.

She did not solve it as easily as usual. She worked till midnight, her little lamp drawn close to her on the kitchen table; then she went to bed, with the answer still in doubt.

"It ain't goin' to do for me to set up any longer," said she, forlornly, as she replaced the slate on the bureau. "I shall be sick if I do. But I declare I don't see what's got into me. I hope I ain't losin' my faculty."

She could not sleep much. The next morning, as soon as their simple breakfast was eaten and Letty had gone to school, she seated herself with her slate and pencil.

When Letty came home at noon she found her grandmother still at work, and no dinner ready.

"I do declare! cried the old woman. "You don't mean to say you're home, Letty! It ain't twelve o'clock, is it?"

"Course it is; quarter past."

"I 'ain't got one mite of dinner ready, then. I've been so took up with the sum I hadn't no idea how the time was goin'. I don't know what you will do, child."

"Oh, I'll get some bread and milk, grandma; just as soon have it as anything else. Got the problem done?"

"No, I 'aint. I feel real bad about your dinner. I'll kindle up a fire now and fry you an egg—there be time enough."

"I'd rather have bread and milk."

After Letty had gone to school for the afternoon, and Mrs. Torry had been working fruitlessly for an hour longer, she dropped her pencil.

"I declare," said she, "I'm afraid I am losin' my faculty!"

Tears stood in her eyes. "I won't give up that I am, anyhow," said she, and took the pencil again.

When Letty returned, in the latter part of the afternoon, she scarcely knew it, with the full meaning of the word. She saw her, but her true consciousness was so full of figures that Letty's fair face could only look in at the door.

Letty ran in hastily; a young girl was waiting for her outside. "Oh, grandma," cried Letty. "Lizzie's going to Ellsworth to do an errand for her mother; she's coming back on the last train. Can't I go with her?"

Her grandmother stared at her for a minute and made no answer.

"She's got tickets for both of us. Can't I go, grandma?"

"Yes."

Letty smoothed her hair a little, and put on her best hat; then she went.

"Good-bye," said she, looking back at the intent old figure; but she got no answer.

"Grandma's so taken up with the example she's got that she doesn't know anything," she told her friend when she was outside. "She didn't answer when I said good-bye; she forgot to get dinner to-day, too."

Mrs. Torry worked on and on. She never looked up nor thought of anything else until it grew so dark that she could not see her figures. "I'll have to light the lamp," said she, with a sigh.

After it was lit she went to work again. She never thought of wanting any supper, though she had eaten nothing since morning.

The kitchen clock struck seven—Letty should have been home then—eight, and nine, but she never noticed it. A few minutes afterward some one knocked on the door. She ciphered on. Then the knocks were repeated, louder and quicker.

"Somebody's knockin' I guess," she muttered and opened the door. Mr. Plainfield stood there. He was a handsome young man with rosy cheeks; he was always smiling. He looked past her into the room inquiringly.

"Is Letty at home?" said he.

"Letty?"

"Yes, Letty. Is she at home?"

"Why, yes, she's here. Letty!"

"Has she gone to bed?"

"Why, yes, I guess she has." Mrs. Torry opened the door at the foot of the stairs. "Letty! Letty!"

"I guess she must be asleep," said she, turning to the young man, who had stepped in to the kitchen. "Want me to go up and see? Did you want anything partickler?"

He hesitated. "If you had just as soon—I—had something special——"

The old woman climbed the steep, uncarpeted stairs, feeble, with a long pat on every step. She came down faster, reckless of her trembling uncertainty. "She ain't there! Letty's gone! Where is she?"

"You know she went to Ellsworth with Lizzie?"

"No, I didn't."

"Why, she said something to you about it, didn't she?"

"I don't know whether she did or not." "Lizzie just told me that she missed her in the depot. She left her there for a minute while she went back for something she had forgotten. When she came back she was gone. The train was all ready, and Lizzie thought she must be on it, so she got on herself. She did not see her in the depot here, and has been crying about it and afraid to tell till just now. I came right over as soon as I knew about it."

"O, Letty! Letty! Where's Letty? O, Mr. Plainfield, you go an' find her! Go right off. You will, won't you? Letty allers liked you."

"I always liked Letty," said the young man, broadly. "I'll find her—don't you worry."

"You'll go right off now?"

"Of course I will; I won't wait a minute."

"O, Letty, Letty! Where is she? What shall I do? That little girl—a thing—and she was always one of the frightened kind—out all alone; an' it's night! She never went to Ellsworth alone in all her full life. She didn't know nothin' about the town, an' she didn't have a cent of money in her pocket."

"I'll send Mrs. Bascom over to stay with you," Mr. Plainfield called back as he hurried off.

Sam Mrs. Bascom came poking her white, nervous face in the door inquiringly. "Has she 'ain't come?"

"No—O, Mis' Bascom, what shall I do?"

"O, Mis' Torry, I do feel so bad about it! I don't know what to do! If Lizzie had only told before! but there she was upstairs crying, and afraid to tell. I've been scolding her, but she felt so bad I had to stop. She called me, an' told me finally; an' I guess 'twa'n't long before Mr. Plainfield started off, to find out if she was home. It was lucky he was boarding with us. He'll find her if anybody can; he's as quick as lightning. He turned white's a sheet when I told him."

"O, Mis' Bascom!"

"Now, don't give up so, Mis' Torry. He'll find her. She can't be very far off. You'll see her walking in here first thing you know. He's got a real fast team, an' he's started for Ellsworth new. He went past me like a str-ak when I was coming up the road. He'll have her back safe and sound before morning."

"O, Letty! Letty! O, what shall I do? It's my own fault, every mite of it's my own fault! 'Tis; you don't know nothin' about it. The minister brought me a sum, he an' Mr. Plainfield had been workin' on, to do, yesterday afternoon, an' I jest sat an' ciphered half the night, an' all day. I didn't know no more what Letty asked me, when she came in from school, than nothin' at all. I didn't know nothin' but them figgers, an' now Letty's lost, an' it's my fault."

"Why, you might have let her gone if you'd known."

"I guess I shouldn't let her gone all alone with your Lizzie, to come home after dark in the last train, little delicate thing as she was. I guess I shouldn't: an' I guess I should have started up an' done something, if I'd known, when she wasn't here at train time. I didn't get the sum done, an' I'm glad of it; it seems to me jest as if I was losin' my faculty as I'm growin' older, an' I hope I am."

"Now don't talk so, Mis' Torry. Sit down an' try to be calm. You'll be sick."

"I guess there ain't much bein' calm. I tell you what 'tis, Mis' Bascom, I've been a wicked woman. I've been thinkin' so much of this faculty I've had for cipherin' that I've set it afore everything—I hev. Only yesterday that poor child didn't hev any dinner but crackers an' milk, 'cause I was so took up with the sum that I forgot it. An' she was jest as patient as a lamb about it; said she'd rather hev crackers an' milk than anything else. O, dear! dear!"

"Don't cry, Mis' Torry."

"I can't help it. It don't make no difference what folks are born with a faculty for—whether it's cipherin', or singin', or writin' poetry—the love that's betwixt human beings an' the help that's betwixt 'em ought to come first. I've known it all the time, but I've gone agin it, an' now I've got my pay. What shall I do?"

Mrs. Bascom remained with her all night, but she could not pacify her in the least. She was nearly distracted herself. She was fearful that her Lizzie might be blamed.

The next day people flocked to the house to inquire if there was any news from Letty; and to comfort her grandmother. Sympathy seemed fairly dripping like fragrant oil from these simple, honest hearts; but the poor old woman got no refreshing influence from it. She kept on her old strain in their ears. She had lost Letty, and it was all her own fault, and what should she do! Mr. Plainfield did not come home. The minister took his place in school. Nothing was heard until noon; then a telegram from the teacher came. He thought he was on Letty's track, he said; they should hear again.

Next day there was a second message: Letty was safe; coming home as soon as possible. The following day passed then, and not another word came. The old grandmother's faith and hope seemed to have deserted her. She knew Letty was not found; she never would be found. She and Mr. Plainfield were both lost now. Something dreadful had happened to both of them.

"The worst of it is," she told Mrs. Bascom one afternoon, with a fierce indignation at herself, "I can't help thinkin' about that awful sum now after all that's happened. Them figgers keep troopin' into my head right in the midst of my thinkin' about Letty. It's all I can do to let that slate alone, an' not take it off the bureau. But I won't—I won't if it kills me not to."

On the fourth day after Letty's disappearance, between six and seven o'clock in the evening, Mrs. Torry was sitting alone in her kitchen. The last sympathizer had gone home to eat her supper.

The distressed old woman had drank a cup of tea; that was all she would touch. The pot was still on the stove. There was a soft yellow light from the lamp over the room. The warm air was full of the fragrance of boiling tea.

Mrs. Torry sat looking over at the bureau. She would have looked the same way if she had been starving and seen food there.

"O," she whispered, "If—I could—only work on that sum a little while, it does seem as if 'twould comfort me more'n anything! O Lord! I wonder if I was to blame? 'Twas the way I was made, an' I couldn't help that. P'haps I should hev let Letty gone, an' she'd been lost, anyway. I wonder if I hev lost my faculty?"

She sat there looking over at the slate. At last she rose and started to cross the room. Midway she stopped.

"O, what am I doin'? Letty's lost, an' I'm goin' to cipherin'! S'pose she should come in an' ketch me? She'd be so hurt she'd never get over it. She wouldn't think I cared anything about her."

She stood looking at the slate and thinking for a moment. Then her face settled into a hard calm.

"Letty won't come back—she won't never come back. I might as well cipher as anything else."

She went across the room, got the slate and pencil, and returned to her seat. She had been ciphering for a minute or so when a sound outside caused her to start and stop. She sat with mouth open and chin trembling, listening. The sound came nearer; it was at the door. Of all the sweet sounds which had smote that old woman's ears since her birth—songs of birds, choral hymns, Sabbath bells—there had been none so sweet as this. It was Letty's thin girlish treble which she heard just outside the door.

For a second, as she sat listening, her face was rapt, angelic; in spite of its sallowness and wrinkles it might have figured in an altar-piece. Then it changed. The slate was in her lap. What would Letty think?

It was all passing swiftly; the door-latch rattled, she slipped the slate under her gingham apron, and sat still.

"O, poor grandma!" cried Letty, running in; "you've been frightened 'most to death about me, haven't you?" She bent over her grandmother and laid her soft pretty cheek against hers.

"O, Letty! I didn't think you'd ever come back."

"I have; but I did have the dreadfulest time. I got carried 'way out West on an express train. Just think of it! I got on the wrong train while I was waiting for Lizzie. I was frightened almost to death But Mr. Plainfield telegraphed ahead. He found out where I was going, and they took me to a hotel; and then he came for me. You haven't said anything to Mr. Plainfield, grandma."

The young man was standing smiling behind Letty. She looked astonished when her grandmother did not rise to speak to him, but sat perfectly still as she uttered some broken thanks.

"Why, grandma, you ain't sick, are you?" said she.

"No—I ain't sick," said her grandmother, with a meek tone.

When Mr. Plainfield left, in a few moments, Letty gave a half-defiant, half-ashamed glance at her grandmother, and followed him out, closing the door.

When she returned Mrs. Torry was standing by the table pouring out a cup of tea for her. The slate was in the usual place on the bureau.

"Grandma," said Letty, blushing innocently, "I thought I ought to say something to Mr. Plainfield, you know. I hadn't, and I knew he heard what I said to Lizzie that day. I thought I ought to ask his pardon, when he'd done so much for me. I've made up my mind that I do like him. There's other things besides doing arithmetic examples."

"I guess there is, child. Them things is all second. I think I'd rather have a man who hadn't got any special faculty, if I was goin' to get married."

"Nobody said anything about getting married, grandma."

Pretty soon Letty went to bed. She was worn out with her adventures.

"Ain't you going too, grandma?" asked she, turning around, lamp in hand at the foot of the stairs.

"Pretty soon, child; pretty soon. I've—got a little somethin' I want to do first."

The grandmother sat up till nearly morning working over the problem. Once in a while she would lay down her slate and climb upstairs and peep into Letty's little peaceful girl-chamber to see if she was safe.

"If I have got that dear child safe, and 'aint lost my faculty, it's more'n I deserve," muttered she, as she took her slate the last time.

The next evening the minister came over. "So Letty's come," he said, when Mrs. Torry opened the door.

"Yes, Letty's come, and—I've got that sum, you gave me, done."—Harper's Magazine.

SCAB IN SHEEP.

A Remedy Which May Produce a Permanent Cure.

To one hundred gallons of water use twenty-five pounds flowers of sulphur and ten pounds of quick lime. The sulphur can be put into tank as soon as water is pumped. The lime should be slacked in a separate barrel and the liquid poured into the boiling vat, taking care that no slaggy pieces of lime will cake upon the bottom of the iron boiler. The water should be well boiled before letting it out in the dipping vat, and time allowed for it to cool before dipping. This preparation usually can be made the day before the sheep are to be washed, and more water added to the boiling vat, keeping the mixture in proportion as above stated. A pen in the form of a letter V, large enough to hold fifty sheep, should receive the sheep at the end of the dipping vat. Each sheep, when incrustation or yellow dandruff is seen on flesh, must be thoroughly scarified with a curry-comb, or some hard brush, with frequent applications of the liquid, used at from 110 degrees to 125 degrees Fahr., and, for fear of getting too hot, not above the degree last mentioned. We are now ready to dip, which, after tests are made, is to be commenced slowly, and continued till all the flock are dipped. Rushing sheep through a vat to see how many can be dipped in a day will only double the care and expense of attending to the flocks, while the chances are that the disease will continue to infect the sheep and all the work must be done again. After treating, they must be taken to a range where they have no infected sheep, and be fed with salt and sulphur in proportion of one part sulphur to twelve parts salt.—Sheep Breeder.

Velvets and Plush.

Plain velvets are so largely imported that of themselves they would constitute a "velvet season," but to these are added striped and figured velvets, and the beaded and embroidered velvets that are to form the combinations with plain velvet or with uncut velvet costumes. A plush or lead-colored costume, with the front beaded with lead beads, will be a stylish choice for autumn and winter, but the still larger importations of brown velvets both for dresses and bonnets point to these warmer browns as a more certain choice for a winter toilet. The use of carved wood beads in brown shades on brown velvet is a novelty for the front breadth, the plastron, collar, and cuffs of brown velvet dresses. There are also many brown wool laces for such dresses, and the velvet bonnets to accompany such toilettes have wooden beads forming the coronet or edging the brim, while many tinsel threads are employed in embroidering the crown. While brown remains a leading color, gilt will not be entirely banished, yet the best dealers import it sparingly, giving the preference to tinsel threads of many shades. The shaded plushes are shown in brown and gray tints, some of which are called tiger plushes, and others merely ombre, but these are shaded in stripes or in close patterns instead of all the way across from selvedge to selvedge as they formerly were. Next the beaded velvet fronts there are applique velvets that have the effect of transparents when put on wool or silk of contrasting color; these come in side panels or in a single front breadth, or a foot border, and with the necessary garniture for the basque.—Harper's Bazar.

A Pretty Anecdote.

The prettiest of literary anecdotes has been related by William Grimm, one of the pair of famous story-tellers. One day a little girl rang their bell and met him in the hall with the words: "Are you the Mr. Grimm that writes the pretty tales?" "Yes, I and my brother." "And that of the clever little tailor who married the princess?" "Yes, certainly." "Well," said the child, producing the book, "it is said here that every one who doesn't believe it must pay him a thaler. Now, I don't believe that a Princess ever married a tailor. I haven't so much as a thaler, but here is a groschen and please say I hope to pay the rest by degrees." Just then Jacob came up, and the brothers had an interesting interview with the little dame; but they could not persuade her to take away the groschen which she had laid on the table.—The Household.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

Works through the blood, regulating, toning and invigorating all the functions of the body.

Ringworm Humor and Salt-Rheum.

RAYNHAM, MASS., Aug. 12, 1878.

C. I. Hood & Co.: Gentlemen— * * * * I have had ringworm humor and salt-rheum so badly that my body was covered with raw sores, so also, my head and face. I have had any number of doctors in the last seven years, and none of them could cure me. One day my mother was in the city of Taunton, and found one of your cook books, and in reading it I found many people testifying to cures from the use of your Sarsaparilla and Olive Ointment. I felt forced to try it, although I had seen many things advertised that never did me any good. I have now taken two small bottles and one large one of Sarsaparilla, and used three boxes of Ointment. I now call myself cured. Nothing can be seen of the humor but the dim outlines of the sores. I shall take two more bottles, and then the cure will be complete.

I am gratefully yours,
EDGAR F. WHITMAN.

Biliousness, Sick Headache.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gents—Please send me by express two bottles HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA and a few Cook Books for distribution. Your preparation has worked wonders in the case of my wife, who has been troubled with sick headache and biliousness for years. She only took one-half teaspoonful at a dose, and has not been so well for five years as now. She found that within a week after taking it she felt very much better, and is now entirely free from these severe headaches. She has not taken any of any account since last spring, and what little she had is lent to do some others some good, and we must have it in the house.

Yours truly,
HOMER B. NASH.

—The time may come when politics will mean all that is noble and good: when a small boy will break an apple in two and give his little sister the biggest half; when a tramp will work, and a stray dog won't bite; but the day will never dawn when a fly can tickle a drowsy man's nose without getting itself disliked.—Chicago Ledger.

—"I attended two theaters the first night I was in New York," wrote a rural buck to his fond parents, "and three balls the next. Had a glorious time the first, and only got two dollars on my watch the next." The unsophisticated old people are still wondering what he meant.—Binghamton Republican.

—According to the Hartford Courant the Consul-General at London, ex-Governor Waller, of Connecticut, is a man to whom we are indebted for the felicitous and now familiar word, "mugwump." During an exciting political canvass he made a visit to Hartford for the purpose of propitiating some malcontent Democrats. In a private letter to Judge Birdsall he mentioned the fact of his mission to that city, and stated that he had spent a day there "with the mugwumps." The publication of the correspondence was the means of introducing the word into general use.

—When Mr. Justice Hawkins, of the English Queen's Bench, was a leader at the bar, he appeared in a shipping case before the late Baron Channel, who was a little shaky with his aspirates. The name of the vessel about which the dispute had arisen was Hannah; but Hawkins' "junior," in utter desperation, said to him: "Is the ship the Anna or the Hannah, for his Lordship says one thing and every one else says another?" "The ship," said Hawkins, in reply, "was named the Hannah, but the H has been lost in the chops of the Channel."

—Cocoanut cellulose is a new substance, and if it possesses the quality claimed for it, England may go back to her wooden walls with safety and beat up her self-destructive rams for old iron. The patentees claim that a ship can not be sunk by shot or shell if only she has taken the precaution of coming into the fight with this peculiar tissue as a great coat. When a shot, no matter what its dimensions, strikes the side of a frigate the carpenter and his mates need not jump to cram in the old-time plugs, for the cellulose immediate closes, and a drop of water will not enter.—Philadelphia Press.

SHOEMAKING.

A Trade Which Flourished Long Before St. Crispin's Time.

Rude drawings were seen on the walls of Thebes (B. C. 1405) of shoemakers performing their tasks, showing the trade to be extremely ancient as well as eminently respectable; and we read in Homer of princes manufacturing their own shoes. They have been made of various material—hides, flax, silk, cloth, wood, iron, silver and gold—and in great variety of shapes, plain and ornamental. Among the Jews they were made of leather, linen and wood. Soldiers made them of brass and iron tied with thongs. To put off the shoes was an act of veneration. The Asiatics and Egyptians wore shoes made out of the bark of the papyrus. Among the Greeks the shoe generally reached to the mid leg, like what we now call "boots." Ladies, as a mark of distinction, wore sandals—a sort of loose shoe, something like the modern slipper. The Roman shoes were of two kinds—the calceus, which covered the whole foot, and the soela, which covered only the sole, and was fastened with thongs. Ladies of rank wore white and sometimes red shoes; other women wore black. In the ninth and tenth centuries the greatest princes of Europe wore wooden shoes, or wooden soles instead, fastened with leather thongs. In the eleventh century the upper part of the shoe was made of leather and the sole of wood. The Saxons wore shoes, or such, with thongs. In the year 1090, in the reign of William Rufus, the great dandy Robert was called "the hornet," because he wore shoes with long points, stuffed, turned up and twisted like horns. Shoes of this kind became fashionable, and the toes continued to increase in length until, in the time of Richard II., in 1390, they had attained such an enormous extent as to be fastened to the garter by a chain of silver or gold. The clergy declared vehemently against this extravagance; but the fashion continued, even for several centuries.—Chicago Interior.

The following from the Chattanooga Times shows the conservative tendency of one of the leading papers of the South.

The official head of the party has the chance of honorably doing what he can to reform the civil service and thus hold the confidence and goodwill of the great mass of educated, honorable, non-office hunting people, or a surrender to the leaders of the slums, and the day he should make the surrender would be the practical end of Democratic ascendancy. Democracy can hold its own by giving the country better and cleaner government. It would be both humiliating and disgraceful to surrender, abandon duty and go back on honorable pledges. If the party must be put out let it be for doing its duty and standing by its promises.

The New York Evening Post publishes the following communication from a workingman:

I saw in yesterday's Evening Post that the free traders and revenue reformers who meet on the 11th and 12th insts. at Chicago are to deal chiefly with the duties on raw materials, which I think is proper; to commence at the foundation. Every cent of duty on raw materials is at the expense of the workingman.

People also should know that a tariff "for revenue only," which few ordinary men understand, means to tax the people to support the government only, while the amiable sounding word "protection" means to concentrate the result of labor in the hands of the few at the expense of the many. We have "free trade" already, but only in one article—i. e., so-called cheap pauper labor, imported by the thousands to compete with American labor.

Of the civil service law the Albany Argus, which is supposed to represent Secretary Manning, has recently said:

"Civil service reform has come to stay. There will be no halt, no backward step, under the present administration. The offices have grown to such an extent and the desire to hold office has become so general that some barrier has become necessary to protect the appointing power. The present system may have its imperfections. Time and experience will correct them. The proper course for all Democratic newspapers to pursue is to encourage bright young Democrats to attend the examinations. If they do this and pass they are sure to receive appointments. The purification of the public service can only be accomplished by the presence of capable, proved officials, not mere political workers who regard the offices of the government as theirs on account of partisan services."

Among the many telegrams received by Robert McKinstry, congratulating him upon his appointment as Pension agent at Detroit, was one from his friend Robert Hill, of Chicago, who closes as follows: "Your appointment is the first recognition of the rank and file within the memory of man. God bless Gen. Black." There is much truth in this sentence. Private soldiers were thought good enough to fight for their country, but after the war they had to take a back seat, and the officers got all the fat positions. And so it has been ever since. One seldom hears of a private soldier holding an office where the salary amounts to anything, and in fact they are pretty generally ignored when it comes to holding an office of any kind, and the sooner the present administration begins to recognize the private soldiers in the distribution of offices, the longer will be its lease of power, in our humble opinion.—Adrian Press.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14, 1885.

Since his inauguration the President has issued no order that has occasioned so much talk as the one excluding office seekers and their advocates from the White House. Senators and Members of the House have so long been used to going to the President with great delegations of office seekers, that the sudden change was quite a shock. The office-seekers themselves, however, and not Senators and Members, are those who most severely criticise the order.—Congressmen do not relish being ordered to stay away from the White House when their business is patronage, but a majority of them are not very anxious about their place hunting friends. They find in the order a new excuse for avoiding responsibility in looking after them.

The sergeant in command of the messengers in the main ante-room of the White House was asked if Senators and Members would be required to say if their business was of a private or public nature before being permitted to go up-stairs. "It is my duty," said he, "to require them to state whether their business is public or not." But suppose they refuse?—"Then their cards will not be sent up."

The President's tri-weekly midday public receptions are new features in life at the White House. It has been customary for Presidents, after the official hour for receiving was over, to open the executive office up-stairs, and let the crowd rush through. The President's coming down to the East Room accommodates a much larger number of people in a more comfortable manner than the old way. The callers at these receptions are mainly brides and grooms, foreign and native tourists. They usually enter the main ante-room of the White House tiptoeing with nervous respectfulness, scarcely talking above an awe-stricken whisper. In answer to inquiries the attendants solemnly point them to the East Room. They enter this and stand or sit around admiring its beautiful furniture and decorations until Sergeant Dinsmore throws open a pair of folding doors, and the red portieres in front of them. Then President Cleveland, buttoned up in a tightly fitting black frock coat, appears. He comes just inside of the room, so that he can retire the instant he wishes. A police officer takes a position just back of the sergeant.—The crowd then moves up, and the hand shaking begins.

A delegation of philanthropists has been here to interview the President on the question of the nation's treatment of her Indian wards. It would be difficult to conceive how any new point or original proposition could be made on a topic to which public attention has been called from every standpoint and from all sources. Mr. Cleveland listened to arguments older than the oldest Indian, and concurred in all that was said. He then added that he was ready to act whenever he was convinced of what was the first and best thing to do. If his callers could point out a good, sound, just, practical starting, he would start there. His visitors had outlined a theoretical program, the execution of which would involve years of effort, but they had not pointed to the first step, and he insisted that the first step was the one he would have to take.

The President intimated, however, that he hoped to make a beginning in the right direction, during the remaining years of his administration. The delegation, consisting of General Fisk, Rev. Lyman Abbott, Hon. Erastus Brooks, and others, then went to the Interior Department and had a long interview with Secretary Lamar. The latter said among other things, he was impressed with the belief that the christian religion was the instrumentality for the elevation of this race. But the Indian could not stand to be thrown out unprotected into the civilization of the country. He should be improved from one condition to another. The interests of the white people would be conserved by making the Indian a citizen, and giving him the right of suffrage. After swallowing 4,000,000 black slaves and digesting that mass pretty well, we should not strain at this. Still Secretary Lamar thought to make the Indian a citizen at present would be a sad service to him, and that there would be little of him left if it were done suddenly. Those who were ready for civilization he would push on, and those who were not he would protect.

Following the custom of recent years, Harper's Magazine for December is especially a Christmas Number. It may fairly be said to be the most brilliant number ever issued. Among its contributors are George William Curtis, Charles Dudley Warner, W. D. Howells, Constanse Fenimore Woolson, Charles Egbert Craddock, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Edwin Arnold, William Black, R. D. Blackmore, Geo. H. Boughton, Brander Matthews, C. P. Cranch, and W. H. Gibson, and the illustrations are from such artists as Abbey, Reinhart, Boughton, Gibson, Calderon, Pyle, Fredericks, Dielman, and Smedley. The number contains nineteen full-page engravings.

OBITUARY.

MRS. LILLIE J. ENOS.

Rarely have the sympathies of this community been more deeply moved than they are just now by the succession of afflictions that have fallen to the lot of Mr. Elmore Adams and Mr. Sanford Enos, and their families. For some time past it has been known that Mrs. Williams, the mother of Mrs. Enos and Mr. Adams, could not long remain with us. But little did anyone anticipate that Mrs. Enos, who was in excellent health, would be first to go.

There came to the saddened home a little baby boy. His coming was welcomed as a ray of light, in the midst of the shadows. But soon this light faded out, and it seemed darker than before.

In a short time after alarming symptoms began to appear, and the painful word went round that Mrs. Enos might not live. All that skill and love could do did not avail to preserve her treasured life; and on Thursday, the 22d, at twenty minutes of ten P. M., she fell asleep. The shock of this great sorrow was hard for the well ones to endure, but to Mrs. Williams it proved very prostrating, and she sank rapidly.

It was arranged to have the funeral on Sunday afternoon, at 2:30, at the house. The friends assembled in large numbers, and found that they had not only come to a funeral, but also to the bedside of the dying.

It was touching to view the young mother, robed for the grave, looking down with a loving smile, upon the little one nestling in her bosom,—it was death relaxing his severity, and suggesting the tenderest thing in life. That smile seemed to say: this on my heart is my darling. The Father had so ruled that they were not divided.

Mrs. Lillie J. Enos was born in Tecumseh, Mich., June 18th, 1854. The death of her father left her an orphan at an early age. She graduated at the High School, Beloit, in 1873. She afterwards taught school, and for about four years was book-keeper at the Beloit Straw Board Mill. In this position she made many friends, as was attested by the beautiful floral harp, the gift of the employes of the Mill, and their presence in a body at the funeral, wearing badges of mourning.

She was married to Sanford C. Enos July 9th, 1881.

Mrs. Enos was most highly esteemed by those who knew her long and intimately. She was naturally retiring and conscientious, her piety was of a deep and undemonstrative type, she was faithful and constant in duty, her gifts, especially that of song, and her consecration of them, made her eminently helpful in the Baptist church, to which for years she has belonged.

On the day before her death as her friends gathered tearfully around her it was to listen to such inspired words as only a true, believing soul can utter. Her countenance shown with a heavenly light; her words came one by one between her breathings, as she spoke of peace, of the changed prospect, and gently pressed us to believe that all was well. She seemed glad when, to her question, her broken-hearted husband answered that he could say "Thy will be done."

After prayer at her bedside, and as her friends arose, the ruddy morning sun shone out above the clouds, and bathed the room in light. Her words broke the stillness in the language of the missionary hymn—

The morning light is breaking
The darkness disappears.

O, it was not the "valley of the shadow," although it was the valley of death! And with grateful hearts we recalled the apostles' exclamation—

"O death, where is thy sting?
O grave, where is thy victory?"

"I have been so anxious," said she, "to see the sun once more, and look up into the sky."

Up to that cloudless sky she has now gone, leaving in our memories, as a precious rallying point of hope, her parting words—"Who can count the white angles? Sanford, listen!"

With many tears we laid her to rest, her babe upon her bosom, on the quiet Sunday afternoon, Oct. 25th; joyfully remembering that "He that hath the bride is the Bridegroom," and that "they that fell asleep in Jesus, will God bring with Him." F. A. M.

MRS. SARAH BOARDMAN WILLIAMS

Was born in Charelmont, Mass., in 1831. She married Jerome Adams in 1850 and moved to Texas in 1860 where her husband died in 1862. She moved north in 1867 and resided in Tecumseh, Mich., for two years. In 1869 she was married to Mr. I. Williams and they came to Beloit in 1869, living here until 1878 when they went to Minneapolis. Mr. Williams died in 1883, and Mrs. Williams came at once to this city and made her home here until her death on Oct. 25th, 1885. Mr. Elmore J. Adams, and Mrs. Lillie Adams Enos were her only children. Her noble characteristics have been spoken of, and wherever she was known she will be remembered with pleasure, and not soon be forgotten.

Mrs. Williams, mentioned above, was a sister of John Fisher, of Clinton. Her first husband Jerome Adams, was a brother of Mrs. O. B. DeWolf, of this village, and Mrs. Enos, nee Lillie Adams, was Mrs. DeWolf's niece. Both of these parties lived in Tecumseh many years ago and will be remembered by several of our older settlers. It is rarely that one family is visited with so much affliction is so brief a time.

The Evening Record is making a commendable effort to boom Adrian. The Record is entitled to much credit for this manifestation of enterprise and grit, but we fear that its self-imposed task will prove as fruitless as that of the Salvation Army. The passage of a camel through a needle's eye is as likely an occurrence as the conversion of an editor, or the reformation of an old fogy.

Last night between one and two o'clock the fire bell gave the alarm of fire. Upon arriving at the scene of the fire it was found to be the house of Geo. Curtis. Mr. Will Scofield occupied a part of the house where the fire first seemed to originate. Mr. Scofield was in the country and intended moving yesterday, but rain prevented. The fire company responded promptly and succeeded in saving the main part, also most of the household goods. At 6:30 this morning the bell again sounded and upon investigating, fire had broken out again in the same house. The department again responded and soon succeeded in extinguishing the flames. The grounds and house were very wet and consequently the fire was pretty well controlled. Had it been a dry night, the wind was such it would have taken everything in its range.

A NEW COAL AND LUMBER FIRM.

On Monday last, the new firm of S. W. Temple & Son was organized, Mr. S. W. Temple having taken into partnership his son, H. M. Temple. The new firm start out under the most favorable auspices. The senior member opened a lumber yard in this village twenty two years ago, and no man in this section has had a wider experience in the lumber trade than he. Mr. H. M. Temple has had several year's schooling in his father's office and is one of our most promising young business men. We predict that the new firm will prove a strong and successful one.

They now have control of the Brick Planing Mill recently under lease to the Tecumseh Lumber Co. This mill is fitted throughout with the latest and most approved machinery, dry kilns, and other facilites for the manufacture of sash, doors, blinds and mouldings, and turns out only first class work. They will also carry a large and complete stock of lumber, lath and shingles, and will continue their coal trade as heretofore. Their business office will continue to be in the present location, Shawnee street, and the wood building east of office on same street will be used as a painting and glazing room and for storage of finished work. Both partners will give their entire time and attention to the business, Mr. S. W. Temple having general charge of the outside work while Bert will keep the books and superintend the office. Mr. M. W. Goodrich will fill the position of engineer; W. A. Burlingame will act as foreman in the planing and matching department; P. C. Temple will be the foreman of the sash and blind department. With these foremen, and a good number of competent assistants, we predict for the new firm a large and constantly increasing patronage.

We are under obligations to Mr. J. A. Kelly for a copy of the Hastings, Minn., Daily Gazette. It is a four page three column sheet and sells for ten cents a week. It is one-fourth the size of the Adrian Record and sells for the same price. These western towns "push" the newspaper business the same as other kinds of business.

The brass quartette, assisting the choir at the Universalist church, was highly complimented by many after the evening service last Sunday, for their excellent music. It consists of a soprano cornet, L. F. Wheeler, alto cornet Harry Tansley, tenor Walter Heck, baritone John Tansley. The quartette may win success by thorough practice.

Mr. Andrew Wilson returned last week from Arkansas City, Kansas, where he has been enjoying a four weeks' visit with his son-in-law, Edward Learnard. Arkansas City is a growing town in Cowley county, which is the fifth county west from the Missouri state line in the southern tier. The village is only five miles from the Indian territory, and during his visit Mr. Wilson took a tour down among the Indians. He is very favorably impressed with that portion of Kansas, and says it is destined to grow into a magnificent farming country. He brought back a few specimens of Missouri pippins raised down there, which were magnificent apples. Mr. Learnard and also his father, Hiram, have fine farms there, and are doing well.

C. S. Crane, of St. Louis, was in town two or three days last week,—Charley has a good place in the Passenger department of the Wabash Railway, at St. Louis, which keeps him at home pretty closely and he seldom visits his old Tecumseh friends. His daughter, Jessie, who has been spending several weeks here returned home with him.

A goodly number of the relatives and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Omar Everhart, assembled at their residence north east of the village last evening to assist them in celebrating the fifth anniversary of their wedded life. The weather was stormy enough without, but mirth and gaiety reigned within. A bountiful repast was served and an evening's social enjoyment passed which will linger long in the memory of those present. The host and hostess were the recipients of many useful and beautiful gifts.

On Thursday, the 12th inst., the family of Mr. Andrew Wilson met at the residence of Mr. John J. Freeman, Mrs. Freeman being a daughter of Mr. Wilson, to hold their annual reunion. There were twenty one present, all the children and grandchildren except two, they having moved into Southern Kansas a year ago. A bountiful dinner was served at one o'clock, after which the afternoon was very pleasantly spent in recounting the scenes of childhood and youth on the old farm. Truly such gatherings are bright places along the pathway of life.

Mrs. M J. Bigelow starts for Delavan, Wis., this afternoon, where she will make her home with her daughter, Mrs. G. H. Saxton.

Subscribers who wish to pay for their paper in wood are requested to bring it along at once. We need fuel and need it right off.

We are in receipt of a copy of the "War Cry," the official gazette of the Salvation Army. It is a blood and thunder sheet and fitly represents the "motley array" whose organ it is.

Mr. Price, of Berlin, Ill., loses the post office because he is a Republican, but his wife is appointed to the place because she is a Democrat. If more domestic arrangements of this sort could be made, either side could be offensively partisan and yet not run the risk of allowing the office to go out of the family.

THREE HOURS AT ONSTED.

We paid Onsted a brief visit last Saturday afternoon, stopping there between two trains, and found that bustling little burg all right side up with care.

The first business after our arrival was to hunt up some place to get dinner, and we found exactly the right place at the Evergreen House, kept by D. A. Sickner. Mr. Sickner's place is located near the depot on the south side and is conveniently near the railroad. The landlady knows how to manage a hotel kitchen, for the meals are both wholesome and substantial. Mr. Sickner furnishes a good many basket dinners for both train men and passengers on the M. & O. road.

Robert L. Glenn, the new postmaster, has been conducting the postoffice about two weeks, and already handles the mail like a veteran. He has provided a large number of additional boxes, and now has over one hundred, including six lock boxes. From what we saw and heard during our visit we believe Mr. Glenn will give excellent satisfaction in his new position.

Wilson Lee & Son deal in boots and shoes and groceries, and are building up a good trade. W. B. Lee, the young man, has lately become a member of the firm, which does'nt hurt it any. Lewis Priest, a former knight of the awl at Ridgeway, has a bench in Lee's store, and faithfully repairs the damaged soles of the good people of Onsted.

Charles & Marsh have got nicely started in the hardware business, and are well satisfied with the outlook thus far. They are practical hardware men and will undoubtedly succeed.

C. E. Marshall is still running the blacksmith shop here, and rejoices in the patronage of a long list of good paying customers.

J. E. Gibbs, the former postmaster, has a fine business, and proposes to sell goods as cheap as ever, if he is an ex-official. He has the satisfaction of knowing that he gave satisfaction while holding the office.

We took a ride out to father Wooden's and found him in good health. Frank Darling, his son-in-law, is now living at Mr. Wooden's. We made arrangements with Frank to canvass for the HERALD, and he is authorized to take subscriptions for us in Cambridge, north Rome and eastern Woodstock. We shall present a new Singer Sewing Machine, as a premium, to the first 100 subscribers taken by him.

While there we met Samuel Morey, with whom we got acquainted during the canvass for the M. & O. road, and enjoyed a chat with him. Saw Chauncey Cooper also, and condoled with him a few moments over his rheumatism.

Geo. A. Monaghan, a Tecumseh boy, son of the late Geo. C. Monaghan, is teaching school in the Wooden dist. He taught the Spring term there, and gave such good satisfaction that he was re-engaged for the entire year, beginning with the present fall term.

F. D. Avery is teaching the Onsted school, and has one of the best schools in Cambridge. He is an old teacher and has wielded the birch in the same district before.

Dr. G. W. Ross is building up a nice practice. He has a fine office on the north side, keeps a good horse, is well posted in his profession and has an extended ride.

W. B. Knapp, a former citizen of Tecumseh, now lives at Onsted and likes his new home first rate.

We were in Onsted again on Monday to close up our arrangement with F. W. Darling, but we had very little time to circulate around on that day.

Taken all in all, Onsted has already grown to be a lively, bustling little country village, and unless present appearances are very deceitful, it is destined to have a good business future.

The Enterprise has been correctly informed. For further particulars enquire of the editor of the News.

On Saturday last Frank Palmer, of Bridgewater, came to the Enterprise office and announced that he had a wagon load of big pumpkins, cabbages, squashes, turnips, corn, apples, etc., which was exhibited at the November meeting of the farmers' club, which was held at his farm house the day before, and said that he had been instructed to bring it to the Enterprise office.—Manchester Enterprise.

Friend Blosser will live high for the next few weeks. We know of no one who better deserves high living or who can enjoy it more.

There seems to be a little trouble brewing in Rome, over an award of a cane to the laziest Roman of them all. The stick was gived by the judges to Hiram Kivenburg. Subsequently Will Teachout filed a motion to quash the proceedings, on the ground that being too lazy to get to the entertainment an unfair advantage was taken of his absence. This information is derived from the Press, and therefore we do not vouch for it. In fact we rather think it is a lie.—Adrian Record.

"Long looked for; come at last." The new directory of the city, compiled and published by Mr. Henry H. Chapin, is at last born, and a copy has been laid on our table. It is well printed and bound, appears to have been carefully collated, and is a book which none of our business men can afford to be without. Counted by the directory standard, Mr. Chapin gives Adrian a population of 12,000, and that is a good deal nearer the actual population of the place than any previous enumeration we have had.—Adrian Times.

Purchasers of Bohemian oats were called upon this week by a gentleman from Ohio, who claimed to hold notes against them for various amounts. Certain ones paid their obligations with much reluctance, while others refused to settle, claiming the notes were given without valuable consideration. We understand the matter will be contested in the courts.—Blissfield Advance.

Pay your Bohemian notes like men, gentlemen. Don't plead the baby act. You went into this speculation with your eyes wide open. Now pay up. You may be poorer, that is true, but you will know a good deal more hereafter.

The salvation army opened up in Tecumseh last Saturday night. In making the announcement the HERALD says: "Full particulars in our next." If Stacy is not particular, he may get full before that time.—Hudson Post.

While at Detroit one day last week, we called at J. W. Fales & Co.'s establishment where we found Lavern Ide and had a brief but very pleasant chat with him. He is now their head book-keeper at a good salary, and has become a permanent fixture in the establishment. He has just finished the work on a new residence for his own family.

Thos. S. Boyd, a son of John Boyd of Macon, is still with Savage & Farnam of Detroit, where he has been located for the past four or five years. The other day while in Detroit we had occasion to call at Savage & Farnam's on business, and had a pleasant visit with Mr. Boyd. He boards at the same house with Eugene Clarkson, also of Macon, who is taking a course of law study in Detroit.

FALL POETRY.

Fall is here, 'tis very clear,
We know it by the weather;
Bad roads and cloudy days
Tend not to make us clever.

But call on me and see
If candies, cigars and taffy
An oyster stew or good square meal
Will not make you happy?

FOREIGN GOSSIP.

—Every member of the present British Cabinet is a peer or a son of a peer.

—Mules are more popular than horses for elegant equipages in Rio de Janeiro.

—There are 203,200 dogs in the kingdom of Bavaria, the tax on which amounts to $250,000.

—The Court of St. James is so called after the old Palace of St. James, where nearly all official ceremonies took place for over a hundred years.

—There are no old maids in Turkey. The system of taking wives on faith, without seeing them, is responsible for this happy state of Turkish society.

—The house where the reformer, Luther, lived after his marriage is carefully preserved at Wittenberg, Germany, in an almost unaltered condition. It contains many interesting relics.

—"Hwntws" is the name applied to the inhabitants of the South of Wales by the men of the north. The northmen have a strong dislike for a "Hwntw," and can hardly understand his dialect.

—Hearing that a gigantic gin-palace was to be erected in Westminster, Dean Bradley raised the necessary funds for the purchase of the site, and an admirable Home and Institute for Boys was opened as a result of his laudable effort.

—The largest fortunes accumulated in Ireland have been made in the liquor business. No Irish fortune approaches, in point of personality, that of the late Mr. Wyse, of Cork (£3,000,000), a distiller, save that of the late Sir B. L. Guinness—£1,200,000.

—The Swedish journal, Norrbottens Kuriren, states that the water is falling rapidly in the Gulf of Bothnia. A stone in the archipelago by the coast, which fifty years ago at lowest tide was barely visible above water, is now at mean tide three feet above it.

—The Hon. C. H. Strutt, M. P., who occupies several farms in Mid-Essex, England, has offered to give his laborers facilities for commencing peasant farming. He has told them that he will sublet to them as much land as they like to take at the same rent that he pays, and will lend them a horse when wanted, and give the men employment when their labor is not required on their own land.

—A Swedish engineer, Herr N. Lottiger, owner of the Eimbults Engineering Works, has invented an instrument whereby it is indicated at railway stations whether the points on the line are in working order or not. The instrument is worked by electricity, the warning of disengagements being given by means of bells; otherwise the invention is, of course, a secret. The railway authorities are satisfied with it, and permission has been given to fit the apparatus for experiments on several of the State lines.

—Of the various European countries, Germany is stated to be the best furnished with railways, having, according to the report of the French Ministry of Public Works, more than twenty-two thousand miles; next to Germany comes the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, which possesses about nineteen thousand miles, but adds to its lines much more slowly than any of its rival nations on the Continent. France is third on the list in regard to the total extent of road, having some eighteen thousand five hundred miles; Russia next, with about sixteen thousand miles, while Austro-Hungary has thirteen thousand.

THE KIRGHIZ.

A Dreary Russian Outpost, Shut Out From the World.

A correspondent of a Russian paper, known as the Kurier, describes a visit to a military station on the eastern shore of the Caspian Sea. He writes: Fort Alexandrovsk, with a population of some three hundred and fifty of both sexes, presents the appearance of a single narrow street, bordered on either side with neatly-built shops and houses, lamps and high poles. A house, which at one time served as the residence of the commissariat officer, and was afterward acquired by the Government and transformed into a lazaret, forms by its lofiness an exception to the general run. The whole of the trade of the place is concentrated in the hands of Armenians from Astrakhan, among whom are to be found some wealthy individuals who derive considerable profit from the bartering trade they carry on with the Kirghiz. On rising ground overlooking this street are the Government buildings—namely, the fort, the residence of the Governor and the church; while the open space at the foot of the slope is adorned with a handsome chapel, built in commemoration of the Khiva campaign. Of vegetation there is absolutely none, with the exception, on the reverse slope of the hill, of a garden in the last stage of decay, laid out, according to report, by the poet Shercheviko during his banishment from Little Russia. The fort itself rejoices in a club and an excellent fire engine; its streets are well lit and the houses have a clean appearance. There is also a school in which the young of both sexes receive instruction. Though the society of the place is limited, yet apparently harmony reigns among its members. Almost all the necessaries of life are imported from Astrakhan and Petrovsk during the summer months. Advantage also is, of course, taken of any opportunity of the kind that presents itself during winter.

The Kirghiz occupy themselves exclusively with cattle breeding, and are, it is said, noted for their scrupulous honesty. A long, clumsily stitched cloak (kilat) and breeches of coarse camel's hair form their dress. The headgear resembles an old woman's hood, extending in rear of the neck for about seven inches in the shape of a truncated cone. According to the rank and wealth of the wearer, it is embroidered with various furs, etc. The practical object of the cone is to admit ventilation to the head through the opening. I came across a Kirghiz who had been educated at the Orenburg Academy; and he, as others in proportion as they have mixed with and become habituated to Russian ideas, apparently does his utmost to avoid being taken for what he is. The dress of the women differs but slightly from that of the men. For example, in lieu of the hood a woman covers her head with a variety of rags, bandages, etc. In the manufacture of warm and soft scarfs, cloaks, etc., out of camel's and goat's hair they show great skill and ingenuity. According to the ideas prevalent among the Kirghiz, the wife is merely a slave, bought at a certain price, and destined to bear all domestic labor. For the Kirghiz, as for all nomadic tribes, the dirty and ugly felt kibitkas serve as residences. The first thing in the kibitka that attracts the attention of the visitor is the store of provisions suspended from the roof—to wit, dried and smoked fish and horseflesh. The latter constitutes a great delicacy, and is a luxury that only the well-to-do classes can attain to. The heat and smut of Fort Alexandrovsk are inexpressible, the one sole distraction being the arrival of a ship. Even this is denied to the inhabitants in winter, when the sea is frozen. In fact, for two or three months each year there is absolutely no communication between Fort Alexandrovsk and the outer world.

PARAGUAYAN CUSTOMS.

A Plant That Blends Life and Death in Its Fibers.

In Paraguay the chief food of the people is mandioca, mate and fruit. During the war with Brazil, Argentine and Uruguay when all the cattle were slaughtered and few fields produced a harvest for several years, the people lived almost exclusively upon fruit, with which nature has so well provided the country. The orange of Paraguay, like the pine-apple of Ecuador, is said to be the best in the world, but none are exported beyond an occasional few that go to Buenos Ayres. The mandioca is a root like the yam, from which is produced the tapioca of commerce.

Life and death are blended in the mandioca plant, but every part of it, if properly treated, is useful, and it is as essential to the domestic economy of Brazil and Paraguay as rice is to China or potatoes to Ireland. It is served at every meal, from the dinner-pail of the laborer to the banquet of the President, as bread is with us. There are four species of the mandioca, but they differ only as one kind of an apple differs from another, all serving the same general purpose. The plant grows about four feet in height, somewhat resembling the tomato, although it has not so much foliage. The stalks and leaves are excellent fodder for cattle, and are often dried and used for their medicinal properties by the old women of Paraguay.

The root can be baked or boiled, like a yam or a sweet potato, but when eaten raw is a deadly poison. Thirty-five drops of the juice were once administered to a negro who was under sentence of death, as an experiment, and he died in six minutes in horrible convulsions. The poison is mysteriously removed or neutralized by the application of heat, and the root when cooked is almost pure starch and the staff of life of the people. The popular way of using it is in the form of flour. The roots are boiled and then ground in rude mills, producing a powder about the color of buckwheat flour. This is eaten raw, sprinkled upon meat or fruit, and enters into the composition of various sorts of stews and ragouts peculiar to the people.

Tapioca is a refined mandioca produced by a modern process, the flour being reduced to paste by boiling, and then allowed to crystalize. A drink called "chicha" is also made of it by soaking the flour in water and letting it ferment. It has a taste like sour milk, and one glass of it will last a lifetime, except for the native, who will drink it by the quart without injury, although it is a rapid intoxicant. The chicha of Peru is made of sugar-cane, the chicha of Chili of the first juice of the grape, and that of Paraguay of the mandioca. —Asuncion (Paraguay) Cor. Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The Danger of Insects' Stings.

A German medical paper tells about a girl who got diphtheria by being bitten by a hornet. A thick grayish-white scab at once formed, and fell off only the day before the first symptom of diphtheria appeared. The doctor had seen the sore, and also recognized it as a diphtheritic one, but believed it to be due to some injury, and to have assumed the diphtheritic character only when the constitutional affection set in. For it is well known that in a patient suffering from a graver form of diphtheria with decided blood-poisoning, any wound, whether made by a blister or accidentally caused, will at once develop into a diphtheritic sore and be covered with the false membrane so characteristic of this malady. Insects have so often been proven—if not the victims—the carriers of infectious virus, that the case just quoted ought not to surprise us, says the Medical and Surgical Reporter: "We believe that not sufficient attention has been paid to this manner of infection, and that many cases where an infectious disease seemed to have sprung up eo ipso would have found their explanation in just such a way as the one described. The lesson we learn from cases of this kind teaches us at once to employ locally cauterizing and strong antiseptic measures when a wound, due to the bite or sting of an insect, assumes the least suspicious or malignant character."

—The total annual consumption of tea, it is now estimated, is 3,[illegible] pounds; of coffee, 1[illegible]00,000,000 pounds; of cocoa and chocolate, 1,000,000 pounds; while similar drinks are used by less civilized nations and tribes. Tea is the favorite drink of Russia, Holland and England, the last country annually importing 100,0[illegible],000 pounds, or several pounds to each man, woman and child. —Philadelphia Ledger.

As to Mrs. Grundy.

This potent personage has been allowed to rule too despotically in the feminine world, and the ladies say that it is time her tyranny received a check. But even Mrs. Grundy has dared to speak against the value of Brown's Iron Bitters as a strengthening tonic for ladies who suffer from debility. It enriches the blood and completely restores failing health. Miss Sallie L. Paules, Wrightsville, Pa., was cured by Brown's Iron Bitters of backache, kidney trouble, and liver complaint.

After Diptheria.

Diphtheria is a terrible disease, requiring the greatest medical skill to effect a complete cure. Even when its power is broken, it clings to the patient with great persistency, and often leaves the system poisoned and prostrated. Just here Hood's Sarsaparilla does a vast amount of good, expelling impurities from the blood, giving it richness and vitality, while it renovates and strengthens the system.

Careful attention to diet is the best guard against disease. It is a fact which all should know, that over-eating not only corrupts the blood but destroys nerve force, and induces dyspepsia, jaundice, bad breath, piles pimples, low spirits, headache, ague, malaria, and all stomach and liver troubles. Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic quickly cures the diseases. Can be taken by the most delicate. Price fifty cents, of George Furgeson.

CATAARH—A NEW TREATMENT.

From the Montreal Star.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for catarrh. Out of 200 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished he claims the Catarrh is practically cured and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.

GUMBO ON STANDARD TIME.

Mrs. Gumbo had rocked the baby to sleep, stirred up the pan cake batter and placed it behind the stove to rise, last evening. Mr. Gumbo had taken his evening nip from his pocket companion, filled his pipe and settled himself in the old arm chair to smoke, when Jerusha heaved a long sigh and remarked, "This new-fangled system of time, Joshua, is a mystery to me. It did'nt used to be so when we was young. The old eight day clock which stood in the corner in father's dining room and reached from the floor to the ceiling, kept time exactly with the sun. It showed the four quarters of the moon on the dial. It never needed repairs. It never run too slow nor too fast. We could tell the exact moment the sun rose by glancing at the old clock when Sol peeped above the horizon, and the two hands pointed to the hour of twelve exactly when the sun crossed the noon meridian. Father used to boast sometimes—when we had husking bees on an October evening and several jugs of cider had been disposed of—that it was the identical clock which came over in the Mayflower. I always felt a little skeptical on that point, Joshua, but it was such a grand, true, reliable old time keeper, that I never could muster up the courage to question father's word. We had no watches in those days, Joshua, because the old eight day clock turned out enough good square time for the whole family. Our meals were regulated by that clock, family prayers were said on Sabbath morning by that clock, the children were strapped and put to bed every night by that clock, mother did the churning by that clock, father planted his potatoes during the full of the moon as shown by that clock, the baby was given its doses of parigoric by that clock, and, don't you remember, Joshua, all of your sparking visits during the winter season were exterminated promptly at twelve by that clock." Here Mrs. Gumbo stopped to take breath, wiped her spectacles and proceeded. "But now, Joshua, all this is changed. The little clock on the mantle in the sitting room gives solar time. The box clock in the kitchen in which you keep your spiritual consolation runs on standard time. When I get dinner I am twenty eight minutes slow, and when I sit down to darn the stockings for the week I am twenty eight minutes fast. I am compelled to receive company and entertain the sewing circle on fast time, while the tea is steaped, and the biscuits are baked, and the eggs are boiled on slow time. When the children get up in the morning, they follow the kitchen clock, but when they start for school they adopt the solar time piece."

"I do declare, Jerusha," said Mr. Gumbo, knocking the ashes out of his pipe, "I wonder what in sanco you'll show your ignorance about next. Why hang it, it seems as though you'd never learn nothin' nohow. The old kind 'o time, Jerusha, was got up by the Almighty hisself in the year one. Standard time is a modern inwention got up by the railroad nabobs to run the keers by. Why hang it all, when Demosthenes orated his big orations, he begun 'em and quit 'em by sun time. When Caesar crossed the Rubicon, all the time piece he had about him was an hour glass. And when Mark Anthony was a sparkin' Cleopatry, they did'nt have no watches at all. For more'n five thousand years, Jerusha, this world has been waggin' around on its axis according to solar time; Nations have riz 'n fell, seed time and pertater harvests hev followed arter each other; wars have desolated the earth, the heathen Chinee has nused his cue; the Egyptian pyramids have towerd towards heaven; Ben Butler has run for President; Susan Anthony has lectured on womin's rites; Dr. Burchard has writ for the New York Tribune; and durin' all these upheavals, Jerusha, Old Sol has furnished the genoowine and only time. But these railroad fellers hev upsot things generally. They allers want everything different from other folks. The old fashioned Lord's time ain't good enough for them. They ride round in their palace keers, 'n their sleepin' coaches, 'n their hotels on wheels, buzzin' through tunnels, rattlin' over bridges, climbin' up mountains and whirlin' over valleys. S'posin a train leaves Chicago at six o'clock in the mornin'. It runs fifty miles an hour, 'n when it 'gets into Detroit its gained a square thirty minutes on clock time, and this ere discrepancy keeps growin' 'n growin' the further the train goes East. Well, they split the country up into four big sections and make Chicago the startin' pint 'o one section, Chicago bein' the center of the universe, this ere section is called Central time, and fer 500 miles each side 'o the wicked city, the conductors and brakemen all set their watches by the town clock in Chicago. If one conductor sot his watch arter Chicago time, and another by Rock Island time, and another by Toledo time, the train dispatchers would get muddled, 'n the wrong trains would get on the side tracks, 'n the sw'tches would be be pulled too soon or too late, and passenger trains would try to pass on the same track, 'n big smash ups would come, 'n hundreds of folks would git killed, 'n the life insurance companies would get busted, 'n things would go to ballyhack generally. To obviate all these evils, some long headed cuss inwented standard time."

"You think its a nuisance, do ye? Well, that shows how little sense 'imin hev got. Every house oughter hev two clocks, one rnnnin' on solar, 'n 'other tickin' on standard time. Let everybody do his work 'n arrange his bizness accordin' to solar, and keep his appintments accordin' to standard, and then everybody 'ill hev jest twenty-eight minutes to spare. If that don't bring the millenyum, Jerusha, then you need'nt never expect it in this world."

For years, quinine was regarded as the only specific for malarious diseases, and immense quantities of the drug were annually consumed through our western country, more particularly along the river bottoms and adjoining low lands.

With the fall months malaria, in all its varied forms, stalks like an epidemic through the land, and whole districts are prostrated with chills and fever, the entire population shaking with ague. Heretofore, quinine was regularly resorted to; but, it frequently failed to effect a cure, it invariably deranged the stomach, producing nausea, vertigo and fugitive pains in the head to such an extent that months elapsed ere the system recovered from its effects. These objections to its use were so marked, that the introduction of Mishler's Herb Bitters was hailed as a triumph in medicine. Infinitely more certain in its beneficial effects than quinine; it possesses none of the demerits of that drug. Instead of nauseating, it tones and invigorates the stomach, and while speedily expelling the noxious humors, increases the appetite and facilitates digestion, thus rendering the system stronger and better fitted to resist the attacks of disease. In fact, a judicious use of Mishler's Herb Bitters at this season of the year, will prevent the recurrence of this disease, even in those who have never passed an autumn without it. An experience of twenty years proves it to be the greatest anti-periodic known to medical science.

There are perhaps, no diseases so subject to climatic changes as affections of the kidneys. Hundreds of our farmers, mechanics, and laboring men strong and hardy in other respects, suffer continual inconvenience, and occasionally excruciating pains in the back and across the loins; experience a frequent desire to pass water, pain during its passage, and frequent stoppages in its flow. These are manifestations resulting from some strain or heavy lift (perhaps years ago), and aggravated by every change in the weather. Every light cold flies direct to this one weak spot, and unless promptly attended to the disease becomes chronic, and the once strong man a miserable wreck. Mishler's Herb Bitters is the only certain remedy for this class of disease. It has a peculiar tendency to the kidneys, stimulates them to healthy action, and removing the cause, prevents the formation of brick-dust deposits, which, if permitted to continue, will by cohesion form gravel stone, necessitating a painful operation for its removal. Many of the ingredients entering into its composition, are universally recognized as specifics for all complaints of the urinary organs. In liver complaint, dyspepsea, all disorders of the bowels, and affections of the throat and lungs, it is equally certain and efficacious; while, as a remedy for the complaints peculiar to the female sex, it has no equal. Ladies, old and young, married and single, in every condition in life, will find this great female remedy prompt, safe, certain and reliable. The pale, sallow complexion is replaced by a blooming, healthful countenance, and its occasional use enables Nature to perform her functions regularly and without inconvenience.

Godey's Lady's Book (J. H. Haulenbeck, Philadelphia) for December is decidedly a handsome number, replete with such attractions as delight the ladies at the commencement of the holiday season. The three pages of colored designs for holiday novelties in the line of fancy work are deserving of particular attention, as they will suggest to many what to make as Christmas mementoes—there are also three pages illustrating fancy work in black. The other illustrations this month are excellent, particularly one of Miss Mary Anderson, which is accompanied by a sketch of her career. In this number the publisher also promises to every subscriber as a Christmas present a special pattern cut to measurement, worth 75 cents; also, it presents to all little girls patterns for dolls' clothing, and offers rewards for the best clothes made from the patterns. And last, but not least, of the offers, is the Premium engraving, 12x15, to all subscribers for 1886. The December number contains the prospectus for 1886 and terms to club raisers. Specimen copies, 15 cents.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
LANSING, Nov. 5, 1885.

According to custom adopted by our forefathers and observed ever since, one day in each year has been set apart especially for thanksgiving.

Therefore, I, Russell A. Alger, governor of the state of Michigan, do designate Thursday, the 26th inst., for such observance. On that day let us all show our gratitude by acts of charity, abstaining from business, gathering in places of worship, and around our firesides with family and friends; and thanking God for preserving us from pestilence and danger, for prosperity and peace, ask Him that these mercies may be continued to us as a people. RUSSELL A. ALGER.

By the governor, H. A. CONANT, secretary of State.

The Salvation Army—An Inquiry.

DEAR HERALD:—The news that Tecumseh has been visited by a company of persons calling themselves "The Salvation Army" must have caused no little surprise among your readers, and excited some considerable curiosity to ascertain to what purpose, or upon what errand these visitors may have come. Salvation is a word of so many meanings, and the evils, dangers, or sufferings from which it is generally used to signify deliverance or safety, are so various, some having their place of abode in the present world, and others existing, or being said to exist, only in some future world or mode of existence, that it may safely be supposed that among your readers there may be many who would feel obliged to you for some light or information as to the kind of evils from which your recent visitors promise to give you more or less deliverance, or at least good hope of salvation. Information as to the kind of evils with which the "army" of salvationists now visiting you proposes to go to war, and as to the methods and means of the warfare, especially as to whether the evils with which this "army" goes to war are such as are to be met with almost daily in this present evil world or such as belong to some future world, or mode of existence.—Such information as you have it in your power to communicate now, or in some early issue of your paper, on the subjects above named, will certainly oblige many INQUIRING FRIENDS.

We would say to our esteemed correspondent and all other readers of the HERALD that we are gathering all the light possible on this subject as rapidly as our office duties will allow. SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON CHRONICLES.

Bert Tate and wife spent the Sabbath with their Clinton relatives and friends.

Several Tecumseh boys were in the village Sunday, and report says, some of them were somewhat "bewildered."

A. St. John, of Jonesville, was in town over Sunday, and went to Bridgewater to attend to the remains of the venerable Tommy Pikett, preparatory for interment, which took place yesterday. "Uncle Tommy Pikett" as he was familiarly known, was an early settler in Bridgewater, but a few miles from this village where he was a frequent, inoffensive, though very odd visitor. He had attained the extraordinary age of 108 years, and although seemingly quite spry until a few days preceding the summons, his sense of hearing had become much impaired, and it was always known when he was here by a doleful sound contracted in his breathing similar to that produced by the mourning dove.

The Congregational society held an "any pie social," at the residence of W. W. Demuth, and although the weather was anything but fair, the attendance was good and each one seemed to have put in an appearance intent upon enjoyment, and their expectations were more than realized, and as they were homeward bound, declared Tuesday Nov. 24, 1885, should not escape their memory.

There was a mock lawsuit instituted by the students of the high school, which occurred at town hall last Friday and Saturday evenings, and drew quite a crowd of spectators, also, added some dimes to their fund. It was pronounced very interesting by those who attended. After two evenings of eloquent picking to pieces of Blackstone and much examination and cross-examination, the prisoner was acquitted.

A multitudious gathering of Clinton's young men and ladies congregated on Saturday evening, proceeded to Tecumseh to glide on the rollers and witness the contest Tecumseh vs. Manchester.

One week from Saturday next, the Baptist society will hold their regular church meeting, at which time there is to be one trustee elected and other business transacted; there will also be covenant meeting on that day.

The union thanksgiving services are to be holden in the Congregational church to-day, and Rev. J. A. Barns, pastor of that flock will discourse, we hope, to many thankful listeners.

Fred Morey has securred a position in the Woolen Mill, and glances at the shuttle as it flits too and fro upon one of the looms. He has been there before and knows how it should be.

Several men were at work last week and the first of this week, upon Lon. Mills' farm, storing away cabbage for winter keeping, and if success crowns their efforts, Tommy Roper will cause a smile to appear upon the phiz of ye cabbage lover, in the spring.

Several fine pickerel have been captured in the Raisin lately.

Clinton will be well represented at manager Cash's to-day.

The roads are horrible and many woodpiles are getting noticeably less. Coal is in demand.

Dan Davis visited Tecumseh Tuesday and took a view of the city.

S. W. Demuth has treated his store front to a new dress of lavender which adds very much to its appearance.

Peter Kishpaugh made a trip to Toledo last Tuesday and reports business rather dull there just at present.

That large pile of apples at the depot is diminishing and "Jim" smiles his prettiest smile at the departure of juice for the far west.

Mrs. G. H. Miles and Fred went to Adrian yesterday, to take thanksgiving dinner with Will Patterson and family.

Our citizens were somewhat surprised last Saturday evening at the arrival of the officers with John Steffanowski, the older of the Bridgewater chicken thieves, and their surprise was not diminished much, when, on the day following, officer Burroughs came in from the west with young Joe in custody and deposited him in the cooler as fit company for his brother. They were allowed a short time for reflection—while the team were being fed—and then treated to a ride over to Adrian, where they received board at the county jail until Monday, when they returned to this village for examination. They were wanted for stealing buffalo robes, blankets, wheat, oats; in fact, most every conceivable article to be found in their township and two or three others adjoining. Two robes were found that were stole from a church shed in Tecumseh a few weeks ago, and it seems as though nothing had been missed hereabouts for a long time but could be traced to the hiding place of this young light-fingered trio. Sid McIntyre was sent over the road," the older of these convicted and fined and the younger put under bonds of $200 to appear at the circuit court for chicken stealing. Three robes were found by the officers, to say nothing of other stray property. They pled guilty to these last charges, and John receives ninety days and $75 fine. We did not learn the fate of Joe.

Going and coming to Turkey, makes lively times to-day.

"Spec" Gibson is bound to secure those potatoes if it takes all winter.

Frank Smith, of Wallaceburg, Ont., brother of Harry Smith, is out on a visit. He came to attend the funeral of Mrs. Smith.

Warren Jones went to Adrian Monday to see his brother Fred who is in poor health, and who left for his home at Hastings, Nebraska, Monday, where it is hoped he may improve.

Don't forget the social at the home of the treasurer, Miss Ada Linn, this week Friday evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

The attendance at the entertainment given Friday night by the R. L. S. at Cottage Hall, was more than could be expected considering the stormy night. The exercises passed off very nicely, and are spoken of by those in attendance as being one of the finest entertainments the society ever gave. The society realized something over $10 for which they are very grateful. Regular meeting next week Friday night.

Mrs. Harry Smith who has been sick for the past six months passed away on Thursday morning of last week. Her long sickness has been of a peculiar nature. A post mortem examination was held Saturday by Drs. Loree, Catlin and Nelson. The funeral services were held Saturday, 2 P. M., at the church, Rev. W. J. Clack officiating. Mr Smith and family have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community in their sad affliction.

Card of Thanks.

We wish to extend our heartfelt appreciation to our many friends who so willingly and kindly assisted us and cared for our wife and mother in her long sickness and death; also to Mrs. David Coryell for the beautiful floral gifts.

Mud everywhere.

The roads are almost impassible.

Where is the severe winter prophesied by some of our weatherwise people?

Some corn to husk yet.

Mr. Briggs, the school teacher for the winter term is here in readiness to commence work next Monday. He comes with a good recommend from his old school.

The Sunday School concert at the Christian church last Sunday was a success.

Chas. Gripton and family fearing a hard winter have gone to Florida where they expected to find flowers and fine weather. May they meet with success.

On the afternoon and evening of Saturday last Nov. 21st., Mr. & Mrs. John Exelby celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding day. Numerous friends and relatives were present on the occasion, all of whom were most amiably entertained by the host and hostess, a portion of the time being devoted to music. At six o'clock P. M. the guests were ushered into the spacious dining room of the hotel, and partook of the bountiful repast Mr. and Mrs. Exelby had provided for them. The presents were numerous and costly and consisted as follows

One doz. silver knives, and forks, Mr. Geo. Exelby; Geo. Smith, Walter Exelby; 1 set tea spoons, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Smith; 1 set tea spoons, Irving S. Osborne; 1 Pickle castor, Mr. and Mrs. Sanford Underwood; pickle castor, Mrs. Libbie Cheever; sugar spoon and mustard spoon, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Montpellier; silver cake basket, Mr. and Mrs. Ringman, Adrian; silver cake basket, The Boarders; doz. napkins, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Linn; table cloth, Mr. and Mrs. Doctor Loree; oil painting, Cornelius Exelby; oil painting, Joseph Exelby; 2 china cups and saucers, Mr. and Mrs. Rauch; lamp, pair of vases and fruit dish, Mr. S. Cuddeback, Toledo; pin cushions, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Underwood; hanging-lamp, Wm. Underwood and Jesse Exelby.

After the guests had partaken to their satisfaction of the good things which the table afforded, Doctor Loree made a very pleasing address reviewing the lives of Mr. and Mrs. Exelby, and complimenting them and their new undertaking, the Hotel. The guests then departed, leaving Mr. and Mrs. Exelby overwhelmed by the many tokens of friendship they had received.

SOUTH MACON.

The marriage of Miss Sarah L. Hunt of Macon, to Mr. Arthur C. Green of Raisin, took place at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. V. Osgood on Thursday evening, Nov. 19th, at six o'clock. A large company of invited friends were present to witness the ceremony. Precisely at six, the bridal party, consisting of the bride and groom, with Mr. Myron W. Green of East Avon, N. Y. as groomsman, and Miss Mary M. Osgood of Macon, as bridesmaid, entered the room, and took their place under a floral marriage bell of beautiful design. The ceremony was performed by the bride's pastor, Rev. Charles S. Dutton, of the Reformed church. The dignified and earnest bearing of both bride and groom impressed all present. It was evident that the vows of marriage, which they took upon themselves, had a deep and solemn meaning to them. The service concluded, and the congatulations said, the guests were seated at the tables furnished with good cheer, of which all partook with hearty relish. Then followed pleasant social intercourse till the bride and groom left amid the good wishes of their friends, to take the 11:00 P. M. train for the east, where they will spend some time visiting friends, and places of interest. The bride was tastefully dressed in brown satin. She has a large circle of friends here, whose esteem she has won by her unobtrusive piety, and the beauty of her character. The groom is well known as a young man of good principles and pleasing address. Both are class-mates, graduates of the Raisin Valley Seminary, Prof. White, under whom they graduated, and his wife and eight of the classmates of the young couple added by their genial presence, to the pleasantness of the occasion. That their married life may be long and happy is the wish of all their friends.

ONSTED ODDS.

Oscar McLaughlin of Valley City, Dakota, is visiting friends in this vicinity.

Fred Glenn, of the firm of R. L. Glenn & Co., went to Toledo, Saturday to buy goods.

Mrs. Charles Hendrick's, of Franklin, daughter of Jerome Snow, was visiting at her father's several days last week.

We hear that the Grangers are making preparations for a Christmas tree and oyster supper. That's right, commence early.

William Onsted and Henry Sickner have very much improved the appearance of their dwellings by painting them.

H. A. Verrier has sold the south half of his lot to Frank Curtis of Napoleon, who has already commenced to build. We understand he is going to erect a building 20x48 to be used for a drug store.

A number of people enquired Monday afternoon what show was going to be in town. Upon investigating the matter, they found that the tent which attracted the attention of so many, was the temporary abode of the carpenters from Napoleon, who had come to build Mr. Curtis' store.

TIPTON TOPICS.

Mr & Mrs. Burns of this place are off on a short visit.

Miss Tinnie VanValkenburg is visiting her sister at Addison.

The Centre School and School District No. 1, opened last Monday with Mr. Tyler and Miss L. VanValkenburg teachers respectively.

A VERY VALUABLE WORK

Memorial Edition of the life of General Grant, by the well known historical writer, Colonel Frank A. Burr.

This is the most complete and authentic history of the Life and Deeds of the great Hero that we have seen. It contains a full account of his early life, his record as a student at West Point; his Gallantry in the Mexican War; his Eminent Services to his Country in our Great Civil War, his Election to the Presidency; his Tour Around the World, with an account of the great honors shown him by the Emperor, Kings and Rulers of all Nations.

This book will in no way be a competitor with the important work General Grant has written. But it will be an indispensable companion to his work, giving, as it does, such opinions and statements in relation to his acts as he could not, with propriety, write, and a review of matters that he necessarily had to leave for some other hand to pen.

Colonel Burr's extensive acquaintance with the distinguished men of our country, both in civil and military life, as well as his wide reputation as a brilliant and fascinating writer, has given him access to sources of information such as no other author, except General Grant himself, could reach.

No career in all our history furnishes a more brilliant example than that of General Ulysses S. Grant. Starting as a poor boy, he raised himself to the highest pinnacle of fame. It is but natural that his countrymen should desire to know the means by which this great success was accomplished. To meet this demand the author has prepared this volume, which relates in the most fascinating manner the life of this truly great man. The work is more interesting than a novel, for it is true. It is the story of unconquerable determination and sublime self-reliance, of lofty purpose and inflexible resolve, of incorruptible integrity and moral courage of the highest type, of noble effort and magnificent achievement, of a prolonged and determined struggle, crowned by the most brilliant triumphs.

The book was written under the eye and with the sanction of the most intimate friends of the dead Hero and with the entire approval of his family. It contains an Introduction of his inner life and private character by his pastor, Rev. J. P. Newman.

The work contains over 1000 pages, and is embellished with nearly 200 fine illustrations of scenes in the Life of the great Commander.

S. C. Stacy, of Tecumseh, has the general agency for this work for the counties of Monroe, Washtenaw, Lenawee and Hillsdale. Local canvassers wanted to whom liberal wages and territory will be given.

TIRED.

I am tired. Heart and feet,
Turn from busy mart and street;
I am tired—rest is sweet.

I am tired. I have played
In the sun and in the shade,
I have seen the flowers fade.

I am tired. I know not
What has made my heart so hot,
What has made my spirit jaded.

I am tired. Days and nights
Golden strewed and sorrow-blighted,
Day has not been spent in vain.

I am tired. Even life
Bids me lay my cares aside,
Bids me in my hopes abide.

I am tired. God's near,
Let me sleep without a fear,
Let me die without a tear.

I am tired. I would rest
As the bird within its nest;
I am tired. Home is best.

A SEA TRAGEDY.

An Awful Story of Mutiny and Murder.

Bloody Affray Between the Brave Captain and Mate of a Brig and a Murderous Crew—His Son Killed—The Captain Executes Two Men.

After a cruise of eighteen months Captain Enstrom of the brig Natal was glad to get around and see his old acquaintances. His friends, who liked him always, now looked upon him with a new interest, as the man who had lived through the bloody mutiny of which they had read a brief account in the morning papers. Captain Enstrom is a man whom no one would care to trifle with unless it were absolutely necessary. His shoulders are broad, his chest deep, and when he shakes hands with any one the memory of his squeeze remains. The Captain's face, bronzed by the sun and seamed with deep scars plainly visible through his reddish whiskers, looks like that of a man of prompt action and not easily frightened. The impression is confirmed by a detailed account of the struggle in his cabin and his subsequent action.

"I was stretched out on this lounge," the Captain said, illustrating his meaning, "with my face to the wall, and was sound asleep. I was awakened at one o'clock in the morning by a blow from the carpenter's broad ax that made a wound of which you can see the scar, reaching from my chin back under my ear. When I looked up, half dazed, I could distinguish the carpenter's face by the light of the lamp burning near the compass box, and I saw the ax coming down on my head again. I raised my right arm, and thus broke the force of the blow. The ax handle struck my wrist, and the blade landed on my temple, leaving this mark that leads from my eye back across my ear. These other scars on my cheeks, neck and forehead were made by the carpenter, too, when he cut me with his knife, but he didn't do that right off. The sudden blow of the ax handle on my wrist made the blade fly off, and I had time to sit up on the lounge. The cowardly carpenter sat down beside me. I grabbed him around the neck and kept him from tearing at my wounds, which he was trying to make deeper with his hands. When he found he couldn't do it he threw his arms around mine, pinned them to my side and yelled out 'Kill him! Kill him!'

"Then, for the first time, I noticed that the steward was standing near the door, holding in his hand a narrow, long-bladed axe used in the galley, patiently awaiting his turn. He struck at me when the carpenter sung out, but he was excited and raised the axe too high. It struck against the ceiling, which you see is very low, and spoiled his blow. I had my right arm free by this time, and as the axe came down I grabbed it and wrenched it away from him. I was at too close quarters to use it on the carpenter, so I put it under my feet and turned my attention to him. Just as the steward struck at me he had said:

"'Never mind, I'll fix him.' And he was trying his best to do it, tugging at a sheath knife strapped inside his trousers. He got it out before I could stop him, and cut me first of all, here in the left cheek, where you see the long scar. It was a very deep cut. I could see my teeth through it for several days. Then he cut me two or three times on the forehead, but, of course, he couldn't get through the bone. I said to myself: 'You must do something or you'll be killed.' Fortunately the steward was letting us have the light alone. Just as I said this the carpenter stuck the knife in my neck. It didn't go into the middle, as he wanted it to, but went in under my right ear, here where you see the funny looking scar mixed up with the one made by the axe. When the knife went through on the other side, I grabbed it with my right hand to keep it in there so that he couldn't use it any more. Then he did what only a sneak would do. He scrouged it round and round, trying to get in deep enough to cut a big vein. It is the twisting around in my neck that makes that scar look so funny—it didn't heal smooth. While he was forcing the knife inward I forced it outward. At last I forced it out of my neck altogether, and got it away from him. At that minute the mate came reeling into the room, and blood was coming out all over him, too. I suppose the carpenter and the steward thought he was dead. Anyhow they left at once, and I was so much cut up I had to let them go, or else we might have killed them in there with the kitchen ax that I had under my feet. Yes, certainly, it's lucky I was a strong man; but it's luckier yet that there was a stronger hand than mine in the room, or else I'd be dead."

Captain Enstrom is a family man, father of seven children, and the eldest son, a flaxen-haired boy of nineteen, was on board with his father studying practical navigation and acting as second mate of the vessel. He seems to have been the first one attacked by the mutineers. It was his watch on deck, and before going below he had drawn up a bucket of water to wash his hands and face. His cap was found near the bucket split almost in two, probably by a blow from the carpenter's axe. The water in which he was washing was reddened with blood, as though he had been struck as he was leaning down toward the water, and a bloody trail led to the side of the ship, whence his body was thrown into the sea.

After the killing of young Enstrom the mutineers divided up the work that remained to be done. The carpenter undertook to dispose of the Captain, and made the attempt already described. Toton, a seaman, who afterward proved to be the ringleader, took charge of the mate Sylvanius, and, revolver in hand, made for the mate's stateroom. Sylvanius was asleep, and it was quite dark in his room; but Toton knew the lay of the land, and, using his best judgment, fired four shots in rapid succession, and then ran out to see how the carpenter was progressing. His judgment in firing proved good. The first ball put out the mate's right eye, the second struck him in the chin and the other two took effect in his body. Toton was wrong in thinking Sylvanius was dead. He was alive, and, knowing that more devilry must be going on outside, he arose, picked up the revolver which Toton had dropped, and ran to the Captain's room. As Toton came in one door Sylvanius came in the other, holding in his hand the revolver with one bullet still in it. It was a surprise to Toton when he found the Captain fighting, and still more a surprise when the mate appeared opposite him and tried to shoot him with his own pistol. The carpenter, the steward and Toton made for the deck together. When they were out of the cabin the Captain and the mate locked themselves in, got out the medicine chest and fixed each other's wounds. Neither understood surgery, and the best they could do was to bathe them and diminish the flow of blood by binding the wounds with lint.

When this was done both felt easier, and began to cast about for methods of revenge and for regaining control of the ship.

On the wall over the Captain's bunk were fastened an African leather shield and two assegais, placed crosswise. The shield was clearly useless, but the assegais might do to strike the mutineers. The mate was about to take them down, but just then the Captain recollected something better. He opened his locker and took out a rifle and a brace of revolvers. When they were carefully loaded the two officers sallied forth. The mate had one of the Captain's revolvers and the one he had picked up, and the Captain had the rifle and a revolver. If things had not been serious, they might have been taken for a couple of Robinson Crusoes. But this thought didn't occur to the mutineers. They stood at the door, armed with axes and capstan bars, and began the fight at once. But the number of fire-arms demoralized them. They had no time to fight much before a half dozen bullets flew around and sent them scattering forward with the Captain and mate in pursuit. The forward hatch was open and Toton, Refus, another seaman, the carpenter, and the steward jumped down in wild haste. They liked to fight with sleeping men best.

One of the seamen did not succeed in getting out of sight. Johanssen was the unlucky one, and he looked much dispirited as he tried to make himself small behind the capstan. He had a capstan bar in his hand, but it didn't look very formidable when the mate, with his two revolvers, and the Captain, with his rifle all ready, came at him from different directions. That was too much, and Johanssen expressed a wish to yield. The Captain's first instinct was to shoot every one engaged in so cowardly an attack, but Johanssen's part of the mutiny had been quiet, and the Captain told him he might live if he would go to work. A little later the Captain discovered the murder of his son, and regretted his clemency, but he kept his word.

For four days the Captain and mate worked the vessel, with Johanssen at the wheel. Their wounds caused them excruciating pain, and even constant ablutions with salt water could not ward off the aggravating effect of a hot climate. On the afternoon of the fourth day the captain had made up his mind what to do, and he told the mate about it, who agreed with him. Their wounds were getting worse, and they might be helpless at any time, in which case Johanssen would betray them and let out the men in the hold, who would pitch them overboard. In any event, should the fine weather cease, they were not capable of managing the ship alone. They must have help, and that without putting themselves at the mercy of their men.

The Captain and mate went forward, pulled off the hatch, and ordered the men to come up and submit. There was no answer. The Captain emptied a revolver at random into the hold and repeated the order. This was followed by a whispered conversation. The men were exhausted by four days' fasting. Beside it was unpleasant to be shot at in the dark, and they made up their minds to submit. The Captain ordered them up one at a time, and the mate stood ready to enforce the order. The carpenter was the first to appear. After all had laid down their knives and axes, they were ordered to stand in line. The Captain looked at them sternly, and then taking careful aim with his revolver, shot the carpenter through the heart. The man dropped like a log, and the others stood in speechless terror, while Johanssen thanked his stars at the helm. Captain Enstrom waited a moment, and then lifted his revolver again. This time it was the seaman Toton's turn, and he dropped dead beside the carpenter. The last two, who had been the tools of the dead men, were nearly dead with fright, but they were needed to work the ship.

"Throw those bodies overboard," the Captain said, "get something to eat, and go to work."

They gladly obeyed, and heaved the two corpses into the sea, and then united with Johanssen in faithful obedience.

A few days later the Captain fell in with a Norwegian bark, whose Captain lent him two men. Their presence enabled the wounded officers to take much needed rest, and the vessel soon arrived safely at Brisbane. The mate was taken to a hospital, and when last heard of, was still there. The Captain, thanks to his wonderful constitution, recovered rapidly, and was able to proceed on his voyage with a new crew.

He complained bitterly yesterday of his treatment at Jamaica, where the authorities seemed most anxious to try him, and allowed the mutineers to go free after two months' imprisonment, although they confessed their guilt. Toton, they said, was their leader; he understood navigation, and had joined the ship at Boston in July, 1883, with the mutiny already planned.—N. Y. Sun.

ONLY FIVE MINUTES.

The Time a Man Was Given to Prepare for Death—An Innocent Little Amusement Arranged By Frolicsome Cowboys.

Colonel Will Middleby, who has just returned from the Indian Territory, relates a startling experience. "I had permission to traverse the Territory," said the Colonel, "but I soon found that the white scoundrels who inhabit the country had no regard for it. One day, wet and hungry, I stopped at a sort of public house. A company of rough white men had assembled in the barroom of the house. I at once noticed that I was regarded with disfavor, and I was on the eve of quitting the place when one fellow, as rough a man as I ever saw, said:

"'Cap'n, what's your bus'ness?'

"'I am out here to look at the country.'

"'Hain't you looked at it?'

"'Yes.'

"'Wall, what air you hangin' 'roun' fur?'

"'I have a right to hang around.'

"'What right?'

"'This,' I replied producing my passport and presenting it to him.

"'Tain't worth storing room,' he said as he coolly proceeded to tear it up. His companions roared with laughter. I had a pistol, but what could I do with a dozen desperate men?

"'Now,' continued the ruffian who had destroyed my passport, 'we understand you pretty well. You are a detective, an' hain't come here after no good, nuther.'

"'I am not a detective.'

"'Do you mean to say that I am a liar?'

"'That's what he does Jack!' shouted one of his companions. In a moment I was surrounded. Every man had drawn his pistol.

"'I ought to kill you right here,' said the ruffian addressed as Jack. 'I oughten't to let you live another minit.'

Some one advanced and relieved me of my pistol.

"'Now I'll tell you what we'll do,' said Jack. 'We'll just give you five minits to live. Stand right thar, now, an' do your prayin'.'

"In vain I pleaded. The ruffians would not listen to me.

"'It's jes' five minutes to twelve,' said Jack. 'Look up thar at the clock an' count your time an' when twelve o'clock comes, you are gone; an' if you take your eyes offen it in the meantime you are gone anyhow.'

"I gazed at the clock and began to mumble a prayer. Oh, how precious a single moment of time can be. I thought of my home, of my wife and children. The desperate men stepped behind me. I could hear their suppressed breathing. I could hear the beating of my own heart. Five minutes to live. It had already seemed an age. Would the time never come? Cold perspiration rolled down my face and almost blinded my eyes. I could but indistinctly see the face of the clock, but I knew that only a minute more was left me. That the wretches would kill me, I had not a doubt, but why had they chosen such a method? Then I remembered an article I had once read, descriptive of the delight felt by such men in seeing a victim suffer. Death, of itself, was not sufficient punishment. The time must have nearly expired. My knees were so weak that I could scarcely stand. I wondered how I'd feel when the bullets should strike me. I wondered if I could hear the report of the pistols. I heard a laugh. I quickly turned and saw a negro standing near me. The ruffians were gone. I glanced at the clock. Five minutes to twelve.

"'What are you laughing at?' I demanded of the negro.

"'At dat ole joke dem cowboys played on yer. Dat ar clock ain' runnin', boss. De gennermen tole me ter gin yer dis pistol. Heah it is, er haw, haw!'"—Arkansaw Traveler.

AN INTERESTING RELIC.

Copy of Lincoln's Letter Declining the Governorship of Oregon.

Through the favor of Mr. Wallis Nash, of Corvallis, we have been shown a letter of rare interest and high value. It is, morever, a letter of peculiar interest to the people of our State, being a letter written by Abraham Lincoln in 1849 declining the offer of the Governorship of Oregon. We print the letter herewith:

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., September 27, 1849.

John Addison, Esq.

MY DEAR SIR—Your letter is received. I can not but be grateful to you and all other friends who have interested themselves in having the Governorship of Oregon offered to me, but, on as much reflexion as I have had time to give the subject, I can not consent to accept it.

I have an ever abiding wish to serve you, but as to the Secretaryship, I have already recommended our friend, Simon Francis, of the Journal. Please present my respects to G. T. M. Davis generally, and my thanks especially for his kindness in the Oregon matter. Your as ever, A. LINCOLN.

The letter is written on a sheet of old-fashioned blue letter paper; it is folded in the style common to that time, so as to be sent without an envelope, and was sealed with the usual red wafer. It was addressed thus: "John Addison, Esq., Washington, D. C." It bears the post-mark of "Springfield, Ill., September 28th," and at the top of the right-hand corner the words "Free. A. Lincoln, M. C." The letter is now the property of Colonel G. T. M. Davis, of New York, the person named in it, to whom Mr. Lincoln desired Mr. Addison to tender his repects and thanks.—Portland Oregonian.

THE MADRID HOSPITAL.

Description of a Visit to the Cholera Hospital at the Spanish Capital.

The first wards we entered were those of the convalescents. They consisted of two large, light and airy rooms, beautifully clean as, indeed, the whole of the hospital was), in the first of which were about six or seven men sitting about and seemingly doing nothing but passing the time away by chatting. They looked to me quite well, though mostly very thin. It was a novel sight to see so many poor Spaniards in so remarkable a state of cleanliness. I expect it was the only part of their treatment they found unpleasant—the baths. There is no door between the men's and women's wards, and we merely had to step through a doorway innocent of curtain or anything. I saw just about the same number of women, some of them, poor things, looking very ill indeed. Their faces were not pale, but thin and drawn. One pleasant-looking girl I asked how she was. "Very tired, very weak, but getting better." If it had not been for the assurance of the nurse, I should have thought she was dying. He said that in one or two days at most all these cases would be discharged. Just as I was about to leave the ward, in came a sister with the afternoon's chocolate. It was worth while to see the way in which she was welcomed. The patients adore the good sisters, and not without a reason. Before leaving the convalescent ward I was shown a poor little fellow whose father and only brother has been swept away by the disease, and the little chap left alone. His mother had long been dead. The boy seemed quite a pet in the ward, and was evidently well satisfied with his present quarters.

Coming out of the ward, we turned sharp round to the left and entered room No. 2. This was a long, narrow room, along one side of which were ranged twenty beds, each one tenanted by a man. These were bad cases, and all seemed in quite a stupor. One thing I must not omit to notice. On entering this ward I had removed my hat. One man, who seemed in the last stage of exhaustion, and who was lying staring at us with fixed, glassy eyes, slowly and with a painful effort raised his hand to his head, and took off a sort of skull cap he was wearing. Polite are these people to the last. Three or four beds further on I noticed, close together, two beds, in which were the two worst cases. The men were a terrible sight. Their lips were the color of old parchment, their eyes closed, seemingly unconscious, and dreadfully, terribly thin. Their cheek bones seemed almost as if they would start through their faces. "To-day," said the nurse, "they die." And I thought they would be glad enough to do so from their appearance. On reaching the end of this ward we turned again to the left into a square room, in which were a few women, all very ill. In one corner of the room I saw a little cot. It was tenanted by quite a young infant—I should think not more than nine or twelve months old. It had been in the hospital for over twenty days, and, poor child, bore traces of having suffered very much. One of its arms was lying outside the coverlet, and looked like a little stick of wood. To me this little waif, lying there alone and in such a state, was the most painful sight in the whole hospital, and I do not mind confessing—why should I?—that for a moment I had to bite my lips pretty hard, and choke down something that would have been very malapropos in a person viewing the cases in quite a professional capacity. In this ward I had a chat with one of the sisters, a bright, bonny woman, whose very presence must have been of, one would think, as much efficacy as the physic.

After my chat I was conducted up a large staircase to see the six new cases which had come in and been put to bed. They were all girls, and all inmates of the orphan school here; one or two of them seemed to be in pain, convulsively lifting their arms and drawing up their legs. Here was another sister, who gave me at some length the treatment to which patients are subjected and the symptoms by which cholera is told. As these are pretty well known I shall not repeat them here, except perhaps to mention that for six days a person ill of cholera is kept without any food whatever beyond a little tea and warm rum.—Cor. Pall Mall Gazette.

THE OLD STORY.

The True Inwardness of an Editor's Popularity.

My son, if I should publish a daily paper for twenty years—if you can just strain your credulity to the point of believing that I could keep a daily paper going longer than six weeks—if I should publish a daily paper twenty years, and in all that time take occasion to mention you about twice a week as "our distinguished fellow townsman" and "that eminent man of letters and merchant prince," and should say every time you crossed the river on the ferry that you had "departed" for the East, and when you came back I should notice that "our justly popular fellow citizen" had "returned," if I should in all those years praise your dog, your horse, your goods, your wife and babies, your clothes and your character, and then some day, when I was away attending a convention, my local editor should call the attention of the town marshal to the filthy condition of the street and sidewalk in front of your store, would you ever forgive me? Would you? You would denounce the paper as a "scurrilous sheet" and its editor as a "lying scandal monger that ought to be whipped out of the community." That is the reason, my son, why there are but two kinds of editors. One is a meek, smiling, timid little scrivener, who pays all the bills and allows his neighbors to edit his paper; and the other is a truculent, loud-voiced savage, who viciously scratches out the nice little personal the local editor has written about your arrival home, and sends it in—"By some inscrutable decree of a stern and relentless Providence, old Jake Diffenbaugh has been permitted to come back home alive," and then meets you at the head of the stairs with a blackjack and pounds the top of your head in when you come to see about it.—Burdette, in Brooklyn Eagle.

THE DUBIOUS MAN.

Positive Conviction a Thing to be Coveted by Young Men.

My son, if you can be positive I am glad of it. I like to see a man positive that he knows what he knows. I am glad to hear you talk as though you knew all about it. I do admire a positive character. Alas, therein do I lack. I am not skeptical, but I am not a positive man. I am not really positive about scarcely anything. I have been taught from childhood that two and two make four, and I believe it, but if you rush at me and cross-question me and corner me about it, I will have to own up that all I know about it is what the teacher told me. I don't think my teacher would lie about a little thing like that. If it were a question of millions now, there might be some temptation to slip in a thousand or two on a poor ignorant fellow who didn't know anything about it. I am not positive when America was discovered nor who discovered it. There are claimants all the way from the lost tribes of Israel and Eric the Red down to Oscar Wilde. How am I to know? I am not even positive when I will pay my debts. And this grievous lack of positiveness (is there such a word?) makes me dread controversy. I had rather give in to a positive man a week than dispute with him ten minutes, because he is positive about everything and I am positive in nothing. Why, even after he has silenced me I am not positive that he is in the right. I am not even positive that he is positive. He says he is, but I don't know. So I wait—I am very patient, and often it happens, I may say it always happens, that a few days, a few weeks, a few months, or a year, even—a year is not long—shows that he was altogether wrong and that I was unquestionably right on every point. And then how triumphantly I hunt him up, and ride over him rough shod, and say to him: "There, what did I tell you? Didn't I say so? Wasn't I right? Didn't I warn you? Didn't I know? Are you convinced now, you pig headed blockhead of ignorance and presumption? The next time I tell you a thing is so you'll know that it is so, whether it is or not." That's triumph for you, my boy. But ah, me, I so often grieve over my lack of positive conviction. Do you cultivate a positive character, my son. And when you know it about all come down and stay a few days with me. I'll try to lead you into a few ambiguous pits which I have vaguely dug here and there about my superphysical grounds in an indeterminate sort of way for my absolute friends to fall into.—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

HOP CULTURE.

But a Limited Portion of the United States Suited to it.

Poetry and song and the pages of romance have united to make classic the vine-clad hills of the Rhine and of Italy, and next to the ruined castles which crown their commanding heights the traveler looks for the clustering fruit which has given its name to all this region. But he looks in vain if he expects to see anything which adds picturesqueness or beauty to the landscape. A vineyard is not in itself "a thing of beauty." On the other hand, the golden wreaths of hops, as they hang ripening in the August sunshine, depending in graceful clusters from the tall poles, or swinging in the breeze in umbrella-like canopies, give to the hills and valleys of Central New York, or the slopes of distant California and Washington, or the meadows of sunny English Kent, a frame of beauty than the boasted vineyards of France or of Italy ever dreamed of.

It is seldom that we find a crop or product which seems to have but one specific use in the world, but aside from the very limited amount required to leaven the baker's loaf and the comparatively small quantity used in druggists' preparations, there appears to be no other possible demand for the 200,000,000 pounds of the world's crop of hops than the making of beer. For some reason not fully explained by difference of soil and climate, but a very limited portion of the United States seems suited to their successful cultivation. A radius of forty miles, of which Cooperstown, N. Y., is the centre, incloses more than half of the hop-producing region of the Union. The three northern counties bordering on Lake Champlain and Canada, with a small portion of Vermont and Michigan, add about one-sixth to this, and, with parts of Wisconsin, comprise pretty much all the land east of the Rocky Mountains devoted to their cultivation. The Pacific coast is becoming an important factor in production, having risen from 15,000 bales in 1880, to 70,000 in 1884, equal to 12,500,000 pounds. In England the production of hops is peculiarly associated with the County of Kent, which has about 40,000 acres in hops, out of 65,000 in the kingdom.—G. Pomeroy Keese, in Harper's Magazine.

A WAR REALITY.

Meeting of Father and Son on the Bloody Decks of the Harriet Lane.

A day or two since as the correspondent was [illegible] the Episcopal Cemetery, in the western part of the city in company with a friend, his attention was first [illegible] a marble stone under the [illegible] a vigorous five-ak, [illegible] the following inscription:

EDWARD LEA
Lieut. Commanding U. S. N.
Born Jan. 31st, 1837.
Killed in Battle January 1st, 1863.

"My Father is Here."

"This monument," remarked the correspondent's companion, "commemorates one of the saddest of the many sad events transpiring during the late war, for it marks the last resting place of as brave an officer as ever trod the deck of an American man-of-war. Edward Lea was a Baltimorean by birth, and the breaking out of the war found him an officer in the Federal navy. His father, Major Albert M. Lea, who espoused the Confederate side, had written him early in life giving his views on the then pending contest, stating that he must judge for himself the side he would take, but should he choose the service of the United States they would probably never meet again, unless perchance in battle.

"The young officer elected to stand by the old flag, and when the steamer Harriet Lane was transformed into a man-of-war he was selected by Captain Wainwright as his First Lieutenant, and in that capacity served under Farragut at Fort Jackson, New Orleans and Vicksburg. When the United States forces occupied Galveston, in the fall of 1862, the Harriet Lane formed one of the flotilla, and when the city was retaken by the rebel forces under Magruder, on the 1st of January, 1863, Major A. M. Lea, the father of the young Lieutenant, was among the attacking party, and from the shore witnessed his son's ship surrender, after her Captain had been killed and most of her officers desperately wounded.

"Proceeding to the head of Bean's wharf, near where the fight took place, Major Lea hailed the Harriet Lane, up on whose bulwarks General Tom Green and Commodore Leon Smith stood, and asked if any of the steamer's officers had been killed or wounded, and the reply was:

"Yes; nearly all of them."

"Major Lea was then granted permission to go on board and meeting an officer of the ship, asked if Lieutenant Lea was there, and was answered:

"Yes, and badly wounded."

"I am his father," replied the Confederate officer, and he was led to his son, who was lying in the cock-pit surrounded by the dead and dying. The son recognized the father, telling him that he hoped he was not mortally wounded. Dr. Penrose, of Philadelphia, who was operating upon a wounded man, stated that the Lieutenant was mortally wounded and might die within an hour, or might linger for several days. The father then returned to the shore to procure an ambulance to take the wounded man to the hospital, but during his absence the Lieutenant expired, his last words, when asked if he had any directions to give, being simply: 'My father is here.' He was buried, together with Captain Wainwright, on the 2d of January, with military honors.

"A wealthy relative of Baltimore asked the father's leave to remove the remains of the Lieutenant to Green Mount Cemetery and place them beside his mother, but the request was denied, the father feeling that it was more fitting for the brave sailor to sleep where he fell in sight of the sea and in sound of the surf. In 1866, when the remains of Captain Wainwright were removed by his brother officers, they wished also to take the Lieutenant's body to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., but this effort was also resisted. To-day, of all who fought and died under the stars and stripes on the Harriet Lane's decks, the remains of Lieutenant Lea are the only ones resting beneath the turf on Galveston Island."—Galveston (Tex.) Cor. St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Delegates in attendance will be entertained by members of the local society, and everything will be done to make this a notable event in the history of the society.

The convention will open with an informal session on the afternoon of Tuesday, December 1, at 2:30 o'clock, and close with an evening session on Thursday.

On the evenings of the second and third days popular lectures will be delivered. The first evening and the day sessions will be devoted to the discussion of topics connected with the prosecution of horticultural pursuits.

GOOD SENSE FROM A FARMER.

In regard to the effort now making to secure additional manufactories at Adrian, a farmer writes the following communication to the Times. It contains more hard sense than anything we have yet seen on the subject:

While your business men have been spending their money lavishly to attract something large, they have naturally overlooked and ignored the trade that used to flow into their streets from the rural districts around them, and little towns on the outskirts of the county have sprung into existence and are to-day reaping largely the benefits once enjoyed by Adrian.

One of the principal causes for this is the bad condition of the highways leading into the city a large part of the year. Had Adrian spent ten per cent. of the money paid out in the last ten years to "boom" the town in various unsuccessful schemes, in building, or helping the ruralists around the city to build good Macadamized roads that would enable the farmers to reach the city any day of the year he desires to go, then business would be quite different most of the time. Take the present time to illustrate. The wheat crop is but a small part of it yet marketed, and the farm work is about over, so that if it were possible farmers would, with the little rise in the price, begin to run it in. But to get to the city of Adrian from more than one or two points now, with a load, would be about as easy to do as for a man "to lift himself over the fence by his boot straps." If we sell our farm produce at all between now and next May or June, we mus take it to some other market, as we have done for the last five or six years. If the business men of Adrian will offer a little help to some of the surrounding towns, if they will grade and gravel the roads leading into the city so that it will be as easy to get there as it is to go the other way, the streets will soon be full of teams the entire year, as it is during small portions of the year, and we shall not read in the local items, as we so often do, that "the late rains have made the roads so bad that our streets look quite deserted," &c., for the rains would have no effect on the roads.

Adrian is located in the midst of a clay district, and clay is not the best soil to make roads of, and the highway tax levied on the farms surrounding the city, though considerable, is not enough to do more than to plow a few furrows along the road, and dump a lot of clay and sod into the track, and make the passing over it for the balance of the year dangerous to man and beast.

We commend these words to the business men of Tecumseh. The plan of graveling the highways has already been adopted in the vicinity of Tecumseh with the best results. The Adrian road for three miles south of Tecumseh in the township of Raisin is a splendid highway, over which the heaviest loads can be drawn in the softest kind of weather. The Chicago turnpike west of the village for about two miles is in equally good condition, and a portion of the road between here and Clinton has been well graveled. A few hundred dollars raised by the business men of Tecumseh to assist the local highway officers in graveling the roads west to Franklin Center, east to the village of Ridgeway, and north to the village of Clinton, would yield one hundred per cent on the investment within a year after the work was completed. The farmers on these roads are as much interested in this improvement as any one else can be. Their horses and wagons are dragged through the mud for three or four months each year. Good roads to travel over would result in a big saving to them within a period of eight or ten years. They could well afford to devote a few extra day's work each spring, over and above the regular highway tax, in graveling the highway adjacent to their own farms. We should like to see this subject discussed at some of our farmers' clubs, and some action taken in this direction before the opening of the coming spring.

THE MAN FROM TECUMP.

The following bit of gossip is clipped from the Chicago Herald. We are inclined to think it is a fish story as we know of no man residing in Tecumseh by the name of John Kuder:

John Kuder, of Tecump, Mich., was walking down Sherman street early last evening, when, gosh! somebody tapped him on the shoulder and said: "How-de," and gosh! he was such a trim-looking feller and carried such a nice little valise that John thought he was a physician, and gosh! he was going to the same little Tecump in Michigan that John came from, and gosh! if he didn't know John and everybody else in Tecump, just as a doctor should, and gosh! he was going back there on the evening train. The doctor met a couple of friends and introduced John, and gosh! if them two fellers didn't look as slick as the doctor. Suddenly one of them said: "Gosh! I've lost my pocketbook, and I've got to pay for that bill of goods at the depot." Innocent John loaned him $50, and soon after the trio gave him the laugh and scampered off down the street. The man from Tecump said Gosh! with a long string of something after it, and then went to the Armory and told his story between as many more goshes as are here printed.

The county Horticultural society will hold its December meeting at the Plymouth church chapel on Wednesday, December 2d, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The subject will be "Pear culture, and the best varieties for family use and market."

A general invitation to all is cordially extended.

There will be a forenoon and afternoon session. S. B. MANN, Sec.

D. S. Ward, with Boston Comedy Co., will appear in his original farces.

THE WAR AGAINST SATAN.

It affords us unalloyed pleasure to announce to the public that the Salvation Army is still on deck, or throwing aside the rhetorical figure and speaking in unvarnished English, the Army still holds the fort. They have not gathered in many converts, that is true. Modesty prevents our particularizing too much on this point. But they hold good congregations, and many of our old incorrigible sinners are gradually beginning to see the light. Capt. Kirk is doing a good work and he deserves encouragement. The cow boy needs a new coat and his overalls need mending but his musical voice appeals to the unconverted just the same. The sisters play the jewsharp just as well as though they were clad in silks and satins.

The program of last week's meetings will give our readers a faint idea of the general routine of services as held by the army.

Monday Evening.—Street parade at seven P. M., followed by exercises in the sanctuary. The cowboy performed several interesting tricks with his lasso. Several army songs were sung interspersed with solos on the triangle. A collection was taken to buy the sisters a lot of new shoestrings.

Tuesday Evening.—On account of the rainy weather the usual street parade was omitted. The captain gave a powerful discourse upon this theme—"Roll up, tumble up, anyway to get up." The captain then passed the hat himself to raise money to pay his last week's board bill. When the collection was counted out and revealed the sum of 47 cents, the captain's lower jaw dropped and a briny tear trickled out of his left eye. "Brethren and sinners," said he, "my board bill is due. My landlord is urgent. He owes a sausage bill at Marsh's, and his last codfish is not paid for. My board only costs $1.00 per week, for I pay it partly in work. I help wash the dishes and chop all the hash, but the landlord must have his dollar promptly." The hat was passed a second time and 12 cents resulted. A subscription paper was then started, headed with 25 cents and by this means $1.50 was raised. The meeting then closed with the doxology.

Wednesday Evening.—After the usual street parade, the services opened with a tamborine and cornet duet. The entire troupe then gave the audience a lesson in vocal gymnastics, in which oratory and music were beautifully and harmoniously blended together. A collection was taken to buy oil for the lamps, and two new strings for the tamborine. The meeting closed with the chorus "Hallelujah, won't we get there?"

Thursday Evening.—The counter attraction at the rink thinned out the audience this evening. Capt. Kirk is an adept at skating, and the squint-eyed sister wanted to learn how, so the meeting adjourned to attend the rink.

Friday Evening.—The meeting opened with a rattling chorus by the full troupe, entitled "Way down upon the Raisin river." Questions and answers on the catechism followed in the form of a responsive service. The cowboy then exhibited a few feats with his lasso. Three big cobwebs were lassoed out of the ceiling about forty feet distant from the platform.

Saturday Evening.—A grand street parade opened the exercises. The procession was followed by one hundred and ten boys, fifty dogs and seventeen cats. Upon the ringing up of the curtain inside, a tamborine solo greeted the audience, which made the hair of the oldest citizen present stand up on end. The Lieut. followed with an exhortation to the impenitent, which extorted tears from the rafters and extinguished the fire in the stove. A collection was taken to buy a load of elm blocks and a bolt for the back door, as some evil disposed urchin broke into the chapel the day before and lugged off a dozen song books. The meeting closed with the chorus, "Mary had a little lamb."

Boston Comedy Company.

Ward & Bice's comedy company are playing to good business and giving splendid satisfaction at the opera house, every evening this week. The company is composed of very clever people and their plays are all well rendered. Miss Christie never fails to get an encore when she sings; Miss Lulu Delmo is a first-class soubrette; Mr. Jennison is a capable leading man; Mr. Ward makes plenty of frolic and does it without resorting to the vulgarisms so common on the stage, while the balance of the support by Miss Bessie Tremayne and Messrs. Dean, Core, Barns and Reed is fair. In short they give an excellent performance for the money. To-night they produce "East Lynne," Friday evening, "Won at Last," Saturday evening, that great play "The Secretary" and at the Saturday afternoon performance "A Father's Curse," followed by a choice comedy. Only 10 cents to any part of the house at the matinee.—Howell Republican.

We call attention to the prospectus of the Michigan Horticulturist, to be found in another column. This is a new horticultural journal recently started in Detroit and should be patronized by every fruit grower in Michigan. It is an excellent magazine and costs only $1,00 per year. Clubbed with the HERALD at a reduced rate.

We have received the first annual trade number of the Florida Times-Union published at Jacksonville. It is a six-column sheet, of twenty-four pages, and is filled with interesting and statistical matter in regard to Jacksonville, and the State at large. It is printed on tinted book paper and is an elegant piece of typographical work. Sample copies can be obtained by sending ten cents to C. H. Jones & Bro., Jacksonville, Fla.

An oyster supper will be given at the Christian Church, Britton, on Wednesday evening, December 9th, under the direction of the ministerial committee. The Britton Cornet Band will be present to enliven the occasion with music.—An election will also be held in the interest of three young ladies—Misses Minnie Ackley, Mary Scott and Phene Underwood. The candidate receiving the highest number of votes at 10 cents per vote will receive a prize worth $5,00. The cause is a worthy one and there ought to be a large attendance.

Mr. T. I. Sutton of Raisin has issued a club price list for newspapers, magazines, etc., and proposes to embark in the newspaper subscription business. He has had considerable experience in canvassing for newspapers for the past few years, and is well qualified for the work he has undertaken. His list is a twenty page pamphlet containing all the principal periodicals in the United States, the regular rate for the same and the club rate which he can accept for the same. A few pages are devoted to advertisements. Postmasters, newsdealers and others who are taking subscriptions to magazines will do well to send to him for a copy of his price list. Address T. I. Sutton, Sutton, Lenawee Co., Mich.

Adrian wants the New Haven clock factory, that is, the enterprising portion of Adrian wants it. The editor of the Record wants it bad. We sympathize with the Record. The city has been struggling along behind the times for a good many years. A first-class clock factory would be a bonanza for the town.

Al. Heesen won an easy victory at the rink last Saturday evening in the mile race. He took the lead at the start and come in about one lap ahead of Burtis. The Manchester folks will have to get up early in the morning to get a boy to beat the Tecumseh champion. The time made was about three minutes and forty-five seconds.

Why shouldn't Tecumseh put in a bid for the New Haven clock factory? We have a skating rink and the Salvation Army, but we don't feel "stuck up" on that account. Let us have a clock factory.

Jackson has a new paper called the Sunday Times. It is a nine column folio, well edited and neatly printed, and deserves to achieve success.—Jackson is well supplied with newspapers now but a first-class live newspaper in that town ought to prosper.

Loomis, of this city, a democrat of the old school, and very entertaining in conversation. The captain was 73 years of age, and was buried at Tecumseh.—Ann Arbor Argus.

The deceased was a brother-in-law to Mr. Nathan Morse of this village, and has frequently visited Mr. Morse during the latter's residence in Tecumseh. The remains were deposited in our cemetery as above stated.

Congressman Ellredge will start for Washington next Monday.

Marks & Russell are renovating their store and treating it to a coat of paint.

He has also for sale a number of the views or groups of Miss Julia Snell's school, and the west and north branch schools taken the 25th of June last, as well as views of Tecumseh, Sand Lake, Devils Lake, &c.

The Baptist Ladies of Lenawee association will hold their semi-annual missionary meeting with the Baptist church of Tecumseh, on Wednesday Dec. 2, 1885, commencing at 2 o'clock P. M. continuing through the afternoon and evening and part of the following day. The Baptist ladies of the Tecumseh circles extend a cordial invitation to all interested in mission work, especially to the circle's of our sister churches of Tecumseh. Dinner and supper served in the chapel to which all attending our meeting are invited. COMMITTEE.

Frank Silvers is getting his new stables and office nearly ready for occupancy. The lot is an ell shaped piece of land, with a frontage of about fifty feet on both Railroad and Killbuck streets and about twelve rods deep from each street. The office building is on Railroad street. In the rear of this is a large box stall where Banker will be kept. In the back part of the lot is located a large hay barn, and a long shed containing eight closed box stalls, which will furnish quarters for his other horses. He now has five horses besides Banker, and expects to own some thoroughbred Kentucky stock before spring. The entire lot is surrounded by a tight board fence eight feet high. The buildings and yard are all roomy and will afford exactly such quarters as Mr. Silvers has long needed for his business.

Last Friday evening Beer's Post, G. A. R. gave an oyster supper at their new hall, the occasion being a sort of formal dedication of their new quarters. The first call was sounded promptly at six o'clock and the tables were soon filled. For two hours the new comers were constantly coming and the tables were re-set several times. Wheeler's quartette furnished a few of their best selections; and a very pleasant social time was enjoyed by the company. The hall has been elegantly papered with wall and ceiling decorations and a lot of new furniture has been purchased. The ante-rooms are ample for all ordinary occasions. During the social, the veterans sang several old war songs. About nine o'clock the visiting portion of the company retired and the Post held a business meeting at which arrangements were made for a public entertainment to be given soon.

THE JACKSON ORANGE LODGE.

A letter from Jackson to the Protestant Standard of Nov. 19th contains an account of the establishment of the new Orange Lodge in that city, which we think will be of interest to many of our readers:

F. G. BAILEY, Esq.—Dear Sir and Bro.—I know you will be glad to hear we have planted a branch of the good old Orange tree here. It being the first one in this bigoted city we had some difficulties to contend with. On Thursday evening, 5th inst., the worthy Secretary of Tecumseh Lodge, with nine other true brothers, arrived here bringing with them the warrant and authority to organize Loyal Orange Lodge No. 183.

At 7:20 the lodge was opened in due form, and the undersigned was installed as Worthy Master; John Stewart, Deputy Master; W. J. Smith, Secretary; W. Halliday, Treasurer, and J. Grant, First Committeeman.

After the initiation of some candidates, a vote of thanks was tendered to the brethren of Tecumseh Loyal Orange Lodge No. 60, for coming such a distance in a steady downpour of rain; also for kindly presenting our Lodge with a pair of mallets. After remarks by a number of the brethren, which were of an interesting nature, especially by Bro. James Elliot, Secretary of Tecumseh Lodge, the first lodge ever opened in Jackson was closed in due form.

I might say that after the lodge closed all partook of refreshments provided and spent a very pleasant time enjoying the good speeches, songs, etc.

Fraternally yours,
WM. NASSAU CUFFE.

A new idea in weddings is for the bride to go to the church before the wedding and practice her part. The bridesmaid is present, and a brother or male relative takes the place of the groom. By practicing for a few weeks the act is performed to perfection.—Hudson Post.

Editor Scarritt of the Hudson Post has received a donation of a bushel of turnips. Turnips and pumpkins would go well together. Just at present we are short on turnips and long on pumpkins. If Bro. Scarritt will send us a few of his turnips, we will return a quarter section of our pumpkin.

The enterprising citizens of Addison have constructed a new side walk on the north side of the mill dam connecting the east and west sides of the village. A zealous Tecumseh citizen devotedly determined to save property from the burning dwelling of Mr. George Curtis, secured a large mirror which he carefully carried a few fods from the house and then threw a couple of yards further. Of course the mirror was smashed in a hundred pieces, but it was saved from the fire.—Adrian Record.

Mr. E. S. Holdredge, traveling agent for a millinery house arrived home yesterday, bringing with him a very sore hand. He came as far as Tecumseh the previous evening and took a hand in at the fire which destroyed the residence of George Curtis. He was one of the first to arrive, and supposing the occupants to be asleep, broke in a window, cutting his hand in a cruel fashion.—Adrian Record.

A great many people have called at The Times counting room to see the badge prepared by the editors of the state for Hon. Perry Hannah. A memorial to accompany the badge has been engrossed by Mr. W. H. Hall, accountant for the Wiley construction company. It is only little less artistic than the badge itself, and is well worth looking at. Both badge and memorial will be shipped the first of next week.—Adrian Times.

A TITLED MILLINER.

An Example Worthy of Imitation by Many Girls.

An educated and titled lady has opened a shop for the making and selling of bonnets in the West End, London. Despite conventional criticism, and nothing daunted by the fear of losing caste or dignity in the pursuit of such a vocation as the traffic in bonnets, millinery and small fancy wares, she is spoken of in the English press as a highly contented and financially successful woman. The indications are that our English countrywomen are at least a trifle ahead of us in attempts to widen the fields of labor for the choice and occupancy of women of good class, and that the rough edges of prejudice and the false notions concerning the appointed place for women in the domain of the world's industries and employments, are fast giving way to juster and more rational views of what women can do, and ought to be encouraged and commended in doing. History constantly repeats itself in the experiences of well-born and well-educated girls, who, from necessity arising from the misfortunes or changed conditions of their families, have been compelled to resort to the distasteful and dependent places of governess, companion or reader. Such would find far greater freedom from the petty restraints and heartless insolence to which they are often subjected by turning their minds and energies to the art of dress or bonnet making. If a natural gift supplemented by patient study and practice, prove that she has found her proper place, such a woman will soon profit by the confidence reposed in her taste and ability by a constantly increasing list of friends and patrons, and the pecuniary returns of her labor will vastly outweigh the customary pittance doled out in the "respectable callings," to which we have alluded referred. A lady writing in an English journal, says: "I hear that famous champion of women's rights, Mrs. Lydia Becker, is giving countenance and support to a movement which has for its object the teaching of dressmaking to young women of good class who have to be among the working bees of the universal hive. It was thought probable that type-writing would prove a remunerative and profitable means of support, but women who took it up, as many did in the spirit of amateurs, and without any previous training, were discouraged on finding that neither this, nor any other art, can be mastered without serving an apprenticeship to it. The dressmaking scheme is one that necessitates steady, patient training, if it is to be productive of the best results. There is no royal road to learning, and one must climb the mountain of knowledge by slow degrees—one may not hope to clear it by bounds. When there is a necessity for girls to do something for their own support, or where means are small and families large, it is well for a girl who has a particular talent to take up the art of dressmaking or millinery. Certainly, there is a great deal of discouragement to be borne before skill and proficiency are arrived at; but, after all, the processes are not so slow as those whereby women reach success in many other branches of learning."—N. Y. Evening Post.

MADAME SENKI.

What Constitutes an Ideal Beauty Among the Chinese.

To have seen Mrs. Kok-Sin Senki is to have learned what constitutes beauty among the Chinese. Her features, as represented by a Russian traveler who had the pleasure of taking her portrait, are very pleasing, the mouth being of the most approved pattern of that type known as "Cupid's bow," and the eyes full and almond shaped.

But Mrs. Senki by no means depends upon her face for a passport to the court of beauty; she has merely to put out her tiny foot, to be admired by every æsthetic Chinese swell. To possess small feet, as every one knows, is one of the principal conditions of beauty in China.

The question of beautiful feet is one of the first which occur to a man in the selection of a wife, and her merits are greatly enhanced by her inability to stand or walk without support. Thus Mr. Senki is particularly fond of his Kok-Sin.

He is also very glad to introduce her to Europeans, and waives the customs of his country to the extent of allowing her to see visitors alone.

In sitting for her portrait, she beguiled the time by smoking, and occasionally teased a small dog with her foot, possibly for the purpose of calling attention to the size of that member. She could not even go upstairs without being supported by a servant, a helplessness of which she was exceedingly proud.

Some visitors one day played on the piano and organ for her amusement, and even danced, to initiate her into European amusements. She imagined a waltz to be a theatrical representation, and when her mistake was explained, declared:

"Well, my feet could never do it."

The artist begged for leave to make a drawing of her feet.

"Another time," she said, and I will put on prettier boots."

He then asked for a pair as a remembrance, which she promised, and duly sent him. These boots proved to be exactly one inch and three quarters long.—Youth's Companion.

Courtship in Cuba.

In those Cuban families which have not held themselves aloof from intercourse with foreigners, the gradual influence of modern ideas has done much to soften the rigor of the old system, which debarred the maidens of a Spanish family from intercourse with the opposite sex, but in many families the old regime is still maintained, and the "amante de ventanna" is still a common sight in Havana. He may pour forth to his mistress, setting within the window, his most impassionate vows; she is the star of his life, the light of his soul, the hope of his existence, but with these abstract delights he must rest contented. Toward a favorite swain a tiny hand may be extended between the bars, a ribbon or other love token intrusted, but the barred windows is always between them, and the duenna always within earshot.—Temple Bar.

VITALITY OF FROGS.

A Question that has Agitated Science for Many Years.

How long it is possible for frogs to live without air and food has been a matter of experiment many times; but in the face of well established instances like those quoted it is difficult to conduct experiments that will be considered as being of a conclusive character. That these creatures should be able to live not for centuries only, but for ages, appears contradictory to all reason and common sense. In some cases frogs have been found in cretaceous rocks. The oldest fossil toads and frogs occur in tertiary rocks. If, therefore, those found in cretaceous rocks had been there from their formation it would be equivalent to saying that the live frog could be ages and ages older than its fossil relative. To most people such a declaration would be the height of absurdity. If thoroughly inquired into it would probably be discovered that in each case there was a fissure in the rocks or trees in which frogs have been found large enough for the admission of water and the embryo frog which has developed there. It has been assumed by some that the frog naturally contains an acid which by chemical action on the stone provides that the space at the frog's disposal shall be as large as its body. A second hypothesis is, that not the egg, but the primary frog, scarcely larger than the egg itself, falls into the rock or tree and continues to grow, deriving air and food in the form of small insects from the water that penetrates to its abode. Certain it is that frogs, when artificially secured in air-tight and water-tight vessels, speedily die. Experiments made by members of the French Academy a century ago proved this. Milne Edwards early in the present century included frogs in vessels impervious to air, and the creatures speedily perished. Three frogs were once inclosed in a close box for eighteen months, at the end of which time one was dead, and the remainder in a dying condition. Dr. Macartney buried a toad in a vessel covered with a slate about a foot deep in the ground. At the end of a fortnight it seemed well and as plump as before. When, however, he inclosed the same toad in an air-tight vessel and buried it, it soon died, and at the end of a week was much decayed. Dr Buckland made some experiments which are claimed as conclusive. He placed twelve toads separately in twelve holes cut in blocks of hard flinty sandstone. They were firmly sealed in. The imprisoned animals were buried three feet deep on November 26, 1825. At the same time four toads were deposited in holes cut in the heart of an apple tree and the opening securely plugged. Four others were also placed in plaster of Paris, covered with luting. On December 10, 1826, all the buried toads were examined. All in the hard stone and in the tree and two in the plaster of Paris were dead. The remainder were dying, but some placed in a softer stone were in tolerably good health, and some were actually fatter than when placed in the holes. From this it would appear that in positions where water can penetrate, frogs may live and even thrive, although buried at a considerable depth, entirely away from the light and any visible means of subsistence.—Chamber's Journal.

LONG REDINGOTES.

The Materials Used by Tailors for Long Outer Garments.

The redingotes made by tailors are of simple shapes, with double-breasted fronts, and smoothly fitting without pleats behind, but open up the middle of the back from the tournure down. Dull red cloth is also a favorite color for these long garments, with otter or beaver fur arranged as a binding down the fronts and back, with standing fur collar and narrow cuffs. Other red long coats have an elaborate pattern of braiding in black soutache down each of the single-breasted fronts, with Persian lamb cuffs and collar. Very full long cloaks are made for carriage wraps, and the combination cloaks represent a small mantle with a full skirt of another material, giving the suggestion of a whole costume, yet this is all one garment. The French modistes make a scarf-like mantle of seal plush, trimmed with the new wood fringe, or else of fine brown wool, with a wood passementerie nearly covering it; and under this is attached by a belt a broad skirt with plaited back of some other rich fabric, such as frise velvet, repped silk of heavy quality, or perhaps velvet or plush, striped on repped silk. The English tailors use soft cloths with bourette stripes or the poppy red serges for long cloaks that have the fronts folded up to the neck to represent a cape, yet form sleeves that support the arms like slings. For driving cloaks the Irish cloak is commended as luxuriously warm when made of cloth lined with satin; this is four and a half yards wide, perfectly straight, plaited to a band around the neck, and furnished with a hood. Made of Irish green cloths lined with fawn satin, this is useful for the carriage in the daytime, while opera and evening cloaks made in the same way are of cream white plush lined with pink satin, or of bronze plush with salmon satin. Large Russian garments of dark cloths or of velvet have natural lynx or else black lynx trimming that come from the inside of the garment to look like a part of the lining; these have a high collar turned up about the head as high as the ears, with the fur next the wearer.—Harper's Bazar.

—A story is told of an aged clergyman, who met a man loudly declaiming against foreign missions. "Why," said the objector, "doesn't the church look after the heathen at home?" "We do," said the clergyman quietly, and gave the man a tract.—N. Y. Post.

Father, Mother, and Three Sisters Dead.

Mr. David Claypool, formerly Sergeant-at-Arms of the New Jersey Senate, and now Notary Public at Cedarville, Cumberland Co., N. J., makes the following startling statement: "My father, mother, and three sisters all died with consumption, and my lungs were so weak I raised blood. Nobody thought I could live. My work (shipsmithing) was very straining on me with my weak constitution, and I was rapidly going to the grave. While in this condition I commenced using Mishler's Herb Bitters, and it saved my life. Because it was so difficult to get it in this little place, and I had improved so much, I stopped taking it for a time, and the result is that I have commenced going rapidly down hill again. Sometimes Mishler's Herb Bitters gives appetite and strengthens and builds me up as nothing else does, and I must have a dozen bottles at once. Use this communication as you please, and if any one wants to be convinced of its truth, let them write me and I will make affidavit to it, for I owe my life to Mishler's Herb Bitters."

The secret of the almost invariable relief and cure of consumption, dysentery, diarrhœa, dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver complaints, when Mishler's Herb Bitters is used, is that it contains simple, harmless, and yet powerful ingredients, that act on the blood, kidneys, and liver, and through them strengthens and invigorates the whole system. Purely vegetable in its composition, prepared by a regular physician; a standard medicinal preparation; endorsed by physicians and druggists. These are four strong points in favor of Mishler's Herb Bitters. Mishler's Herb Bitters is sold by all druggists. Price $1.00 per large bottle. 6 bottles for $5.00.

ASK FOR A PAMPHLET OF MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS. If druggists do not keep them, don't take anything else, but send a postal card to MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS CO., 629 Commerce Street, Philadelphia.

Interesting Facts About an Industry Seldom Heard of—Plucky Organ-Grinders.

Up four flights of stairs in a building not far from Chatham square, one comes into an odd-looking workshop. It is a triangular-shaped room, containing a number of benches, several boards of rosewood and black walnut and many heaps of shavings. The place is a hand-organ manufactory. "Trade is pretty dull just now," said its proprietor to a reporter.

"My lively times are in the late winter and early spring. I have been in the business here twenty-five years. It can't be said a regular business—it's all special. Sometimes we are overrun with work when we don't expect it, and at times when we have every reason to expect work, there isn't any. You can't force the market in the hand-organ business. The trade don't change much."

"What is the largest sum a hand-organ ever made in a day?"

"I heard of one who, when there was a racket in the gold-room, cleared from $50 to $60. But, of course, this was exceptional. The monkey part of the business is as good as ever; a monkey is always a drawing card to the hand-organ player. I hear a new trick is to teach the monkey to steal from houses. The attraction of the business seems to be the independent mode of life. Many Italians not speaking English can get along much better this way than any other. A curious thing about it is, that they never think of the really hard work they are doing in carrying about all day a load of from forty to fifty pounds. When a man begins the day with this weight on his back, it easily seems one hundred pounds in weight before night comes. Some of them carry organs that weigh as much as seventy pounds, but they generally break down when they try that. A man may carry an organ weighing forty pounds without hurting himself."

"What kind are most preferred?"

"The weight is the first consideration, the lightest always being the favorites. Next comes those having the most popular street airs. The tunes of Harrigan's songs are the most sought after now, and have been a great feature this summer. One song especially has taken well. It is 'Stick to your Mother, Tom.' Some of the second-hand organs that we have could tell most interesting histories, and have picked up small fortunes. Their owners travel all over, and show a wonderful amount of pluck and perseverance sometimes. I know of one remarkable instance. A number of years ago an old fellow, over fifty years of age, came in here and bought a thirty-pound organ. He started from here with it upon his back, and for sometime I did not hear of him. Then to my surprise I got word that he was in California making money. The plucky old fellow had walked the entire distance to California, climbed the Rocky mountains and carrying his organ with him the entire distance. He got interested in speculating after he got there, beginning in a small way, and the last time I heard of him he was well off. He was a stubborn old fellow, and what started him off on his journey was a lawsuit with a church. The last time I saw him his figure was bent far over, but it could be seen that he retained the same old stubbornness of character."

"What do hand-organs cost?"

"A new one made to carry, is worth from one hundred to two hundred and fifty dollars, but we sell a good second-hand organ for from fifty dollars up. A flute-organ, weighing thirty pounds, with twenty-four keys, and that plays nine tunes, costs one hundred dollars, with a black-walnut case; with a rosewood inlaid case, one hundred and twenty-five dollars. A flute-organ of forty pounds, with twenty-six keys and two stop pipes, playing ten tunes, costs one hundred and fifty dollars in black walnut; extra cylinders cost forty-five dollars each. An organ with flute and piccolo, forty-five pounds and thirty-five keys, costs one hundred and eighty dollars in black walnut. We sell what we call sideshow organs. They come in three different styles. No. 1 is of thirty-two keys, ten trumpets, nine tunes, with sub-bass trumpet and bells. It costs two hundred and eighty-six dollars. No. 2 is of forty-two keys, four stop pipes, nine tunes, with cymbals and snare drum. It costs six hundred dollars. No. 3 crowns the list. It is an automatic brass band, with sixty keys, four stop pipes, thirty brass trumpets, large and small drums, triangles, etc. It plays nine tunes, and in a black-walnut case costs twenty-two hundred dollars. So you see we can get them up as big as a house, if such are wanted."

"Do you make any hand-organs containing small dancing figures?"

"Not many nowadays. I had an order for one yesterday, but it is long since I have made one that it comes hard. Such a one with automatic figures costs about fifty dollars.—N. Y. Mail and Express.

He Remembered Well.

"And you pretend to say," remarked a lawyer to a witness, "that you remember the exact words this man said to you ten years ago?"

"I do."

"Well if my memory serves me, I met you at Saratoga about five years ago and I should like to know if you can swear to any expression which I then made."

"I can."

"Now, Mr. J., I want you to remember that you are under oath. Now, under oath, you swear that you can quote with great accuracy a remark I made to you at Saratoga five years ago?"

"I can."

"Well, what was it?"

"You met me in the hotel corridor."

"Yes, quite correct."

"And you shook hands with me."

"Naturally I did."

"And you said to me: 'Let's go and take something.'"

The crier of the court had to call silence for ten minutes, and the lawyer confessed that the witness had a remarkable memory.—Boston Journal.

A SMART YOUTH.

How a Young Man Managed to Establish a Prosperous Business.

Three months ago a young man of twenty-two and his mother landed in Detroit from an Eastern State with less than twenty dollars in money. He had been promised work, but reached here to be disappointed. The household goods were here, and the couple hadn't enough money to go away on. It was, therefore, decided to rent rooms and remain and search for work. The young man made every effort, but was unsuccessful. His money was nearly gone, and house rent was coming due again, when, one evening as he passed up Grand River Avenue, he heard one lady say to another, as they stood in front of a bakery:

"Dear me! but I wish I could get hold of some old-fashioned doughnuts such as mother used to make."

"I've said that every day for the last ten years," replied the other.

The young man followed them home and made a note of street and number. He then laid out all his money in lard and flour and carried the goods home and said to his mother:

"The people of Detroit want old-fashioned doughnuts. You shall make them and I will sell them from house to house. I will start out with the first batch to-morrow morning."

The doughnuts—four dozen of them—were ready by seven o'clock, and in half an hour he had sold them and was back. Next day he sold twelve dozen, and the next thirty. He had struck a good thing and he had sense enough to manage it. He started out to take orders from house to house, and the result was astonishing. Two girls had to be hired to assist the mother, and he had to hire two boys to help deliver. He now fills orders for three hundred dozen doughnuts daily, and the women have divided up the time so that one is constantly at work turning out the goods. Flour is purchased by the barrel and lard by the hundred pounds, and the business finds new customers every day.

There is a lesson in this for the hundreds of young men who roam about a city declaring that there is nothing to do and no way open for them to make a living. They may not all turn doughnut makers and peddlers, but there are other fields to be worked, and, if well worked, must give permanent occupation and fair profit.—Detroit Free Press.

EXPENSIVE FUN.

What It Cost a Mistress to Burn Her Servant's Letters.

In the employ of one of the wealthiest ladies of Rochester has been for some time a colored domestic. The girl was young, and apparently possessed of a large number of epistolary friends for nearly every trip the letter carrier brought her one or more letters. Receiving so much correspondence excited the wrath and possibly a feeling of jealousy in her mistress, who was irritated beyond endurance at every arrival of the postman. Finally two letters came for the domestic and reached the hands of the lady, who petulantly threw them into the stove. The following day the postman handed another letter to the girl herself, and told her that she was receiving a great many letters.

"Not so many," she replied. "This is the first one I have received in a week."

The letter-carrier asserted that he brought two only the day before. The girl went to her mistress and demanded an explanation. The lady said: "Yes, I did get two letters for you, but I threw them into the stove. You are receiving altogether too many letters lately."

And she told the story to her husband at night as a good joke. The latter looked grave when the girl threatened to bring suit and the upshot of the whole matter is that the girl has been paid an even two thousand to keep the case out of the courts.

The mistress now has a new girl, but the old one doesn't care. May be she will go to Europe.—Rochester Democrat.

ABOUT PEANUTS.

Where They Are Raised and How They Are Prepared for Market.

"Nearly all the peanuts that are brought to this market come from Virginia," said a dealer. "A good many are grown in Tennessee, too; but the central point of the peanut raising business, which is one of the greatest industries of the State, though of very recent growth, is at Norfolk, Va. In old times—fifteen years ago—all the peanuts were imported from Africa. The African peanut was small and round, the shell containing usually but a single kernel. The American peanut is simply the African nut modified by the conditions of the soil in this country. The best peanuts are hand-picked; others are threshed out like grain. In Norfolk there are several factories where peanuts are prepared for the market. They are first thoroughly cleaned and then sorted. The bad ones are picked out by young girls, who stand on either side of a wide revolving belt on which the nuts are thrown. Afterward they are packed in bags and shipped to the market. Peanuts have become a recognized article of commerce, and are quoted every day on 'Change like corn or wheat. They sell, wholesale, at from three-and-a-half to five cents per pound. Best hand-picked fetch about five cents usually. Spanish peanuts, an imported article, sell for a higher price, frequently as much as twenty cents a pound. Peanuts are largely used to make alleged olive oil. Not more than a fourth part of the olive oil sold in this country is real; generally it is made either of peanuts or cotton seed. The only way to distinguish peanut from olive oil is to pour nitric acid into it. The peanut or cotton-seed oil will char, but the real olive oil will not. Most of the peanuts grown in Africa now-a-days are sent to Marseilles and expressed for oil. The latter is sold as a low grade of olive."—Boston Herald.

Very Poor Economy.

Some people make a business of cheating themselves, either by eating very mean and cheap food, or else by eating too small a quantity of good food. Either way is as bad policy as it would be to buy a coffin instead of a suit of clothes, just because the coffin would cost less. Poor diet means impovished blood; and that means misery. Brown's Iron Bitters enriches the blood, gives it the iron it needs, and tones up the whole system. Cures dyspepsia, indigestion, weakness, malaria, etc.

After a druggist has filled a prescription it belongs to him, and not the customer who brought it to his store.

The pain and misery suffered by those who are afflicted with dyspepsia are indescribable. The distress of the body is equalled or surpassed by the confusion and tortures of the mind, thus making its victims suffer double affliction. The relief which is given by Hood's Sarsaparilla has caused thousand's to be thankful for this great medicine. It dispels the causes of dyspepsia, and tones up the digestive organs. Try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

CATAARH—A NEW TREATMENT.

From the Montreal Star.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 200 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished he claims the Catarrh is practically cured and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The Application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.

UNCLE ESEK'S WISDOM.

Aphorism Whose Truth is Vindicated in Every-Day Life.

There is a great deal of intellectual activity that is nothing better than idle curiosity, like the fly, its only ambition is to buzz and get into things.

The great art in getting rich is not in saving money, but knowing how to spend it.

Don't mistake stupidity for patience; patience is the humility of wisdom.

Any one may commit a blunder, but no one but a fool is bit twice by the same dog.

The man whom idleness don't lead into mischief is either a very pure or a very stupid one.

Nature makes her own laws, but can't break one if she tries.

Economy is a kind of natural wealth; it is money ever at interest.

To give so as to bestow a favor and not create an obligation is a delicate art.

The more ideas a man has got the fewer words he takes to express them. Wise men never talk to make time; they talk to save it.

Experience costs more than it is worth, but most people refuse to learn at any less price.

Advice, just at present, is the greatest drug in the market, the supply has ruined the demand.

Lies are like certain horses; they can travel farther in one day than they can get back in two.

Take all the fun out of this world and every pound of life would weigh ten.

You can buy a dog for two dollars and a half, but there isn't money enough in the world to buy the wag of his tail.

The poor are more extravagant than the rich, and this is just what keeps them poor; for the sake of one feast they are willing to starve three days.

A suit of clothes that fits a man perfectly is worth more to him than a pedigree that fits him indifferently.

Wisdom without learning is like a sword without a handle, and learning without wisdom is like a handle without a sword.

Reform! is the battle-cry of civilisation—reform for others, immunity for ourselves.

The ridiculous side of life goes far toward making it endurable.

A fool may possibly amuse others, but he can't amuse himself.

Beware of the man who listens much and talks little; he is getting your thunder and saving his own lightning.

A peacock's pedigree is all in the spread of his tail, a wet day takes the glory out of it.

Condensation is almost omnipotent, single words are autocrats, and a sentence is law for all mankind.

Men are very vain of their opinions, and yet there is scarcely any two of them who think alike.

What the world wants just now is less civilization and more of the virtues.

Beware of the man of a few words; he always has something in reserve.

Truth can travel to the end of the earth all alone, but a lie must have company to keep up its courage.

Religion is most excellent to mix with business, but to mix business with religion is not safe.

We get our vices from each other, but our virtues by cultivation.

My friend, does it pay to be a great man? You must be hated by some, feared by many, and, at best, envied by all.

Labor will buy anything that is in the market.

Pedigrees seldom improve by age.

Vice and virtue began life together, and will leave the world when the last man does.

Wisdom can afford to go slow; but if a fool doesn't run he is sure to get left.

The man who is ever muttering to himself is talking to a fool.

The man who has no superstitions loses half the pleasures of life.

Honesty, like charity, begins at home; the man who is not honest with himself can not be with others.—Century.

SHE WAITED.

A Detroit Woman Who Wanted to See a Square Fight.

The other day a dog which was following a carriage turned aside and ran into a yard on Park street. He might have expected to pick up a fall and winter stock of bones, but in this he was disappointed. He was about turning away when a dog owned in the house flew out and rushed upon him in the most reckless manner, and in the course of ten seconds there was a bite-as-bite-can contest of the fiercest description. A woman considerably past the prime of life came out of the house as the dogs rolled around, picked up a club lying on the grass near by, and seemed about to enter the struggle. She raised the club two or three times, but let it fall as oft, and finally stood an interested spectator of the fight. Among the dozen pedestrians halting at the gate was a man who called out: "Say! stop 'em—stop em!"

The woman raised her club, but hesitated to strike.

"Why don't you stop 'em?" shouted the man.

"I'm waiting," she replied.

"For what? Don't you see they'll kill each other?"

"I'm waiting to see how it comes out. If my dog can lick him it's all right. If he gets the bulge on Rover I'll even up the chances with this club."

Rover got a neck-hold and shook the stranger until his yells were heard a block away, and when he was finally permitted to sneak off the woman flung down her club and mounted the steps with the remark:

"Nobody nor nothing has been killed as I knows on, and every one of you could see that it was a square fight, and victory for the best dog. Please don't rub the paint off that gate."—Detroit Free Press.

—A sad case occurred at Jersey City one day recently. Benjamin Gerhardt, a young German, was going home at the invitation of an aged and unhealthy aunt, who had sent for him for the purpose of making him her heir. He never recovered, and his name and history were learned from a letter of introduction to a citizen of Hoboken, which was found in his baggage.—N. Y. Tribune.

DIED.

QUACKENBOSS.—At her residence in this village on the 22d. inst., Elizabeth Quackenboss, relict of the late Daniel G. Quackenboss. Aged 69 years.

The deceased was born in Scatacoke, New York, and spent her youthful days in that place. After her marriage to Daniel G. Quackenboss the family removed to Michigan in the year 1839, and for many years they lived in Tecumseh, where Mr Quackenboss died on the 22d of June 1853, aged forty years and a few months. During his residence in Tecumseh he was three times elected to the lower house of the State legislature, the last time in 1852, and in January 1853 he was chosen Speaker. His widow and children continued to reside in Tecumseh for some time after his death and then moved to Plymouth in this state. About three years ago the deceased returned to Tecumseh and has since lived here with her young grandson Geo. V. Waldron. Three children were born to the deceased, all daughters, and all grew to womanhood and were married: Mrs. Alice Lewis who died in 1881; Mrs. Nettie V. Waldron who died in 1879; Mrs. Libbie Laird who now lives in Toronto, Ontario.

Mrs. Quackenboss was a woman of more than ordinary culture and intelligence, with a winning disposition which made her a leader in society during her younger days. Her memory will be fondly cherished by many who knew her in the days gone by. The funeral rites were observed at St. Peter's church, on Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock, and were conducted by the Rector, Rev. J. Phelps. During her declining health and last illness, she was cheered by the faithful care and kindness of her grandson, George, who did much to soften her descent to the grave.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON CHRONICLES.

Geo. W. Frasier, of Tecumseh, was looking over his Clinton friends Monday.

George Calhoun and family sampled Bridgewater chickens last Thursday and George declares them a very superior article, if they were raised in the township where Steffanowski's were wont to hie away with ye feathery tribe. They had probably escaped their notice.

Miss Julia Dunn visited Tecumseh last Saturday.

Clinton's perambulators on the rollers did not forget Mr. Cash, the popular proprietor of the rink at Tecumseh last Thursday, but put in a good representation.

Will and Fred Taylor, of Raisin, were guests at their uncles, C. K. Spafford's, Sunday and Monday.

The Woolen mill ceased operations during Thursday last, to give the employees a chance to sample turkey, chicken, etc., "trip the light fantastic," and take in the sights abroad.

Ed. VanDeMark was home for a few days, but has returned to Detroit, where he is attending U.S. circuit court as juror.

The editor of the Local went down to see his Adrian relatives and friends and it is suspected, tested the thanksgiving bivalves that city possessed.

John Hulett has erected a nice little chicken coop on his lot. We have been unable to learn whether John is to compete with Clinton men in blooded stock or make an attempt to flood the market with fresh productions for Easter.

There was a party here last week, contemplating the starting of a rink.

The new barber on Jackson street has permanently established himself and is waiting on customers as they file into his room in the Sturm building, with promptness.

Loren VanAntwerp has taken the position formerly occupied by his brother Will in Frank McClure's harness shop, and our citizens and surrounding community, will smile when they step in and inspect the superb leather attire produced by the combined efforts of Frank and "Lore."

The social hop given by Mr. Brown, at town hall, on the evening of Thanksgiving, was enjoyed by quite a number of Clinton people and a goodly gathering from the country. The music was good, and had the hall been properly warmed, the party might have proven more of a success pecuniarily to its projector. The fire went out entirely, and it was very uncomfortable to stay in the room when not engaged in the dance.

The rollers in the grist mill are in full operation, and a trial of Clinton roller flour will at once convince you of its superiority.

We understand our townsman, D. R. Gibson is buying and shipping poultry, out in the far west, or is about to engage in that enterprise. He is bound to keep busy at apples, poultry or some other commodity in which there is a chance for speculation.

Miss Alice Mills, of Bridgewater, is home from Chelsea, where she is attending school, and we understand, she will improve the time for several days making her friends hereabouts happy by her presence.

Wm. Amspoker, of the firm of Rhefus & Amspoker, of Manchester, and the new market here, was in town Monday. They are an enterprising firm and have worked up a trade that keeps them busy looking up a supply.

Mrs. Alonzo Clark, Mrs. John T. Clark and others of this village, attended the funeral of Mrs. E. N. Nichols, at Tecumseh, last week. Mrs. N. was, in previous years, a much respected citizen of Clinton, and had acquired a friendship in many households here that will not be easily forgotten as a kind, noble and true one. She was the companion of the late Rev. E. N. Nichols who also endeared himself to many by his fathful addiction to the wishes of one who gave the promises to those who never weary in well doing.

The attractions at the Tecumseh opera house and rink continue to attract the attention of our young folks, and undoubtedly will until Clinton has something of the kind.

E. R. Smith has been making important improvments in his residence, that add very much to its convenience.

Miss Florence Merritt has accepted a position and entered upon the duty assigned her at the woolen mill.

Henry Lancaster received intelligence last Monday of the severe illness of members of his family that were in Toledo.

The weather has been very changeable, but most of the fall crops have been secured.

Many additions have been consummated this fall in our quiet little village, and we are entitled to recognition by parties seeking out the thriving and thrifty business places of the Wolverine state.

Miss Dora Randall, of Mason, is the guest of Miss Grace Spafford.

Clyde Marstellar visited her Tecumseh friends yesterday.

Capt. J. A. Riehley and Mrs. Capt. Snell made J. C. Burroughs and family thankful by putting in an appearance Thursday and stopping for a real genuine, old-fashioned visit. They probably ascertained before they came that Jo. was buying chickens and thought that an appropriate time to appear.

L. Bauer, of Tecumseh, was doing the village yesterday.

The union services at the Congregational Church last Thursday, drew a full house, and the services were listened to with manifest interest by all who attended.

A number of Masons from the Clinton lodge paid their Manchester brothers a visit last Monday evening.

The social at the M. E. church last evening, was enjoyed by a goodly number of the oyster loving people.

Richmond, Hogan & Gadd snipped a car of cattle to Buffalo, the first of this week.

RIDGEWAY RACKET.

Saturday was the only day during the month that was clear all day.

Historical Sunday will be observed next Sabbath throughout the state by the M. E. denomination.

First quarterly meeting for the present conference year, will be held one week from next Saturday and Sunday.

The attendance at the social on Friday evening was not as large as usual, too much Thanksgiving the cause.—The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Lester Osgood next week Friday evening.

Dr. and Mrs. D. W. Loree went to Hillsdale Saturday to visit G. W. Jackson and family.

Ezra Smith, of St. John, visited relatives and called on friends during his vacation last week, returning to Ann Arbor Monday to continue his studies at the University.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Beckler, of Britton, were the guests of Mrs. John Arner Thursday.

Prof. J. R. Miller, of Constantine, spent a few days with friends last week.

One of Morris Kelley's faithful old horses gave up the ghost Tuesday morning.

Bay Wiggins had quite a severe attack with inflammation of the wind pipe last week, but is on the gain at present.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Clarkson, of Ann Arbor, and Eugene Clarkson, of Detroit, spent Thanksgiving at their father's, John J. Clarkson's.

Miss S. A. VanVleet visited friends at Battle Creek last week.

W. H. Mather and Mrs. R. R. Hall, of Tecumseh, were in the village Monday.

Remember the Literary next week Friday evening. A very interesting dialogue is being prepared.

Fred Fagan and Ed. Harrison went to Union City to visit Delos Harrison.

Kane, not the one who slew Abel, but the one who deals in tinware and rags, visited the citizens of the village Tuesday.

Morris Kelley went to Adrian Tuesday on business.

At the home of David Coryell Thursday afternoon occurred one of those pleasant occasions in the marriage of Mr. Jesse Potter, of Tecumseh, and Miss Sena Coryell. The bonds which sealed their future destiny were tied by Rev. James Wright, of Britton. Although the young couple took us by surprise we will forgive and extend our heartiest congratulations, and wish for them a happy, successful and prosperous journey through life.

At last death came to relieve Mrs. Augustus Montgomery of her sufferings on Monday evening. She has been a great sufferer for a long time. The funeral services were held at the residence Wednesday afternoon.

CAMBRIDGE CLIPPINGS.

L. H. Dewey began teaching school in Dist. No. 5, Cambridge, Nov. 23.—There are 28 pupils enrolled, enough to keep him busy during his college vacation.

On Thanksgiving day a social party met at the pleasant farm residence of Albert F. Dewey. There was a cheerful, quiet company of about twenty by the name of Dewey, and each one helped to make the occasion enjoyable. About 2 o'clock the company gathered around the table which was laden with a bountiful and sumptuous repast, and after rendering thanks to the Giver of all good, they proceeded to satisfy their hearty thanksgiving appetite with the good things set before them. One cannot participate in such a cheerful time without thinking that truly we have cause to be thankful.

On Nov. 20th the autumn term at the Agricultural College closed, and the fourteen weeks winter vacation began. The term just closed has been very successful, with a larger attendance than ever before. There were about 200 students, five of them young ladies. One third of the states of the Union are represented at this institution, and even distant Australia and Japan send their delegates. In our own Michigan nearly every county is represented by one or more students. There were three from Lenawee Co., A. E Brown, of Tecumseh, Senior, and F. H. Hall, Tecumseh and L. H. Dewey, Cambridge, Sophomores.—The last two are graduates of Tecumseh High School, class of '85. They all speak in the highest terms of the institution, the faculty and especially of President Willits. This college is now second to none of its kind in this country.

SPRINGVILLE SNUFF.

Large attendance at the Rink Friday eve.

Ex-Sheriff Cairns passed through town last Tuesday.

McCall & Tiffany have returned to finish painting the church. They are staining the windows at present writing.

There were four poultry dealers from different parts took dinner at Smith's hotel on Monday last. Prices from 8c. to 10 c. on turkeys, 5c. to 6c. for chickens.

On Wednesday, Nov. 25th, Mr. Fred. Snow and Miss Alice Kinney, both of Cambridge, were united in holy matrimony. They take in Jackson and Jonesville visiting relatives and friends, and expect to be gone about three weeks. We are not particularly anxious for winter but hope to see some Snow left when they return.

ONSTED ODDS.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilmore, of Battle Creek, are visiting at George B. Daniel's.

Frank Darling is talking of going to the state of New York to sell scales.

Bertie Howard, of Tecumseh, spent Friday and Saturday at his uncle's, Wm. Wimple's.

George Hines is buying fur. He bought quite a buggy load last Saturday of that veteran hunter and trapper, Lyman Randall.

Lewis Priest, the shoemaker at Lee's store, is fast making a reputation as a good workman, and seems to have about as much work as one man ought to do.

Dike Daniels married a young lady from Morenci last week, and they have gone to housekeeping in his new house. We wish them prosperity.

The new store we spoke of last week as just commenced, is well under way now, being all enclosed. Napoleon carpenters seem to have a faculty of pushing things.

Fred Snow and Alice Kinney were married Wednesday, Nov. 25th. The knot was tied at the residence of the Rev. Mr. Holt, in Jackson. Their wedding trip will take several weeks, and they will visit friends in Hillsdale, Oakland and Saginaw counties. We unite with their many friends in wishing them a long and happy married life.

BROOKLYN BILLET.

Thanksgiving eve there was a masquerade at the Rink, which proved a very enjoyable affair. There were about 40 maskers and as many more skaters, and they 'rolled' to the music of the Springville band until nearly 11 o'clock. We understand Mr. French anticipates having another masquerade on New Year's night.

Miss Lizzie Culver went to Hillsdale this morning to attend the wedding of her friend, Miss Nellie Wier.

THANKSGIVING IN MACON.

According to announcement made in the columns of this paper, a Thanksgiving Sunday-school concert was given in the south Macon Reformed church, on Wednesday evening Nov. 25th. Back of the desk on the wall hung the motto: "God is good," made of autumn leaves; on either side of the desk were sheaves of wheat, and ears of red and yellow corn suspended by their husks: in front of the desk, stood a rustic stand covered with cones of the Norway spruce, and suspended from it, were bittersweet berries, gourds &c., and just back of the stand, stood two bunches of tall cat-tails crossed. Bouquets of dried, goldenrod, red berries, teasles and cat-tails, adorned a stand and the organ, while red berries hung from chandeliers, and a work basket filled with tempting looking apples occupied one corner of the platform. The exercises, selected with especial reference to their appropriateness to the occasion, consisted of responsive readings from the Psalms, prayer, singing by the school and by the choir, recitations, reading of the president's Thanksgiving proclamation, other selections, and a short address by the pastor. Four young ladies represented the seasons. The concert was enjoyed by all who were present.

A crowded house greeted those who took part in the concert held in the Macon Reformed Church on Thanksgiving evening, Nov. 26th. Songs, recitations and readings caused the hour to pass very pleasantly. Short addresses were made by Rev. Pierce, pastor of the Clinton and Macon M. E. Churches and by the pastor of the Reformed Church. The thanksgiving turkey partaken of during the day had put the audience in good humor, and the exercises were fully appreciated. Great credit is due to Dr. Geo. Howell, under whose management the concert took place; and also, to those who by their services added to the pleasure of the evening.

OCCUPYING THE NEW COURT HOUSE

The Circuit Court room of the new Court House was occupied for the first time last Tuesday forenoon. Promptly at nine o'clock, the Judge, Sheriff and Clerk were in the proper places. The Sheriff proclaimed the court in session, and the Judge said, "Have you any motions, gentlemen?"

There being no response in the affirmative, the journal was read and the case of Smoll vs. Smead, which had been previously begun, was proceeded with. This case will thus become historical as being the first case tried in the new Court House: The lawyers employed in the case are Lamb & Pratt and Millard & Weaver. The jury is composed of Messrs. Jabez Fridd, Franklin; Silas Hurlbut, city; Robert Service, Clinton; Wm. S. Keeber, Palmyra; W. Hawley Smith, Adrian; Geo. F. Harmon, Macon; Walter Reeve, city, Silas Raymond, Rome; George Town, Rollin; David Barrick, city; Harvey Hitchcock, city; Peleg H. Bowerman, Raisin.

Many members of the county bar were present at the opening of court and quite a number of spectators.

With the December issue the prosperous Magazine of American History closes its fourteenth volume. This publication, which has done so much in recent years to make American history popular, by presenting it in a pleasing and engaging manner, has now the largest circulation of any magazine of its character in the world. Its contributions for December are all spirited, timely and readable. The number opens with A. W. Clason's brilliant exposition of the part taken by Massachusetts (1778) in the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. "A Chapter of the Mexican War," a most interesting paper, is from the pen of General E. Parker Scammon, the tutor of General Grant at West Point. General ("Baldy") Smith's third paper on the "Campaign of 1861-1882 in Kentucky" brings ingeniously together the scattered facts, and affords a clearer view of that field of military operations than ever before presented to the reading public. His paper on Fort Donelson will appear in the January number. "How we Ran the Vicksburg Batteries," is a vivid sketch of an exciting war scene, by W. S. Ward. A fine portrait of General George B. McClellan (the frontispiece) is accompanied by a tribute to his memory from the Editor. Indeed, it is a strong and substantial, as well as a charming number. Subscription price, $5,00 a year in advance. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

The Popular Science Monthly.

The principal articles in "The Popular Science Monthly" for December are, as is usually the case in that excellent magazine, marked by the vigor of their thought, and the honesty with which they appeal to the intelligence of readers. The opening article Count Goblet d'Alviella, on "The Scientific Study of Religions," defines what are the essentials of such a study and analyzes candidly, and without a tinge of controversialism, a number of prejudices or prepossessions, religious, anti-religious, and theoretical, that must be absent from it if it is to be real and effective. In the second article Professor D. B. King describes the organization of the "Postal Savings-Banks" of European nations, and considers the applicability of the system to the United States. New York: D. Appleton & Company. Fifty cents a numbber, $5 a year.

Even in these days of cheap literature, the most and the best for the least money is the HOUSEHOLD RECEIPT BOOK; mailed free by D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, for one two-cent stamp. The cream of books by Marion Harland, Mrs. Diaz, Susan Power, and others. The Household Primer is also mailed free on receipt of one two-cent stamp.

A compact selection of home and field games for boys and girls is the "Household Game Book," mailed free for two 2-cent stamps, by D. Lothrop & Co., Boston. The Cheapest yet.

RONDEAU.

WHEN FORTUNE SMILES.

When fortune smiles the heart is gay;
The future seems serene and bright;
And hopes of pleasure will come to you
And sweet joys bud and blow
All ready then the toasts to quaff,
To all know you—one is my wand,
And how to use it we must
As demigods we are known to do,
When fortune smiles.

You are the fleet-winged messenger
Who wings your way to my home
And at the threshold of happiness crow
Joy, joy with flowers and wine strew,
In such abundance as to overwhelm
When fortune smiles.

WHEN FORTUNE FROWNS.

When fortune frowns—the changeful dame—
Then matters do not quite the same
Then where are the gay and fickle throng
Who loved you much but not for long?
They have to you no further claim.

Perhaps your erstwhile faithful dame
Forsakes you—she forgets your name
They quickly do add if not sing
When fortune frowns.

How vain youth's dreams of fame!
Your weakness is solely and wholly to blame
Where you were right you now are wrong
And you are weak where you were strong.
Yes, life is like a losing game,
When fortune frowns.

—Rambler.

A FAMOUS THURSDAY.

How Miss White Made It a Jolly Thanksgiving.

Not that "Miss Winifred White, who married a fright." This Miss White never married at all, but lived in a neat little cottage all alone. There was not another house in the village quite as neat as hers. The interior was spotless. Never a stray speck or shipping could be found on her carpets; never a particle of dust anywhere, no spider ever dared to invade even the most obscure nooks and corners. The sunshine never faded her pretty furniture, although now and then it did venture in between the barred shutters to make a nice round warm spot for the cat to bask in. Her cat was very proper, too. He seldom went out on a damp or stormy day, and if he did go he tarried a long while by the back door, near the scraper, to make sure that his feet were thoroughly clean before he ventured to enter the kitchen.

The exterior of her home was equally neat. Dry leaves never chased each other merrily in her door-yard, not even a stray goose feather had ever been seen among the blades of her Henderson's best lawn grass. Miss White kept geese. She was not "careless of the comfits and cushions of life." To the latter she was especially devoted. Her geese were her treasures. No other geese in the village could grow such feathers as hers; and so it happened that her beds, her pillows and her bolsters were marvels of softness and comfort. And, of course, she possessed no end of sofa pillows and chair cushions, not to mention a most enticing feathery arrangement for her cat.

Miss White never invited children to visit her. "They do upset things so," she said, "and are sure to get the things awry, and to make such general confusion, that it takes at least a week to get things righted again." The villagers all thought Miss White very nice, but rather fussy. Not one of them dreamed of the existence of a warm, tender corner in her heart, where a deed of kindness was tucked away, which was to be brought out and well aired on bright Thanksgiving Day.

On one corner of the valley road there was a big tree. The village carpenter had fastened to it a good-sized board, which was used as a sort of bulletin. All the festivals and fairs and school meetings and political meetings were posted upon it, for the benefit of the passers-by. Not far from the tree there lived a little girl named Nellie Bird. She was a sweet child. Her life was like a little song, and she was always trying to do something to put a song into the lives of others. One day when she was in the city a gentleman gave her a number of little books and cards. On the cards a verse was printed which pleased Nellie very much; and she began at once to try to contrive some place where she could put a card, where ever so many people could see it. All at once she thought of the corner tree, and resolved to tack it up there. But she did not want her left hand to know what her right hand was about; and so she had to plan some way by which she could get the card on the bulletin, and keep it for a secret of her own, letting no one know who had put it there.

There was a time about the middle of the morning when the village seemed to be napping. Every one had been after the mail and had returned home again; the factory hands were busy at their work, the children were in school; the mothers were in the kitchen making dessert, not forgetting the turnovers for the hungry youngsters; the grandmothers were knitting by the fireside, and the streets were deserted. Nellie did not go to school, so she chose that quiet hour to perform her little mission. And with the card in one hand and a pin in the other, she ran down to the big tree. She found a stone which would answer for a hammer, and soon fastened the card on the bulletin board.

Miss White went out to walk that afternoon. She was going down to the store to buy a half-pound of chipped beef, and she passed the big tree by the way. That little card in the middle of the large board looked so queer that she stopped to read it. The words she read made a great impression upon her; she could not seem to forget them. All the rest of that day and all the next day they kept humming in her ears, and as her ears were large the humming was very loud: "I expect to pass through the world but once; any good thing that I can do or any kindness that I can show to a human being, or any word I can speak for the good of others—let me do it now. Let me not neglect or defer it, for I shall not pass this way again."

It was Thanksgiving week. Miss White never invited company to Thanksgiving dinner. She feared that some of her nice china might get nicked, and that was too precious she could not run the risk. Some kind neighbor always remembered her, and she took her turkey and pumpkin pie might some one else's wing and leg too. But this year those words on the big tree haunted her, until she made a famous resolve—a resolve which brought about the jollicst Thanksgiving she had ever known, and which surprised every one, and most of all Miss White herself.

There were at least a dozen children employed in the factory, poor, neglected little things, with pinched faces and hungry eyes. They worked early and late, and lived in a row of tumble-down tenements on the outskirts of the village. Very early on Wednesday morning, long before the factory whistle had sounded, Miss White might have been seen trudging along the road in the direction of those wretched homes. Before she returned home, all the factory children in the row had been invited to take dinner with her on Thursday.

What a busy life she had! Preparing dinner for a dozen remarkably hungry youngsters was to her a formidable undertaking. But her heart was in it, and she worked as she never had worked before. The cat looked on in astonishment, his hair fairly stood on end most of that day. Before the shades of night had fallen, the kitchen table really groaned with its unusual burden, but it was a happy groan. There was the large blue platter piled up mountain high with frosted doughnuts; there were half a dozen delicious pies, pumpkin, apple and mince; there were cranberry tarts by the wholesale, and loaves of bread enough to supply a whole army; and in the foreground among the other goodies, were two monstrous geese—the flowers of her flock—all dressed and ready for the oven. Yes, Miss White, in her zeal to do good, had even gone so far as to sacrifice a couple of her feathery treasures.

She was too tired to go to church on Thursday morning, but there was more of thanksgiving in her heart than there had been all the years before when she had never failed to be present at the regular service.

Of course, the children all came at the appointed time. And, oh! how they did eat! "The geese, the pies and the doughnuts vanished in a jiffy," Miss White said, and every one wondered what a jiffy could be, but nobody asked, so those who did not consult Webster's unabridged have kept on wondering to this day.

After the dinner had been disposed of, the merry diners-out were invited into the parlor, where Miss White renewed her youth, recalling the games of long ago, and joining in them heartily with the children. She even so far forgot her dignity as to take the part of "old Mammy Tipsytoe," and actually ran through the rooms, followed by her noisy guests. While they were in the midst of "Puss in the Corner," in came the village pastor, who, hearing the hubbub, had rushed in to see what was the matter, shouting as he came.

"Has the sun or the moon tumbled into the sea,
Or what is the matter?—pray tell unto me."

But he showed his approval of the sport by joining in the merry games. So they frolicked and laughed until the dinner was well digested, and then they were ready to do full justice to the fruit and nuts which appeared on the scene.

When, before nightfall, the children bade their kind hostess "Good-bye," it was with the cheering assurance that they had never before in all their lives had such a perfectly splendid time.

The next day Miss White examined her china critically, but failed to discover a single nick. However, she did have a game of "spot on the carpet" all by herself. But she seemed to find pleasure in that, for as she scrubbed she sang, and the song told the story of that sweet peace and happiness which is sure to follow each effort we make to do good to those around us. She seemed to hear echoed the words she had read so often with indifference, but which now were specially significant: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me."—Chicago Interior.

ALUM IN NEVADA.

A Great Chance for the Establishment of a Baking-Powder Factory.

In various portions of Nevada and California deposits and springs which deposit alum have been found, and the article could be produced in any desired quantity. Out in Elk County, near Tuscarora, a cave is spoken of as having been discovered many years ago in which is a chamber, the roof, sides and floor of which are composed of a solid mass of crystallized alum. Two miles west of Steamboat Springs, in Washoe County, is an extensive deposit of the mineral aluminum, in which there are plenty of pure alum deposits. In the upper levels of the old Empire Mine, in Gold Hill proper, seven or eight years ago, parties exploring among the old drift found at one point large masses and crystals of alum adhering to the cap and side timbers which had evidently been deposited from alum springs seeping from above. Some years ago a tunnel was run through from the present main shaft of the Imperial Mining Company, 125 feet from the top of the shaft, through to the tunnel toll road, a distance of 350 feet, under the foremanship of James O'Donnel. He found a nice, clear-looking spring or seepage of water about half way from the shaft to the mouth of the tunnel, which, on tasting, was intensely sour, and proved to be pure alum water. It is there yet, with plentiful incrustations surrounding it. If anybody wants to start an alum baking-powder factory they can find plenty of the acid material in the Gold Hill upper levels.—Territorial Enterprise.

COURT-HOUSE SHADOWS.

Demented People Who Await Decisions in the New York Courts.

"I want to see the Judge."

"Don't insist; you can't see him."

"But I must. I must have a decision. I am tired of this endless delay without cause."

"Oh, you want to see him about the decision? Why, that will be given today or to-morrow. Better go to the court room."

"Ah, at last, thank you!" The speaker was a woman about the middle age, neatly attired in a black gown with a black veil thrown back from her bonnet. Her voice was full of sweet tones and sounded pleasantly as she thanked, with a half smothered sigh of relief, the tall man who had answered her questions. She stood at the half-opened door of the ante-room of the private rooms of the Judges of the Supreme Court. The man stood with his hand on the door knob and watched every motion of the woman as she spoke.

He was a clerk of the court and she was one of the many poor, demented creatures who haunt the Court House waiting for decisions which never will be given.

After the woman had moved away Clerk Knight said: "That woman has been coming here for years at intervals of two weeks. At times she can be seen sitting all day in the court room patiently waiting for the Judge on the bench to hand down his decision in a case she thinks is before the court. Some years ago she became insane and her property was put into the hands of trustees, who pay her living expenses and liberally provide for all her wants. At the time she was committed to an asylum, but now she is at liberty, being considered harmless. In most respects she is quite sane, but on one or two points she is crazy as a March hare. When she comes here it is difficult to get her away. Sometimes I speak softly to her and other times I have to be apparently very cross. You can't tell when these cranks will draw a knife or a pistol, so I have to be mighty careful. She will go and sit in the court-room till the room is closed, and will then go home, and will probably not think of the matter for some time, but when she does she will come right down here."

"Are there many such cases?"

"Many? Well, I should say so. One of the best known faces in this Court House is that of a German who some six years ago was found insane. His wife was made the custodian of his property. He thinks he is well now and believes that a suit has been brought to place his property back in his possession. 'It is a tedious matter, snail-like but sure,' he says when he speaks of the long-expected decision. Every day he comes and takes his place in court. At recess he goes home to dinner, returns for the afternoon session and sits, waiting patiently, till the Judge leaves the bench."

"Do they ever make any disturbance?"

"The cranks? Oh, no. They sit patiently, waiting in a listless fashion, not interested in the proceedings in the slightest degree, and unnoticed by the frequenters of the courts. When a Judge enters or goes out of a room the court officers are always on the alert to see that these cranks do not slip up and play any pranks with knife or pistol."

"Do they annoy the Judges?"

"No; they don't get a chance to come in contact with them. Their letters sometimes are very abusive, filthy and calculated to make a Judge feel uncomfortable, but we get to know the handwriting and intercept them. The ingenuity these people use to be annoying in this way is very great."

Most of the men and women who thus haunt the court rooms and corridors labor under the delusion that they are interested in some case or another. They enter the building and proceed calmly, quietly and in a businesslike way to their several court rooms and take a seat. They are seldom inclined to talk of their affairs, and regard all persons about them as in some way or other connected with their opponents. When they do say anything it is generally in a low whisper. Most of them are interested in imaginary suits as principals, but one old gentleman has been going to court for ten years to give testimony concerning the signing of a will which was admitted to probate twenty years ago. During the weary months when the will was being contested the old gentleman, then in his prime, was a witness. Years afterward his once strong mind broke from the burden put upon it, and by a curious freak he became possessed by the idea that the famous will case was still on trial and his testimony had been called for. Almost any day he can be found in the Surrogate's Court with his old fashioned, high, straight brimmed hat filled with a packet of musty papers, securely held together by a piece of red tape, patiently waiting his name to be called that he may give his testimony.

The hard fought battles at law, the disappointments, defeats and victims of years ago are to be recalled by the faces of at least a score of similar old gentlemen whom the bootblack and the apple vender point out as "court house cranks."—N. Y. Herald.

The Love of the Middle-Aged.

As for love, all novels end with marriage. The fervor, the delight, the reality of the passion, we are told, belongs to youth; middle age sinks into dull, gray monotony of commonplace habit. In fact, it is the young whose love finds utterance in sighs, in poems, in at best a selfish monopoly of the beloved one; it is the middle-aged man and woman who quietly sacrifice day by day every hope and ambition, every talent and taste which gives them identity among men; who become drudges, who give health, strength, life itself, drop by drop, for love.—Philadelphia Press.

A GORGEOUS TROUSSEAU.

Mlle. Nevada's Incomparable Bridal and Professional Outfit.

Mlle. Nevada's bridal and professional trousseau was, a few days prior to her wedding, on exhibition at the fiancee's apartments in the Hotel de l'Athenee. All the American ladies in Paris and the French fashionable world attended this exhibition. There are, he writes, dinner, ball, concert, visiting and traveling dresses, and various easy-fitting and picturesque toilets to be worn at home—that is to say, in the railway car in which the diva will reside during her tour through the United States. A blue satin robe, with long train and trimmed with marguerites and long, silvery grasses and blush jet with silver sheen, excited the greatest admiration. It had a moonlight effect. A traveling pelisse of blue velvet and hat, muff and wrap to match, were of royal blue velvet, lined with soft satin quilted over eiderdown and trimmed with a soft, long, gray fur of rare beauty. Each of Mlle. Nevada's concert dresses is to accord with the character of the operatic heroine whose melodies she is to sing when wearing it. All are elegant and costly, but some aim at an air of girlish simplicity. Others are of regal magnificence, and with the footlights shining on them will afford delight to the American ladies who go to hear the California cantatrice. The pocket handkerchiefs bear the names of the characters Mlle. Nevada has personated. Thus one set are marked Gilda, another Lucia, a third Mignon, and so on. Under garments of cobweb fineness, in which cambric, muslin, delicate linen and Valenciennes and Mechlin laces were artistically combined, were heaped on the side tables. The shoe and stocking department was remarkable for variety of designs, colors, elegance of finish and smallness. For each dress there was a separate pair of shoes and set of thread or silk stockings. Mlle. Nevada's number is seven, a fact which will give some notion of the Cinderella-like aspect of her foot. In the jewels was a back comb with a large spiral ornament in diamonds, the gift of Mme. Mackay.—Cor. London News.

WASHINGTON STATUES.

Fortunes Invested in Stone and Bronze Statuary.

Washington City has a great deal of money invested in statuary, and some of it may be looked upon as a mighty poor investment. Greenough's naked statue of Washington cost $45,000, and the statue of Liberty away up there on the Capitol dome cost $25,000. Clark Mills, the sculptor, received great sums from the Government, though he died comparatively poor. Fifty thousand dollars was the price paid him for Andrew Jackson, who sits upon a rearing horse opposite the White House, and he received another $50,000 for his equestrian statue of General Washington in Washington Circle. Another $50,000 statue is that of General Thomas in Thomas Circle, and it must make the tax-payer happy as he looks at it to remember that Congress paid $25,000 for the pedestal, and that the four bronze lamp posts around the base cost $4,000 apiece. Away off to the east of the capitol, in Lincoln Square, three thousand pounds of brass represent Abraham Lincoln giving freedom to the negro. The statue cost $17,000, but it was paid from contributions made up by the freedmen of the South. General Nathaniel Green stands in a park northeast of the capitol at a cost of $30,000, and in Scott Circle, General Winfield Scott has been embodied in bronze for $45,000. Vinnie Ream's statue of Farragut cost $20,000. The statue of McPherson, together with its pedestal, cost about $50,000, and down in Rawlins Square, southwest of the White House, there is a bronze statue of General Rawlins which looks just as well, at a cost of $10,000. In addition to those there is the statue of Prof. Henry in the Smithsonian grounds, which cost a small fortune, that of Admiral Dupont, opposite Blaine's, which represents a large enough sum to pay several times a Congressman's salary, and the beautiful bronze statue of Martin Luther in front of the Lutheran Memorial Church, which cost but $5,000, and is as fine a piece of statuary as you will find this side of the water.—Carp. in Cleveland Leader.

DESERVES KILLING.

A Villain in Maine Who Invented a Machine to Abolish Husking Bees.

The romance of corn-husking has gone. In the good old times when the corn was ripe for the harvest the farmer would gather it in great heaps around his barn, and while the moon was at the full invite the neighbors to a husking party. The farmers' girls and boys would come from far and near, and in a few short hours the bushels of ears would be stowed away in the cornhouse, while the boys searched eagerly for the red ears that, according to custom, gave them the privilege of claiming a kiss from some one of the blushing, rosy-cheeked damsels of the company. Then, after the work was done, the happy couples enjoyed the ample feast of pumpkin pie, apples and cider, while the joke and merriment went on, often ending in an old-fashioned dance in the ample barn or on the well-scrubbed kitchen floor. But now, after years of labor, an inventive genius "down in Maine" has invented a corn-husking machine which is said to do the work complete, making no pause when a red ear comes along, doing the work of twenty-five men. Thus is passing away one of the rare and radiant occasions for fun in country life, about which the rustic dreams and the farmer lass paints lovely mind-pictures framed with red ears and kisses.—Boston Globe.

—The case of Mrs. Langtry is one for the advanced women of America to consider. If woman is the superior person and, as in Mrs. Langtry's case, can pension off a husband, why should she not pay off his debts? Now that women make all the money, do they still wish to shrink all responsibility?—N. Y. World.

Danger from Catarrh

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—It affords me much pleasure to recommend HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. My health has been such that for some years past I have been obliged to take a tonic of some kind in the spring, and have never found anything that hit my wants as your Sarsaparilla. It tones up my system, purifies my blood, sharpens my appetite, and seems to make me over. Respectfully yours,

TORTOISE SHELLS.

Where They Come From and How They Are Polished and Made Up.

The importation and manufacture of tortoise shell into combs, hairpins and other articles of that nature has grown to be an immense business.

"I have had forty years' experience in the trade," said the proprietor of an uptown tortoise shell comb factory to a reporter, "and have during my career bought enough shell to fill the Great Eastern."

"Where do you get it from?"

"It is found in several parts of the globe, viz.: Florida Keys, Bermudas, Honduras and across to Africa, around the globe to the East Indies and China and on the Pacific coast to Cape St. Lucas. Notice it is confined to the same latitude in different countries, which is called the shell belt."

"Are there many varieties of shells?"

"There are three varieties. The real or genuine tortoise, from which the finest specimens of shells are obtained, is called the Hawkbill, or eagle of the air. Next comes the Loggerhead turtle, a degenerate, which furnishes a very inferior quality and can not produce those beautiful colors like eagle. Last the green turtle, which for shell purposes is almost good for nothing. The real tortoise has thirteen distinct and separate pieces of shell distributed over his back, designated as follows: Four kite pieces, one head piece, four backbones, two hips and two tail pieces. The extreme edges of a tortoise shell are called calipers or ages, and from these the finest amber colored shell is produced. The bottom of the foot, just beneath the toenails, the shell taken therefrom is also amber-colored."

"Can the shell of a land turtle be utilized in a comb factory?"

"It is considered worthless for comb purposes. Yet it is susceptible of being highly polished, and many fine jewelry boxes are made of it. Carbuncles frequently get on real tortoise shell, eat through and produce a faulty shell, just as a knot in a fine piece of pine timber ruins its grain. The price of the real shell, select quality of cliff (the hips are considered the best pieces and always called cliff) is nine dollars a pound. The caliper and toe-nail shell sells from seventy-five cents to three dollars and fifty cents a pound. But when it is worked up, polished, etc., it is worth treble the original cost."

"Can shell be dissolved?"

"No, it can not be dissolved or melted, although a Frenchman once asserted that it could. The late Dr. Chilton and the noted Dr. Quimby are my authorities on the subject. It is put together by being welded as iron, only with this difference, the air is excluded. Shell can be no more melted than a person could make a beautiful red, yellow or green color by mixing all the colors of paint together. It is said Dr. Quimby possesses valuable secrets in regard to tortoise shell and its capabilities. It would be a calamity if he should die without telling all he knows. Shell can be burned or destroyed by certain acids, otherwise it is indestructible. East India shell and Honduras shell can not be welded together, owing to some difference in their temperatures. Florida Keys and West Indies shell works better than any other. The African and East Indies shell is harder and possessed of a more brilliant color, but has the fault of being too brittle. Shell is a conductor and not porous, because it can not be dissolved. Dark colors usually predominate in all specimens of shell. It is considered the healthiest article yet to come in contact with the hair and scalp. It is a boon to womankind and is manufactured specially for their use."

"What is the process of manufacturing?"

"The shell is first placed in cold water and allowed to soak for some time. Then it is placed in boiling water for several hours. After this another soak is given in cold salt water and a final boil in pure fresh water prepares it for the workman. It is now kept pliable and at a certain temperature until worked into the shape or design required. The final polish is then given and the armor of the rough saurian of the sea is sold to adorn the head of some fair woman."—N. Y. Mail and Express.

A Shrewd Waiter's Game.

Rear Admiral Luce, of the United States navy, and General de Trobriand, of the army, lunched at a restaurant. The check was for three dollars and thirty-five cents. A five dollar bill was handed to the waiter, and presently he returned with a check and change on a plate. A one dollar note, a dime and five cents lay atop of the slip of paper, under which was concealed a half dollar. The General took up the note, left the fifteen cents as a tip, and got up to depart with his friend. "Stop!" thundered the Admiral to the waiter. "Set down that plate." "Yes, sah," responded the Frenchman. "Now, General, look at this and learn a lesson," the Admiral continued. "The change out of the five dollar bill ought to have amounted to one dollar and sixty-five cents. You got only one dollar and gave fifteen cents to this rascal. You never thought of the missing half dollar. Where do you suppose it is? I will show you," and he drew the check off the plate, disclosing the coin snugly lying underneath. "Our grimacing thief here would have had it safe in his pocket by this time if left to complete the operation. If you had stopped to count your change, and discovered that it was short, he would have picked up the plate, deftly drawn aside the check, and shown you that the right amount was there."—*N. Y. A SENSIBLE SUIT.

How Women Should Dress to Combine Health, Beauty and Economy.

It has been said that "most people dress as they like when they dress like their fellows, however foolish that may be," and that "gregarious folly gives a greater sense of satisfaction to them than does the soundest individual common sense." It is undeniable that noticeable deviation from the custom of the period brings disagreeable prominence to the unfortunate adventurer. From the chaos of costume of the present, however, a gentlewoman, whatever her style of person, may select almost any style of dress she fancies, and be not out of the fashion. But for her to be clothed in a manner at once healthful, economical and beautiful, she will consider herself, her purse and her position in life. She will begin with cleanliness. No soul can be at its best in a not-to-be-respected body.

The economy of one is unwarranted closeness in another. We will, therefore, consider what has been aptly termed the "middle extreme."

Nature asks us to be clean; to support the weight of our garments, so far as is possible, from the bony framework of the shoulders; to allow no manifold cloth to press upon and heat the small of the back, whence radiate nerves and where cluster ligatures and muscles, whose injuries are seeds of suffering and death; to refuse all compression of our vital organs and to have our clothing as well fitted to our shapes as is consistent with perfect freedom of motion. One is more at ease in the cheapest gown perfectly fitted than in the costliest material bungled.

Practical illustration is sometimes better than any amount of theoretical advice, and I will describe, therefore, the manner of dress adopted by a woman who is now, at seventy years of age, the wonder and admiration of all who meet with her. She is the wife of an aged, retired clergyman, and has lived on both large and small incomes. She was not born in what is called the laboring class, but does more work in the twenty-four hours, I venture to say, than does one woman in fifty of those younger than herself. She is the best conversationalist in her town of four thousand inhabitants, reads all the papers and magazines she can lay hands upon, is straight as a dart and steps like a healthy girl. With an invalid husband she has often been obliged to be more or less active in matters belonging to a man's work, and has felt the necessity of entire freedom and ease of motion. The divided costume never entered her by no means "strong-minded" notions. She wears Balbriggan undervests, with drawers to match, in summer; these give way to merino or mixed cotton and wool in winter; over them goes a pair of hose-supporters, extending from the shoulder directly to the stockings, with no belt. Her stockings are long and very good, and she wears Balbriggan styles all the year, as her sensitive skin rebels at wool; but she wears flannel-lined shoes, with heels one inch high, from November to May. Next the underclothing follows a garment which is, in my opinion, the desideratum of a woman's dress—that which carries the whole superstructure. It, with an addition, is what commerce names the combination skirt and corset cover She wears no corsets, but this garment is fitted to her, as a basque would be. Its upper fronts are cut out, their places being filled by gathered pulls. She stitches three cords in the button-side of the front, or attaches a thin, wide, whalebone, encased and easily detached for the laundry. On the two seams on either side the middle of the back, which are four or five inches apart, she sews straps an inch wide, from the armholes to within three inches of their extremities, which are neatly shaped, ending on a line with the waist; on the pendent ends are dress reform buttons, to which the petticoat is attached by short straps, sewed perpendicularly to its belt and furnished with button-holes. It takes only a short time to provide the articles with their straps and the ease of the unburdened back thus secured is beyond price. Dress skirts are furnished with similar loops for using the buttons, except when a thin skeleton waist is permanently attached to the skirt, this being an advantage in winter for heavy goods.

My lady is inclined to think that women dress the body too heavily and the limbs not enough so, and she puts on merino drawers earlier in the fall than she changes the vests from thin to thicker. The cut of her dresses is not unfashionable, and she even sometimes wears the slightest of spring bustles, disliking the massed fulness of the skirts to lie warmly against her back.

The beauty of dress is its tasteful choosing of suitable material, its harmonious coloring and its graceful outlines. These must be matters of individual decision. There is one rule always true—tall women should avoid perpendiculars, and short women should avoid horizontals, as to lines.—Cor. Philadelphia Press.

A Cheap Paint for Outbuildings.

Ex-Commissioner of Agriculture Le Duc writes to the Husbandman, in reply to inquiries of the method of preparing skim milk paint, as follows: "Skim milk, sweet, mixed to the thickness of cream with common cistern cement—fresh is preferable—and laid on wood or brick, is an excellent paint, more enduring than white lead and oil, as commonly sold. It stood for me on a rough boarded barn twenty-four years, and I repainted chiefly because the cornice, doors and other trimmings, painted with the pure oxide of iron and oil, had faded. The color of the milk and lime is yellowish stone color and may be changed by the addition of any of the earthy pigments without injury to the paint. The lime in the cement and casein in the milk form an insoluble compound. The inference would seem to be that Holsteins and other cattle whose milk is rich in caseine, would furnish skim milk better suited to the purpose than Jerseys or [illegible]

DEATH OF THE VICE PRESIDENT.

The sudden death of Vice President Hendricks has stirred the hearts of the people and awakened their livliest sympathies. Political friends and foes alike speak of the departed statesman with the kindest words. Personal enemies he had none. His private life was blameless and beyond reproach, and he will take rank among the brightest and best of America's public men.

We gather from our exchanges a few eulogistic notices which show the high esteem entertained for the foremost Indiana statesman in all sections of our land.

The Toledo Bee says:

Thomas Hendricks was a giant Democrat, a giant statesman. He was a man of the people—in thought and feeling and action, he was fully alive to the best interests of the people.—He was a man of broad mind, a big heart filled with patriotic devotion, and of an integrity of purpose which failed not amid difficulties the most stupendous. In private and social life he was one of the most genial and accessible of men, unostentatious in a marked degree. In his manners he was uniformly gentle, modest, unassuming, yet on occasions he was an intellectual and aggressive gladiator in the arena of debate where principle was involved, and the peer of the greatest. He had the appreciation and confidence of the people, not only of his own state, but of the country.

The Louisville Courier Journal says:

Mr. Hendricks was less conspicuous for brilliant talent than for a level head, a cool judgment, and a kind heart. He rarely lost his balance.—He was a steady partisan, but neither implacable nor extreme. His powers of persuasion were very great. He impressed an audience with his sincerity and his amiability. A more plausible vote-catching speaker has seldom appeared in our political annals. In his personal relations he was courteous and tolerant to the last degree. It may be doubted whether he left an enemy behind him, for, despite his strong points of intellect and character, malice could not but pass him by. The mistake of his life was his separation from Mr. Tilden and the idea of the "old ticket" in 1880, but for which he would have been nominated and elected President, Mr. Tilden declining to be a candidate then as he did four years later. But notwithstanding this error in a career singularly free from errors, and the resentment which followed it, Mr. Hendricks had a strong hold upon the confidence and affections of his party, as was shown by that wonderful demonstration in the Chicago convention, where he was nominated for Vice President.

The Detroit News says:

His long career, unblemished by personal dishonor, and his amiable character endeared him to thousands of people in the West, and his recent adhesion of what may be called "stalwart" Democracy, as against the mugwump tendencies of the administration, brought his name into prominence in the East as a possibility in the next Presidential campaign. The regret which is felt at his sudden death is tempered by the knowledge that he had lived a happy and comparatively long life, and that the blow, which must have come soon in any event, was gently dealt, and found him in the midst of honors. It is under such circumstances that all wise men should wish to die.

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

Thanksgiving day was very generally observed in Tecumseh. The business houses were all closed during the day. People attended religious services in the forenoon and the afternoon was devoted to family re-unions and social gatherings. Divine services were held at St. Peter's Church, at the Universalist Church, and at the Baptist Church—the Baptist, Presbyterian, and Methodist congregations joining in a union service at the latter place.

At the Episcopal Church.

At St. Peter's Church the usual Thanksgiving service was read from the liturgy with appropriate musical selections by the choir, followed by a brief discourse from the rector, Rev. J. Phelps, of which the following is an imperfect synopsis. We should be pleased to give the same in full but lack of space precludes our doing so. We present the introductory and closing portions:

The great object of this service is to make a public recognition of God's Providence in temporal, as well as spiritual things. For we are too apt to allow ourselves to get into the way of thinking that the fruits of the earth, and all material blessings, as well as public peace and tranquility, are simply the result of natural laws, or the unaided results of our own efforts. But although it is true, that if a man does not plant neither shall he reap; yet God giveth the increase. God has indeed given to us fixed laws, and appointed certain means for attainment of desired results, yet He will prosper and bless the means, or withhold the blessing as shall please Him. He is the author of Nature's laws, as of all things else, and the elements are subject to His control, not only "wind and storm, fulfilling His word, but also gentle rains and showers. A good season or bad, prosperity or adversity is His overruling care. God gives awards temporal as well as allotments, and these as readily as inducements to a virtuous and godly life. For all the exalted hopes springing from a true faith in Christ our Saviour; for the establishment of His Kingdom among men, we may well bless and magnify His name. Finally, for all these blessings which are given us so fully to enjoy, religious, civil, political and personal; let us strive to cherish obedient, thankful and generous hearts. We have received conspicuous shares of His bounty. By His Providential hand the clouds of adversity and gloominess have been greatly dispersed, and the hope of prosperity enlivened. Contentment and peace are passed in a large degree. Hope, that great incentive to patient and successful labor stimulates the energies of our people. May our thanks be commensurate with our blessings; thus shall we continue to have, and to enjoy these blessings of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

At the Universalist Church.

The singing was by the chorus choir which finely rendered an opening anthem of gratitude, praise and prayer. After which followed the scripture lesson, hymns, prayer and sermon.—The discourse by the pastor, Rev. J. M. Getchell, was based upon words taken from Psalm 144:12-15.

The attendance was good, Beers' Post No. 140 attending with some 30 members or more, while the general public seemed to have taken interest in the theme previously announced, "The Ideal Nation."

Rev. Getchell first spoke of the President's proclamation and that of the Governor of our State. After brief mention of their import he alluded to the fact of Thanksgiving Day having become not a day for New England alone, but a national festival. Of its stepping over state and sectarian boundaries. That the anthem of Thanksgiving blends with the sweet chimes of Christmas and the carol of Easter echoes with joy around the world. Thus, if Christmas recalls the advent of Christ and christianity; if Easter celebrates the resurrection; then Thanksgiving Day reminds us of one of the great political and religious events in the history of the ages.

The next thought was that of the sublime idea of real gratitude. The spirit of actual thankfulness being probably the grandest achievement of the human race. Almost divinity itself. Heartfelt gratitude comes only at long intervals. In all christendom with its centuries only to one divine being named Jesus.

Then the speaker presented some ideas regarding the question:—Why does the day so long foretold of "The Ideal Nation" come with such seeming slow footsteps? Under this head mentioned the totality of human effort; the infancy of human thought; of human wrongs and vices which assure that the "walk and conversation" of humanity was not as yet, wholly "in heaven," and alluded to the triumphs and prophetic feeling of the hour. That if one may predict the future of the nation by the past then the closing of this century and the incoming of the next will bring it in its achievement and progress to grander summits of wonder, utility and triumph.

Following this, some interesting statistics were given, and how they were sounding to the kingdoms of the earth the trumpet of peace. How they represented a psalm of gratitude that had echoed around the globe. Were the hand of Providence shaping the destiny of the millions and ushering in the new day of the kingdom of Jesus. God's answer when we prayed, "this day our daily bread."

Then the reforms of our time were mentioned and how they pointed as the index finger of heaven to the incoming day of the fifth gospel of the kingdom of Christ.

At this point there were introduced some most touching thoughts to the comrades present and how the morning hour of "The Ideal Nation comes apace.

Then reference was made to our state, that of Michigan, and her momentous part in securing the glorious results of an ideal nation. Her sons and daughters chorus anew the sublime psalm of righteousness, gratitude and joy.

The closing of the sermon touched upon the thought of how the nation may be glad in God, and we sing as our hymns of Thanksgiving, that He bless all within our borders, all who mingle in our industries; who work for freedom; who flock to our land to earn their bread and make liberty sublime. If arising high and higher yet, keeping step to the eternal march song of the Most High, becoming more and more like the divine teacher of Nazareth, and thus the day of "The Ideal Nation" dawns, and "our sons be as plants grown up in their youth; our daughters as corner stones, polished after the similitude of a palace; * * That there be no breaking in, nor going out; that there be no complaining in the streets. Happy is that people in such a case; yea, happy is that people, whose God is Jehovah."

The closing hymn was America and the congregation all joined with the choir in singing it with a new spirit and the understanding also. The G. A. R's sang with a will, as if their hearts were touched with loyality, gratitude and prayer.

At the Baptist Church.

Here the music was rendered by the Baptist Choir and the sermon was preached by Rev T. G. Potter of the M. E. church; He took his text from Ps. 16, 6. "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage." Never did these statements apply to the circumstances and condition of any people with such peculiar force, as they do to the people of this great nation at the present time. Considered geographically, how magnificent our heritage. Vast in extent, compact in form, wonderful diversity of climate, soil and products. How innumerable and inexhaustible the accessible sources of wealth. What matchless facilities for agriculture, manufactures and commerce. Human intelligence and energy find here an appropriate sphere. Boundless fields invite enterprise. The infinitude of occupations afford congenial employment for all. The nature must be torpid that is not excited to efforts by the solicitations of unequaled opportunities. How surely and readily the door to reasonable prosperity opens to all who are industrious and temperate.

Socially considered: "Our lives have fallen in peculiarly pleasant places." We admit that the people of other lands have valid and extensive claims to social excellence. In other countries may be found samples of social perfection fully equal to our very best specimens. We admit that we have some very serious and sad social defects, But we claim that our average social grades entitles us to the van in the merit of social progress. Here the blighting curse of social cast has not fallen. The only social classification among us is due to natural attraction. Here the wealthy are not reared in indolence and luxury, and the few who are soon find the way back to poverty. Here wealth neither receives nor demands eringing homage and fulsome adulation. Those who acquire wealth know how to appreciate honest toil, and seldom sneer at the struggles of poverty. We see but few exhibitions here of pompous self-importance. Our most distinguished men are modest and agreeable.

Considered politically, How wonderful our circumstances. There is not at present, there has not been in the past any nation equal to ours. Here personal liberty exhibits its highest conceivable manifestations. Every one may act just as he may feel disposed, unless he invades the rights of others. Here legal equality is not a myth, we have no privileged classes. Yet understanding the latitude given to liberty, persons and property are as safe here as elsewhere. The highway of political preferment is open to all who desire political distinction. Ability and integrity arising out of obscurity, often win in the contest, with fortune's favorites. Our people promptly and cheerfully accept the verdict of the ballot and legally support the administration. Champions of liberty in other countries have accomplished much which entitles them to respect. The founders of our government are justly entitled to the admiration and gratitude of all mankind.

As it regards Religion, Our advantages are unequalled. No legal impediments in the path of religious progress, no attempt to mould opinions, or establish standards of faith, no money extorted by taxation to support churches. These must subsist upon the voluntary contributions of the people. Religion is vastly the gainer by being permitted to stand alone. All denominations are amply protected by law. If christians in other ages had such wonderful freedom they would have hailed it as the millenium. Our extreme religious liberality not due to supreme religious indifference. All our blessings come from God, and should awaken ardent love and gratitude in our hearts. We should make progress in the ratio of our great opportunities.

The rink was crowded last Tuesday night, the chief attraction being the five mile race between Harry Corbin, of this village, and F. G. Ward, of Ypsilanti. At nine o'clock the two men started. Ward is a short, heavy built young man, and has a record as a fast skater, having skated 10 miles in 40 minutes, while Corbin although a fast skater was out of training that is necessary for a long race. Ward at the start gained on his opponent, and when on the 53d lap passed him. 95 laps of the rink was to make five miles. At the last lap Ward came in about one and a-half laps ahead, the time for the five miles being 20 minutes and 20 seconds.

A SHOCKING TRAGEDY.

Aaron Palmer Shoots Two Brothers on the Public Streets and Escapes In the Darkness.

B. B. ANDERSON AND ERNIE ANDERSON THE VICTIMS OF PALMER'S PISTOL.

The Condition of the Wounded Men—Efforts to Capture the Perpetrator—A Reward of Five Hundred Dollars Offered.

The usually peaceful and law abiding village of Tecumseh has probably never been the scene of a more shocking affray than that which occurred upon our public street last Saturday evening. Although the event is now five days old, still the excitement occasioned thereby continues and hence we endeavor as briefly as possible to give our readers the salient points of the affair.

Aaron Palmer, the man who did the shooting, has lived in Tecumseh from boyhood. He is now about twenty-eight years of age. For about three years previous to last June he was firing on the railroad between Cleveland and Buffalo but since June he has been living at his parents, here in Tecumseh most of the time. Palmer has always possessed an ungovernable temper and when under the influence of strong drink he becomes positively dangerous. Even his parents have no control over him at these times.

WHERE THE AFFRAY OCCURRED.

The late evening train on the Jackson Branch gets here when on time about ten o'clock in the evening. On Saturday evenings it has been the custom to hold the postoffice open and distribute the mail that arrives on that train for the convenience of people who wish to get their Sunday reading that night. Last Saturday evening this train was about half an hour late, and it was nearly eleven o'clock before people got their mail. In the early part of the evening Palmer filled himself with budge and went to the Salvation Army meeting, where he became so boisterous that he was put out. We cannot learn that he displayed any weapons at this time and probably had none about him. Soon after this he went home and went to bed. But for some reason he soon got up, and as the sequel shows, went out well armed.

An hour later he appeared in the postoffice armed with a dirk knife and revolver and swinging a lantern. He remained there several minutes while the crowd was waiting for the mail, and was so abusive to several of the bystanders that Mr. A. E. Kennedy, proprietor of the news depot requested him to leave. He then went out followed by a number of persons, and after reaching the side walk he and Mr. P. B. Anderson had some words. What they were we cannot say, but something Anderson said provoked Palmer and he pulled out his pistol and shot Anderson, the ball striking his neck tie and glancing through the fleshy part of the neck into his left shoulder. Ernie Anderson, Berf's brother, happened to stand close by and he at once grabbed Palmer from behind to prevent a repetition of the shots. Palmer then reached back and over his left shoulder and fired two bullets into Ernie Anderson, one taking effect in the left arm, and the other in the left breast. By this time the crowd had surged out of the postoffice, and in the excitement of the moment Palmer darted south on railroad street and made his escape. The shooting took place on the sidewalk near the corner of Kinney's furniture store.

THE PURSUIT.

Palmer fled South on railroad street, crossed the railroad at Pottawatamie street and ran into the yard between C. A. Wright's house and Mrs. Spofford's, where the trace was lost. Capt. Fred Wood and a few others then organized a searching party and the premises were thoroughly searched, but without result. A member of Mr. Wright's family heard the cellar door slam a moment before the pursuers arrived, and after the crowd had left the yard she heard the same door slam again. The supposition is that he concealed himself in the cellar until the pursuers had lost the trail and then came out and escaped south. Several stories were afloat within twenty-four hours after the affair, to the effect that Palmer had been seen at various places, but the theory generally accepted now is this—that he ran between Wright's house and Mrs. Spofford's house, thence through the back yards in the rear of Elliott's blacksmith shop, striking the railroad again some where near the target, and going directly South to Raisin Center, where the Wabash crosses the Jackson Branch. Taking the first freight train in the night on the Wabash he proceeded to Detroit, and by daylight on Sunday morning he was probably in Canada. Having been a railroad employe he kept track of the trains on all the roads about here and could easily take risks upon a train which an ordinary man would neither think of nor dare to do.

CARING FOR THE WOUNDED.

As soon as the crowd learned the serious character of the wounds inflicted upon the Andersons, they were conveyed to Andersons' Dry Goods Store and medical aid was summoned with the utmost dispatch. About midnight they were taken home, Berf to his own house on Chicago street and Ernie to his father's house near by. Dr's Catlin, House and Jenkins attended and after a careful examination of both cases Berf's wound was pronounced to be not at all dangerous. The ball was easily found and extracted. The bullet which entered Ernie's arm passed through it entirely. The one which entered his left breast could not be found, and this wound, the physicians consider of a serious and perhaps dangerous character.

INTERVIEWS WITH EYE WITNESSES.

A. E. Kennedy, who runs the news depot in the post office, says: "While the crowd was in the post office waiting for their mail, Palmer came in with a lantern and began flourishing a dirk knife. I requested him to be quiet. Berf Anderson told him to behave himself or the officers would have him in the cooler. Palmer became so boisterous that I requested him to go out and he did so. Anderson followed him out, with several others, and a moment or two afterwards the shots were fired. Palmer shot twice after the last ball took effect on Ernie and then turned and ran. Fred Wood and Em Doke came up then and they started in pursuit."

James Moir, the village marshal, says: "I was at the lock up when I heard the shots fired. Upon coming out of the Council Building I saw the crowd in pursuit of Palmer and joined in the chase. He ran between Wright's and Mrs. Spofford's houses and there we lost the trail. I assisted in searching the premises and also Mr. A. J. Palmer's house where young Palmer lived, but we could get no trace of him."

Capt. Fred B. Wood says: "I was in the postoffice waiting for the mail when Palmer came in. He had some conversation there with Berf. Anderson and also with others, and he finally became so boisterous that Kennedy requested him to leave. Palmer at once stepped out on the sidewalk and was followed by Berf. Anderson, Em. Doke and myself and a number of others. The idea I had at the time, was that Palmer would bear watching. He passed along the walk east to Kinney's corner, having some words with the crowd. Just as Palmer turned the corner south, he called Anderson a vile epithet, which Anderson made a move to resent, when Palmer took his pistol from his hip pocket fell back to the south and fired as Berf. and I turned the corner after him. Just then it seems Ernie Anderson, who was coming up the street from Strong & McNair's corner, arrived, and grabbed Palmer from behind immediately after the first shot was fired. Palmer then reached his right hand over his left shoulder and shot two balls into Ernie Anderson. Two more shots were fired but they went into the air, one of the bullets striking the casing of Kinney's east show window. The shots were all fired within the space of one minute. Em. Doke and myself were within ten feet of Palmer during the time and Wes. Bordine was near by, close to the corner post of Kinney's store and must have had a close call from the last ball. Several other persons stood on the sidewalk in front of the postoffice. After the last shot was fired Palmer broke and ran south. I was not aware then that Ernie had been shot, in fact, the first that I knew Ernie was there, was when I ran against him when we started for Palmer. Palmer was perhaps about one rod ahead of me. When opposite his father's house, he took the middle of the street and as he approached Pottawatamie street, the street lamp at Hayden's corner affording more light, I was very close to him when he turned and run down Pottawatamie street and into the yard between Wright's and Mrs. Spofford's houses. When I struck the sidewalk in front of Wright's house, Em. Doke, Jas. Moir, Wes. Bordine, and Berf. Anderson had overtaken me. Berf said "I'm shot, feel under my collar." I placed my hand as directed and found he was shot. His neck was bleeding and he was growing weak. I then assisted Berf back to Kinney's corner while the other persons followed after Palmer. As it was very dark between the two houses Palmer evaded them and the trail was lost. When I got back to Kinney's corner with Berf, I learned for the first time that Ernie had been shot."

WHAT THE DOCTORS SAY.

The attending physicians regard Berf's case as not serious. He is doing well and will soon be out again. The wound in Ernie's arm is giving some trouble but is not considered dangerous. The wound in his left chest is a very serious one and at first the doctors were fearful that it might prove fatal. It was some time before the ball could be found. Yesterday afternoon the ball was extracted, and the patient bore the operation bravely, taking no chloroform during the time. It was lodged near the skin, close to the shoulder blade in the back. The physicians now regard him out of danger. Our citizens felt greatly relieved yesterday afternoon upon hearing this good news.

WHAT THE OFFICERS ARE DOING.

Dept. Sheriff Aten, Marshal Moir and Constable Stevens, were upon the ground soon after the trouble occurred. Sheriff Witmore was at once notified and officers were dispatched from Adrian during the night to intercept the fugitive. On Sunday Sheriff Whitmore, Prosecutor Salsbury and several other county officials were in Tecumseh, perfecting their arrangements for a still further search. The Sheriff offered a reward of $500 and sent out postal cards containing the announcement as follows:

$500 REWARD—For the arrest of Aaron Palmer, wanted for assault with intent to murder at the village of Tecumseh, Mich., on Saturday night, November 28. Palmer is 29 years of age, dark hair, dark mustache (not heavy,) weight 180 pounds; height 5 feet 11 inches; dark hazel eyes; a slight curve of upper lip at left corner; slight twitching of the face while speaking; broad shoulders; large neck; had on snuff colored cutaway frock coat; snuff colored pants, tight fitting. Is a railroad fireman; has fired on the L. S. & M. S. railroad, between Cleveland and Buffalo; has relatives living near Newburg, Ohio, by the name of Harlow Falk.

I will pay $500 for his arrest and detention in any jail in the states or Canada. All information to be sent to sheriff, Adrian, Mich., box 293.

ANCIL K. WHITMORE,
Sheriff, in and for Lenawee Co.
L. H. SALSBURY, Pros. Atty.

We understand that the officers have struck a trail which they hope will lead to Palmer's capture, but for obvious reasons it is deemed prudent to withhold the information from the public.

Berf and Ernie Anderson are well known here, being members of the firm of A. Anderson & Son's, Grocers. They have a good business reputation and have the respect of the entire community. Berf has a family of his own, and Ernie lives with his father, Albert Anderson. The stricken families have the sympathy of all in this awful visitation. Palmer's father, A. J. Palmer, is proprietor of the Chair factory on railroad street. He is a temperate; peaceable citizen, attends strictly to his own affairs, and is esteemed by all who know him. Mr. & Mrs. Palmer are overwhelmed with grief and mortification over the tragedy, and Mrs. Palmer has been prostrated with sickness since the occurrence. No one imputes any blame to them. The excitement last Sunday was at fever heat, but on Monday people became cooler and resumed their usual avocations.

The wounded men are having the best nursing and medical attention possible, and the indications now are that both of them will recover. The officers are using their utmost endeavor to capture Palmer; and if taken, he will have to atone for his crime.

What a chain of calamities one misdeed can, sometimes occasion. Two families have been invaded, one of our citizens seriously wounded and another brought to the very threshold of death, a third family has been prostrated with grief over a son's misdoings, the good name of our community has been brought into disrepute and disgrace. And the cause of all this calamity and suffering can be found in one word—Whiskey. Whiskey did it all.

PEARL FISHERIES.

Description of a Peculiar Industry and the Perils That Attend It.

The overfishing of the last fifteen or twenty years is doing for pearls what it did long ago for oysters. Fashion also bears its part in raising prices, and a good set of three black pearl shirt studs can not be got wholesale much under £10. Four years ago they could be had for less than a third of that price. Mother-of-pearl has risen in the market too, and now costs nearly one shilling the pound at the fisheries, where four pounds could be obtained for the same money twelve years back. The fisheries of the Red Sea and the Bay of Bengal are still, however, as celebrated as they ever were in classic days, although further can no longer apply for the produce by the peck, as Varro—at second hand—said they used to do: "Altera Coræ viram scopulis margaritarum." For all the scenery of pearls, we now get them from also the Sunda isles of the Malay Archipelago, the seas of China and Japan, from Panama, Tahiti, the Gambier Islands and Australia. The pearl market is no longer at Rome, as do Margaritarius Poetices, but in the lands of the Amsterdam, Hamburg, London and New York dealers who buy up all the harvest of the seas.

There are numerous bivalves which give pearls, but, indifferent or better; not the true pearl-oyster. If oyster it can be called, for it is exactly like an exaggerated cockle—is the Margaritifera, or Pinna fucata, which measures from one to six inches in diameter and an inch and a half in thickness. The oceanic variety of it dwells from the East Indies, and gives a finer gem. The Tuamotu archipelago, to the east of the Society Islands, is perhaps the greatest pearl-fishery in the world. Of its eighty islands there are only some half dozen whose waters do not produce the pearl-oyster. The natives of this group are by no means lazy, but living in a climate where it is always hot, and the women are the most expert. Two women, especially, of Fakarava, one of Amanu or Chain Island, are well known as this far the more dreaded for that sapphic gathering—for plunging into watery depths fathoms of water, in the teeth of the sharks, and remaining as long as three whole minutes under water. A famous diver of Amanu escaped not long ago from a shark with the loss of a breast and an arm, and many of them go down never to come up again. If they make too many plunges in their day's work at the beginning of the season, which comprises the sultriest months, from November to February, they bring on hemorrhage or congestion; and after some years passed in the occupation paralysis is certain. Few of these divers work for themselves, but earn four shillings a day from the pearl-traders. With a wooden tube some sixteen inches long, ten inches square, and glazed at one end, they prospect from their boats the bottom of these translucent seas; the glass end, which is put into the water, serving the purpose of suppressing the eye-puzzling surface-ripple.

The diver of the Persian Gulf or of Ceylon attaches a weight of some twenty pounds to his feet to aid in his descent, and carries seven or eight pounds more of ballast in a belt. He protects both eyes and ears with oiled cotton, bandages his mouth, and goes down forty feet with a rope. He remains down from fifty-three to eighty seconds, and helps himself up again by the rope. But the Pacific diver practices the conjurer's boast of "no preparation." Just before the plunge he or she draw a full breath rapidly three or four times running, and finally, with the lungs full of air, drops feet first to the bottom, not forty feet, but twenty-five or thirty fathoms (Darbest to Dampier), and comes to the surface again with extraordinary swiftness, unaided in any way. Each dive generally lasts from sixty to ninety seconds; and only very occasionally the astonishing maximum of three minutes. The divers hardly ever bring up more than one oyster at a time, but this is chosen as likely to contain pearls by some fancied rule of thumb of their own, grounded on age, form and color; and they hold the shells tightly together as they mount, lest the envious oyster should shed the pearl, which the divers themselves are very quick to conceal by swallowing if the employer's eye is not fixed upon them. Diving-bells have been introduced by some houses in the trade, but the natives will no longer work in them, saying they bring on early paralysis of the legs.

Like his edible relative, the pearl-oyster also has his enemies and parasites. A flat fish called taheeta by the natives of this Polynesian archipelago makes great ravages among the young fry; it resembles the eagle-ray, which is so destructive in European oyster-beds. There is another, a long fish with powerful jaws for crunching the full-grown oyster, which is called the oiri or kotohe, and does not seem to have been identified by naturalists. There are also two univalve shell-fish—a murex, which spends its time boring holes through the oyster, and a pholadc, which scoops a nest for itself in the upper shell, just as its fellows do in the rocks of our own coasts. But the worst pest of all is probably a marine worm, locally called the needle-worm, which pierces a network of galleries, like the book worm or the teredo, between the outer and inner surface of the shells, and so ruins the mother-of-pearl, which when so damaged is known in the trade as worm-eaten. There is a small parasitical sponge, too, which stains or "spots" the mother-of-pearl. Polypi ascidiane and serpulæ all mingle in the fray; and while the older crabs remove the young oysters from their beds with their nippers to be eaten at leisure, the crab fry get inside and billet themselves at bed and board on the grown oyster until they have eaten their host out of house and home. It is very possible that some of these enemies are the irritant causes of the pearls, in the center of which there is always some foreign substance, such as a grain of sand or a fish's egg. A great number of small pearls are sometimes found in one bivalve; one with 115, from Elizabeth or Toau Island, in the Tuamotu group, was shown in Paris in 1878. Some pearls reach a great size; and one from Panama, which was presented to Philip II., of Spain, in 1579, is reported to have been as big as a pigeon's egg.

The little glass globules of which they consist are first filled with a mixture of isinglass and essence of the East," and then stuffed with melted wax. This essence d'Orient is made of the pearly matter which is found at the base of the scales of the whitebait, preserved in ammonia.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SAVED BY SPASMS.

How a Young Doctor Managed to Secure a Lucrative Practice.

"Talking about physic," said an ex-doctor, reminds me of an incident that occurred during my practice when I was new in the cause, and which, when you hear, you will readily recognize as an important epoch in my professional career. It was in a country town in the western part of the State. I had just arrived a few days previous, a beardless boy, with very little hope of getting a patient under two years. However, I had gone there to stay, and so had made up my mind accordingly. I hung out my shingle and prepared to go anywhere at a moment's notice. One morning about two o'clock I was awakened by some one shouting, "O, Doctor!" at my front gate. I dressed hastily and went with the stranger, who proved to be the father of a child three days old, who, he said, was dying with spasms. Upon my arrival at the house I was shown into the sick room. The young mother lay weeping upon the bed and the almost moribund form of the precious little one was being fondly nursed by an old woman, who said the child had just had another severe fit. I was puzzled. It was my first case, and I readily recognized that my future reputation depended on the recovery of the child, but what to do for it I knew no more than a tony-year-old boy. In day I made up my mind, prepared some simple dose and told the parents the child would have no more spasms, which of course was guess-work. This did not satisfy them. I could see in their faces that they lacked confidence, but I was firm. My ward was out, and I stood to it and left. The father followed me to the door and said he wanted me to come around the next day and meet his old family physician, as he thought I was too young, and the child needed medical attention from a more experienced practitioner. I, of course, agreed, but at the same time for fear my reputation was for ever gone if the old doctor should come and tell them the child was really sick. I went home, but could not sleep, and as soon as breakfast was over I hurried over to see my patient. The father met me at the door. He looked cheerful and gave me a hearty greeting. "The baby is all right," said he, and sure enough when I went in the little fellow was as lively as a May morning, and my reputation was made. The parents praised me as the best baby-doctor known, and from that time on I enjoyed a splendid practice among the little ones. The news of my wonderful cure spread for miles around, and two days afterward I was called to see another child, some twelve miles distant. The child had been sick for several weeks and under the treatment of an old white-haired practitioner. The father of this child informed me, while en route to his house, that I was called in because he had heard of the wonderful cure effected in the case of Mr. S——'s baby. This rather nonplussed me, for he told me that Dr. ——, from an adjoining town, whom I knew to be an eminent physician, had failed to benefit the little one. As soon as I saw the patient, I at once detected that the angel of death was hovering near, and all earthly power would be of no avail, but still I did not at once inform the parents. They had confidence in me, and I disliked to dispel their good opinion, so I set about to prescribe for the patient, but before I had taken out my medicine the baby was attacked with a severe spasm, and its little soul took its flight to another and a better world. So you can readily see how my reputation was again saved by a spasm. Had the child lingered along and died, which it surely would have done in a day or so, they would have said I did not treat it properly.

"This," continued the ex-doctor, is simply told you to show some of the difficulties met with by young doctors when they first start out. A young professional man has a poor chance at best in this uncharitable world. The incidents just related were providential epochs in my career, and ever afterward I had a lucrative practice, until a failure of health caused me to seek a more congenial field of labor.—Nashville Banner.

—The Congregationalist records a case of heathenism at Springfield, Mass., which is truly remarkable. It says: "A little girl happened in a neighbor's house one morning at the time of family prayers. She was asked to stay, and accepting the invitation, remained an interested participant in the proceedings. When they all rose from kneeling she startled the company with the exclamation: 'I like this game first-rate. What is the name of it?' All this is said to have occurred under the shadow of Hope Church."

—The recent census in Massachusetts shows that out of about 350 towns 150 lose in population. The gains are in manufacturing centers, the marked losses in the agricultural districts, and certain compensatory gains in towns which would be expected to lose are due to their being convenient homes for those whose business is in the cities. Nantucket threatens to become depopulated in time. The population of the island has fallen from 8,064 in 1855 to 3,143 in 1885.—Boston Journal.

—Spanish sailors are the most superstitious of the lot. One of their pet omens is that a ship whose decks are wet the first day out will have fine weather the rest of the voyage. For that reason they often leave their hoorlugs in a storm.

Father, Mother, and Three Sisters Dead.

Mr. David Claypool, formerly Sergeant-at-Arms of the New Jersey Senate, and now Notary Public at Cedarville, Cumberland Co., N. J., makes the following startling statement: "My father, mother, and three sisters all died with consumption, and my lungs were so weak I could hardly think I could live. Coughing was very straining on me with my weak constitution, and I was rapidly going to the grave. While in this condition I commenced using Mishler's Herb Bitters, and it saved my life. Because it was so difficult to get it in this little place, and I had improved so much, I stopped taking it for a time, and the result is that I have commenced going rapidly down hill again. Somehow, Mishler's Herb Bitters gives appetite and strengthens and builds me up as nothing else does, and I must have a dozen bottles at once. Use this communication as you please, and if any one wants to be convinced of its truth, let them write me and I will make affidavit to it, for I owe my life to Mishler's Herb Bitters."

The secret of the almost invariable relief and cure of consumption, dysentery, diarrhœa, dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver complaints, when Mishler's Herb Bitters is used, is that it contains simple, harmless, and yet powerful ingredients, that act on the blood, kidneys, and liver, and through them strengthens and invigorates the whole system. Purely vegetable in its composition; prepared by a regular physician; a standard medicinal preparation; endorsed by physicians and druggists. These are four strong points in favor of Mishler's Herb Bitters. Mishler's Herb Bitters is sold by all druggists. Price $1.00 per large bottle. 6 bottles for $5.00.

Ask your druggist for MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS. If he does not keep it do not take anything else, but send a postal card to MISHLER HERB BITTERS CO., 625 Commerce Street, Philadelphia.

POSTAGE STAMPS.

Complete History of the Introduction of these Indispensable Little Trifles.

Thirty-eight years ago the first postage stamps were used in the United States. For 175 years postage had been collected entirely in money, and in all cases prepayment was optional. Good old John Haywood, who in 1680 became the "worthy master of the posts" at Boston and the first postmaster in America, employed chance conveyance instead of postage, with "by the kindness of" some traveler as his postal service, and nothing was thought about stamping until 1841, though such men as Franklin, Bache, Pickering and Kendall had been at the head of the Post Office Department, and though the number of offices had come to be nearly fourteen thousand. On the 25th of March, 1840, John M. Niles, of Hartford, became Postmaster-General, and signalized his administration by many reforms. He turned the wrong side out of his predecessor's work, and convinced his party and the President that it was necessary to cap all by a genuine innovation, and he performed this by suggesting the postage stamp. The suggestion was received with ridicule, and Mr. Niles soon afterward retired. His successor, Chas. A. Wickliffe, put the department into the ancient ruts again, and when Cave Johnson assumed the portfolio on the 5th of March, 1845, he found it an herculean task to reinstate the reform measures of Mr. Niles. During Wickliffe's administration the number of postoffices had increased by only 695, but Johnson saw in his term of office 4,237 offices added to the rolls, and witnessed other tokens of prosperity. Among the measures of Mr. Niles that he adopted was the postage-stamp idea. The President had converted his Postmaster-General from opposing the reduction of postage to a championship of the lowest-paying rates, and Johnson garnished his conversion with fathering the suggestion originated six years before. The matter took form as a bill before Congress, and, though it was quite the fashion to oppose any Cabinet suggestions, the act authorizing the issue of stamps of five and ten cent denominations was passed, and approved March 3, 1847. The date of the issue was appointed as July 1, but there was a delay in the contractor's work, and the time ran over a month.

On the 5th day of August, soon after the opening of the Postmaster-General's office for the day, an old gentleman called to see Mr. Johnson on business. The gentleman was the Hon. Henry Shaw, a New Yorker, who was not a stranger in Washington in those days, and whose home was in Lanesborough, Mass. He was a Berkshire County magnate, a politician of no mean qualifications, and the father of the well-known Henry Shaw, Jr., (Josh Billings). Twenty-three years before Mr. Shaw had recognized in a youth of seventeen—a tanner's boy who came to Lanesborough to study law—the germs of a great life. He assisted the lad in obtaining a library, and thus inaugurated a friendship that death could only sever. After twelve years of practice, in the fall of 1830, the young lawyer was elected to Congress from the eleventh Congressional District of Massachusetts. When George H. Briggs took his seat in December, 1831, he was determined to work, and he carried out his determination so well that his constitutents kept him in Congress twelve years. During that time he did long and laborious service as the Chairman of the Committee on Post-office and Post Roads, and was both in the Committee and in Mr. Niles's office, the advocate of the reforms above alluded to. In the Twenty-seventh Congress he crowded his series of reforms by inaugurating a movement for reducing the rates of postage to ten and five cents. The House passed the bill but the Senate did not reach it, and it failed of becoming a law until the following year. Mr. Briggs had passed meanwhile from Washingthn to Boston, and Mr. Shaw was full of admiration for his friend, whose seven years as Governor of Massachusetts were good years for the Bay State.

Mr. Johnson came into his office, accompanied by the printer of the new stamps, a few minutes after Mr. Shaw had arrived on that August morning. Sheets of stamps were laid before the Postmaster-General, who, after receipting for them, handed them to his visitor to inspect. Mr. Shaw returned them after a hasty glance, and then, drawing out his wallet, he counted out 15 cents, with which he purchased two of the stamps—the first two ever issued. The 5-cent stamp he kept as a curiosity, and the 10-cent stamp he presented to Governor Briggs as an appropriate gift.

The two denominations of stamps remained in use four years. In July, 1851, appeared a new series 1 and 3 cents, and soon after a subsequent issue of the additional denominations of 5, 10, 12, 24, 30 and 90 cents. In 1861 this series was called in by Montgomery Blair, Lincoln's Postmaster-General, and a new series issued. July 1, 1863, the first 2-cent stamp appeared, and was to accommodate local postage. April 1, 1865, newspaper stamps of 5, 10 and 25 cents were issued, but fell into early disuse. In March, 1869, J. A. J. Creswell, Grant's Postmaster-General, brought out a new series but they did not come into favor, and after two months were superseded by a series of the denominations of 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 10, 15, 30 and 90 cents. In 1873 the repeal of the franking privilege made necessary the departmental stamps of special design. These are as follows: Executive, 1, 2, 3, 6 and 10 cents; State, 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 10, 12, 15, 24, 30 and 90 cents, and $2, $5, $10 and $20; Treasury, War and Navy, each, 1, 2, 3, 6, 9, 10, 12, 15, 24, 30 and 90 cents; and Interior, Justice, and Postoffice each, the same excepting the 9-cent stamp. Since December 11, 1875, prepayment stamps for newspapers and periodicals from publication office have been issued. The denominations are 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 24, 36, 48, 60, 72, 84 and 90 cents, and $1.92, $3, $6, $9, $12, $24, $36, $48 and $60.

The aggregate issue of postage stamps in 1884 was 1,459,766,560; the newspaper and periodical stamps, 2,489,398, and of official stamps, 3,389,140.

The idea of stamped envelopes was also the thought of a Connecticut man. Eleven years after John M. Niles the Postoffice Department was taken by J. D. Hubbard, of the same State, and, at his suggestion, in June, 1853, the first issue of stamped envelopes began. The denominations were 3 and 6 cents, and on April 25, 1855, a 10-cent envelope was added. In October, 1860, a new series was issued, with additions of 1 and 4 cents in December, 1860. In wartime were issued envelopes denominated 1, 2, 3, 6, 9, 10, 12, 20, 24, 30 and 40 cents. On October 1, 1870, this series was changed in design. The first "printed-request envelopes" were issued in May, 1865; the first newspaper wrappers in October, 1861, and the first postal-cards in May, 1873.

It may be added that while it is worth remembering that the two Connecticut Postmaster Generals respectively originated the use of postage-stamps and stamped envelopes in America, another Connecticut man—Edward Allen, of Norwich—invented the envelope machine, which manufactures 30,000 stamped envelopes per day.—Hartford Times.

WEDDING DRESSES.

Late Styles Whose Richness and Costliness Are Unequaled.

Silver tinsel threads woven in white satin, in plumes or peacock feathers, thus adding greatly to its sheen and richness, is the fabric for the corsage and train of costly wedding dresses. Silver brocades are also shown in new striped effects and in flower patterns that may serve either as the petticoat front of white satin or faille francase dresses, or else for the basque and train. Uncut velvet, Bengaline, veloutine and all repped fabrics are used for the greater part of the bridal dress, but satin is still most favored. Lace is above all things the choice for the front of the skirt and its trimming; point lace is arranged in diagonal flounces on the front and side gores, but less costly laces are chosen of greater width, and are gathered slightly to fall in a single veil-like drapery across the entire front, or in an opening on one side, or else on the front width only, with flat pannels on each side. The novelty for this purpose is tulle embroidered with what is called "crystal-jet" beads. Small, transparent and catching light and color like drops of water with the sun shining on them, these fine beads are threaded and attached to the net in loops, tassels, drooping flowers, or other designs of pendants; the lower edge of this yard-wide lace is scalloped for the foot of the dress, and also for making the high Medicis collar which is mounted on wires so fine that they are scarcely seen in the transparent net. The flat beaded fronts are less used than formerly. Valenciennes lace flounces are in favor again, especially for very young bride's dresses. China crape is occasionally chosen for the bridal dress, and there are lengths of embroidered crape to be used as the laces just described for the front of the skirt; a Canton crape shawl was lately utilized in this way for the gathered fall across the entire front and sides of the dress, also for the revers and plastron on the waist; the fringes were cut off, and the clever bride worked heavy scallops in buttonhole stitches along the edges. White plush has also been introduced in stripes on the front of the repped silk skirt, as the vest and revers, with the remainder of the dress of plain repped silk.

The richest dresses of silver brocaded satin have a flowing round train eighty or ninety inches long, bordered with loops of satin set up on the outside; this is a flowing train, yet the tops of the breadth are arranged very bouffantly. The entire front of the skirt of plain satin is covered with point lace flounces set on diagonally, being mounted over satin pleating, and caught down with orange blossoms; a horseshoe of orange blossoms is on each side of the skirt. The basque has a high wire collar of lace, is often square on the front, with a shield-shaped vest below formed of orange blossoms; this basque is pointed in front, short on the sides, and is draped in the back. The elbow sleeves have a puff and cuffs of the lace held by orange buds. The veil of point lace has an aigrette of orange blossoms on one side, with jeweled brooches, amid its folds. High Medicis collars and Directoire revers of lace, of velvet, or plush are on other wedding toilletes, and the embroidered crape front is arranged in a very deep apron that has one square corner lapped on the right side on a panel of embroidery; a shawl of lace can be similarly arranged, with a wide lace scarf for the side panel. Tulle veils are preferred to those of lace for very young brides, and are fastened by the high aigrette of white blossoms, with erect feathery threads of white or silver high in the middle. Undressed white kid gloves are long enough to cover the arm below the elbow sleeves.—Harper's Bazar.

—The Japanese are among the politest people in the world. Here is an illustration: A Japanese gentleman called on a Washington lady. He was asked to remain till lunch time, and consented. They wanted him to go but didn't know how to get rid of him. He lingered till midnight, when, with elaborate, almost abject apologies for leaving, he took his departure. Next day, while the hostess was telling her friends how horribly she had been bored, her visitor was deploring her cruelty in not earlier in the day intimating to him that he might depart, Japanese etiquette requiring such signal of permission before he could go.—Washington Star.

—Some time ago, Joseph Arnold, a bank cashier, died and left the town of Derby, Ct., thirty shares of the stock of his bank. Attached to the gift was the condition that the town was not to touch the money until it amounted to $5,000,000. At the time of Mr. Arnold's death the shares were worth $5,000. Local mathematicians calculated that it would take 200 years for the money to accumulate to the amount of $5,000,000. It was too long to wait, and a town meeting has voted to give up all claims to the money, which now reverts to Cashier Arnold's heirs-at-law.—Hartford Post.

Very Poor Economy.

Some people make a business of cheating themselves, either by eating very mean and cheap food, or else by eating too small a quantity of good food. Either way is as bad policy as it would be to buy a coffin instead of a suit of clothes, just because the coffin would cost less. Poor diet means impovished blood; and that means misery. Brown's Iron Bitters enriches the blood, gives it the iron it needs, and tones up the whole system. Cures dyspepsia, indigestion, weakness, malaria, etc.

After a druggist has filled a perscription it belongs to him, and not the customer who brought it to his store.

The pain and misery suffered by those who are afflicted with dyspepsia are indescribable. The distress of the body is equalled or surpassed by the confusion and tortures of the mind, thus making its victims suffer double affliction. The relief which is given by Hood's Sarsaparilla has caused thousands to be thankful for this great medicine. It dispels the causes of dyspepsia, and tones up the digestive organs. Try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The most delicate stomach accepts it with relish. Price fifty cents, of Geo. Ferguson.

CATAARH—A NEW TREATMENT.

From the Montreal Star.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 2000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished he claims the Catarrh is practically cured and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The Application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.

A PLEA FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

In the course of a checkered and somewhat eventful career, and having plunged heedlessly into the vortex of the follies of youth and early manhood being thrown and forced into all classes of society associating with those of the highest culture and refinement, and others of the most depraved morals and debased habits, and being observant withal, I think you also reader, it would be overstepping the bounds of prudence to deprive some of the follies and sins to which many of us are addicted of their [illegible] and seeming innocence and [illegible] their ugly view in all their native deformity. If I am a coward, [illegible] and extreme, and have at times [illegible] it is proof positive that I have struck the wedge of obsolete to some purpose, and it may be the means whereby some may view themselves, their habits and surroundings in a far different and better light.

I [illegible] our village public schools. By the last return of count[illegible] there were [illegible] hundred scholars enrolled from [illegible] years to twenty years, a good number for so small a village, and [illegible] we wish our children to obtain an education. But that must not be [illegible] education without [illegible] culture receives the respect from those whose [illegible] are worthy and honorable [illegible] possess through life [illegible] a true and sincere [illegible] [illegible] there will be no blossoms nor fruit. Therefore if you be trained away with no moral and christian culture manhood will [illegible] grable and age miserable, and the chastisement hereafter a sorrowful [illegible]. But to resume. As soon as I am able to ascertain, our [illegible] about 300 vicious [illegible] from 10 to 20 years of age. What is the cause of this 219 non-attendants of our sabbath schools? Is it lukewarmness and lack of energy on the part of the leaders of our sabbath schools? Do the teachers visit the homes of the non-attendants and endeavor to ascertain the causes? Do they bring into full play all the moral persuasion in their power? You may [illegible] with rebuffs, but if so be you do [illegible] enough, try, try again and again. [illegible] dripping of water will wear away the hardest rock. Some houses you may visit you may receive for answer, I can not clothe my children as well as my neighbors, therefore I do not send them. I ask such, can they show me in the scriptures where Christ, during his sojourn on earth, preached salvation only to the richly attired proud, and self reliant, and left the poor crippled and ragged [illegible] to shift for themselves? No, ten thousand times, no! The poor crippled, ragged mendicant, [illegible] with the slime of the gutter, but within a broken spirit, a contrite heart and faith in his Saviour, is far nearer to him than the proud, self reliant spirit, though clothed in purple and fine linen. What did Christ, St. John's disciples? Go and tell John the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf are raised and the poor have the gospel preached unto them. I will give you another cause why our sabbath schools are not better attended and also our places of public worship. Ask your fathers, do you earn fair wages sufficient for the necessaries of life, do you as you go your way to and from your honest employment, enter that open and inviting door, do you assist that suave accommodating, and smooth tongued man at the glittering bedecked bar dealing out the accursed poison to the devotees of the soul and body destroying fiend, alcohol? Are you one of the many to assist him to clothe himself in broadcloth, and his wife and family in rich and costly silks and jewelry, and when your money is gone to kick you into the gutter, or hint that your company is a nuisance? I ask you in the name of Almighty God, to stop the leak or your barque is wrecked and engulfed in the quick sands of ruined manhood, premature death and a drunkard's grave. You may say, what has all such cant and bosh to do with church and Sunday School? Allow me to tell you the good honest and hard earned money that you are now laying on the shrine of your titular saint alcohol, give to your wife and mother of your children, tell her you wish her to clothe herself and them, so that she with yourself and children, will have no excuse for shame when you enter God's earthly tabernacle and attend the children's Sabbath School.

COM.

A New Cure for Malaria which is positive and certain.

There is no disease, which afflicts the human family, so prevalent as Malaria, and this terrible scourge of humanity has baffled the skill of physicians to a greater degree than all other diseases combined. It is a mysterious, invisible agent that deals death and distruction wherever it visits, and no section or part of the country, is free from it.

The only remedy that has ever been advertised to cure Malaria, is Dr. Henion's new discovery, called Dr. J. B. Henion's Sure Cure for Malaria; it is a positive and radical cure for all forms of Malaria and all the diseased conditions that are caused by Malaria; it will also cure any kind of pain; it is kept by all Druggists, is pleasant to take and only costs One Dollar a Bottle.

It is reported that one of our citizens was somewhat frightened Saturday night by meeting a man who claimed to be Palmer, of Tecumseh. Frank Darling started for the State of New York last Friday, where he intends to engage in selling scales.

Hines & Son have commenced the erection of a building to be used for a meat market, which they expect to have in running order in a few days. It will be one door south of J. E. Gibbs' grocery.

WHOLESALE GROCERY DEALERS.

MR. EDITOR.—An Article in the Detroit Commercial Advertiser reflects rather seriously upon the wholesale grocers, accusing them of double dealing. From this charge I would defend them. There has been, and there is now so called Farmers Wholesale Grocers, who go out among the farmers for the sale of groceries. That the goods are sold is beyond dispute, and that good prices are realized is beyond a doubt. This method of selling in the country originated with A. W. Palmer, of Detroit, who conceived the idea of wholesaling groceries, or making a pretense of doing so. Now let us glance for a moment at how it is done. Mr. Palmer buys his stock in Detroit from wholesale houses, and sells at retail. It is done in this way. Agents are sent out in the rural districts with orders to sell in $5 lots. Having proceeded to the farmer's house the conversation that occurs is similar to the following "Mr. Blank, I represent the Farmer's Wholesale Grocery of Detroit. This institution was established for the purpose of giving the farmer direct communication with prominent grocers." Having gained his listeners confidence by this discourse, the agent is permitted to show up his samples, which he proceeds to do in the following manner: "This Tea, a Black Formosa Oolong, retails over the counters of country stores at 90c. we wholesale to you for 55c a pound, a clean saving of 35c. a lb. This fine Japan Tea that retails everywhere for 60c, a lb. we sell you for 40c. saving you 20c. per lb. This fine Mocha and Java mixed, the best grown on the face of the green earth, retails in a regular way for 35c. per lb. we sell you the same brand wholesale for 25c. per lb." Now, to sum it all up, there is decided misrepresentation for the cold facts of the case are that the so called 90c. tea is in reality 55c the 60c. is in reality 40c. tea, while the Mocha and Java so called is a cheap Rio and Guatamala mixed. If the farmer can't get a pointer from the above explanation, he deserves to pay as much, if not more for his groceries, than he can obtain them at home from the men who have often proven friends in need.

ONE WHO KNOWS.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW for December may be called an historical number, both from it topics and its contributors. It opens with an article by Colonel Fred Grant, entitled "Hallack's Injustice to Grant." This article explains how Halleck so misrepresented General Grant, after the capture of Fort Donelson, that General McClellan authorized his arrest. It is an extraordinary revelation and is told almost exclusively in extracts from dispatches, many of which were suppressed.

Gov. Ireland of Texas describes the progress of that State.

"Motley and Monarch" is a prose poem on Lincoln, by Colonel Ingersoll. It is a marvelous bit of rhetoric.

"Rome and the Inquisitions" is a learned Catholic defence of the charge of cruelty against these ecclesiastical tribunals—outside of Spain.

Gen. Fry, in his "Acquaintance with Grant," describes the cadet life of the future "General of the Army," and vindicates Gen. Fitz-John Porter.

S. Dana Horton gives a rejoinder to the silver symposium of the November number.

Israel Green, the lieutenant who struck John Brown in the face with his saber after he was down, tells his version of the Harper's Ferry affair.

Senator Boutwell and General Rosecrans contribute two articles—on Johnson's plot and on Grant's mistakes, which are too important to discuss in a paragraph.

Mr. Rice, the editor, contributes the closing article on "A Disfranchised People," which, he claims, the citizens of Delaware are.

At 7 o'clock on Thursday evening Dec. 3, 1885, a large company of relatives and friends assembled at the house of Mrs. Anderson, of Macon, to witness the marriage of her son, Samuel J. Anderson, to Miss Maria J. Wallace. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Charles S. Dutton, Pastor of the Reformed church. The service ended which united two lives in holy wedlock, refreshments were served to the guests. The bride's dress was very becoming, being of brown cashmere, with front of brocaded velvet. On her bosom she wore a bouquet of pansies and white chrysanthemums. A large number of beautiful and useful presents filled a table in the corner. The young couple have before them the prospect of a useful and happy life.

FRANKLIN & TECUMSEH FARMER'S CLUB

Mr. W. S. Osborn entertained the Tecumseh and Franklin Farmer's Club, Dec. 2. There was a good attendance, considering that the night was dark and the roads rough.

The meeting was called to order with the President in the chair, and after some miscellaneous business, they proceeded to the literary part of the program, as follows.

Select Reading—Mrs. W. S. Osborn, "Is life worth living?"

Declamation—Frankey Osborn,—"The new suit."

Recitation—Ella Munger.

Recitation—Miss Lida Fisher,—"The Organ Builder."

By request Mrs. B. Horry read with good effect, Uncle Daniel's apparition and prayer.

The discussion of the question, Which is the most profitable, to churn the butter or sell the cream, led to a more general talk on butter making.

Mr. A. VanVaikenburg opened the question. He sets the milk in shallow pans and found that 2 quarts of cream (of a gauge as taken by creamery men) made 1½ lbs. of butter, that it did not pay to sell the cream, and that it paid to use butter color, as was the opinion of the most of the members of the club.

Mrs. W. J. Waldron sold the cream and found it made less work and brought more money.

Mr. Chas. Mathews, used the deep setting process. The cans 8 in. in diameter and 19 in. deep, set in a box arranged so that all the water that he pumped for his stock passed through it. The cans cost him $1 each, and uses 4 cans. The water is about 50°. He skims with a cone shaped dipper. Gets more butter with less work, and from 2 to 4c more per pound than he did with the pans.

The President thought that the tendency was to neglect the cans and not wash them often enough, (some think once or twice a week is sufficient); in his opinion they should be washed with hot water every day. Uses the champion creamery and found it cleaner, and that it was less work than the old pans with their accompaniment of millers, flies and rat-tails.

Mr. H. Wilson thought it a good plan to have a stamp or brand and each sell under that brand so that the customers might know whose butter they are using.

Mr. H. Hoag had used a butter mould or print and sold the butter to private families. Thought it payed. Did not use any butter color, but tried to feed the cows to obtain the color, but thought with other members of the club that it depended more on the cows than the feed.

Mr. W. S. Osborn thought, or at least said, that it did not pay to make butter, and that the more machinery we had the less money we could make, also that a cow would not make butter enough to pay for her self.

L. M. Waldron read some figures from other parties, one of which obtained 12 lbs. of butter from 9 gauges of cream, a gauge contains 106 cubic inches. At another time 8¾ lbs. from 6 gauges. They use the oval or boiler cans, 5½ by 16 and 19 deep, set the same as Mr. Mathews.

The general opinion was that it payed to use the deep setting process and to churn the butter.

After intermission the committee on program reported the following for the next meeting.

Song by the club.
Recitation—Thurman Wilson
Select Read.—Mrs. VanVaikenburg.
Music.
Recitation—Bessie Preston
Chip Basket—Lizzie Thompson
Essay—Mr. Sunger.
Question—How can poultry raising be made profitable. Discussion to be opened by Mr. H. Wilson.

The club then adjourned to meet with Mr. Andrew Wilson Jr. Dec. 16.

Its editorial pages are replete with well considered articles on practical subjects, readily understood by any reader, while its miscellaneous and news matter make it attractive to those interested in the industrial prosperity of our country, the whole forming a rich store of useful reading.

The publishers have announced that every person who sends one dollar, (the subscription price of the paper), will receive the Mechanical News for one year and an elegant book.

The book is a free gift to the subscriber, who is only required to send with his dollar, six two cent postage stamps for postage on the book.

The offer is most liberal, and every mechanic should send for a sample copy of the paper containing a full description of the valuable books, between which he is invited to make his choice as a premium. Address the Mechanical News, 110 Liberty St., New York. James Leffel & Co., publishers.

THE LAND OF SUNSHINE.

We are permitted to print the following letter from Lucile Berger to Mrs. A. S. Doty. After a brief discription of the trip from Cincinnati to Jacksonville, the writer proceeds.

At 12:30 and we are at Jacksonville, where we remain till 5 o'clock, then take the boat Plant for Aster, a distance of 145 miles up the St. John's river. The day is exceedingly warm, but notwithstanding we take a stroll through the city. The streets are narrow and all white sand with scarcely any faced or hard walks. Saw some good old mansions, covered with green trailing vines over portico and windows. Palmetto and magnolia trees, live oaks, evergreen covered with moss, orange trees loaded with their golden fruit roses and tropical plants by the hundred, making the air fragrant with sweet perfume. Surely we have passed from lands of snow to lands of sun where perpetual summer reigns. After taking in the city we return to the depot and go aboard the waiting steamer, and now we are out on deck with the cool refreshing breeze of the grand St. John's blowing about us, it is indeed refreshing after our long walk through the city. And now the plank is taken in, the bell rings, and we are steaming up the beautiful river. The sun is just sinking upon its imperial couch of gorgeous colors and beautiful beams of crimson and gold are reflected on the calm broad bosomed river—the scene is fine—beyond discription. The boat is crowded, on decks, in state rooms and parlor, on the stairs, everywhere, the captain has taken on 100 passengers more than the boat allows, and at the second landing many were left behind. We have passed the residence of Harriet Beecher Stowe. I don't wonder that she is inspired to write fine books, living on the lovely St. John's as she does. And now the moon appears accompanied by a brilliant train of stars. It is charming here on deck, but the supper bell rings and we go down with the multitude for refreshments. After which we return on deck and sit and muse on loved ones far away and long to have them with us. It is growing late, but still we linger and watch, until the crescent moon has trailed her silver mouth across the heavens and sank to sleep amid the golden stars. Then reluctantly we enter into rest. 3 o'clock, morning; we are two hours behind time. Are now at Astor, the boat is at anchor. We step out on the landing and the scene that meets my vision can never be erased from memory. I feel as if I had suddenly landed on some enchanted foreign shore. Overhanging the lovely St. John's river are massive live oaks ever green imbeded in solid banks of shells, and covered with grey Spanish moss trailing almost to the waters edge, and reflected of its surface. Numerous beds of floating lettuce are seen, and the 'weird' lights shining through a thin veil of mist completes the enchantment. In the distance, on an elevation, stands the hotel to which we hasten. Half way up we are met by Harry Dunn and delighted to see him. He came up from Sorrento a distance of 35 miles expressly to meet us. The sudden and unexpected meeting of Tecumseh friends bring us to earth again, and the unseemable accommodations we receive at the ill kept hotel, breaks the spell of enchantment. "'Tis ever thus from childhood's hour: I've seen my fondest hopes decay."

Friday, 8 o'clock A. M. The morning dawned bright and beautiful. Breakfast, and take the train for Eustos, where we arrive in due time. Find Bert with a hearty welcome and cheer, in waiting to convey us on to Sorrento, a distance of 8½ miles. Tho' somewhat fatigued we enjoyed the ride through open pine forests, near lakes and orange groves. Late in the day our party of fifteen relief the hotel of Dr. Thomas, a very pretty place, surrounded by nice flower gardens and orange grove near by, through which Dr. Thomas and wife showed me and gave me the pleasure of picking my first oranges. You can imagine I was delighted and somewhat flattered, being the only lady thus favored. After taking leave of our party, we hasten to our home where upon the vine clad porch we receive a warm and loving welcome, from sister Mary and Gertie, who, you may rest assured, we were very glad to see after traveling the distance of 1245 miles.

I like Sorrento very much indeed, although it is now in its infancy. I believe in 10, or even 5 years, it will be a beautiful and profitable place in which to dwell, at least to those who are fortunate enough to possess a home and orange grove. It is cozy and pleasant here. They have built a pretty rustic summer house and covered it with trailing moss and vines, also rustic chairs, in one of which I sit with my white dress on, and write you this long and I fear tiresome discription of my journey. The climate is perfectly delightful, sunshine and blue sky every day since I came, with a soft refreshing breeze. Ther. 82° in the shade to day, 105° in the sun. The moonlight nights are lovely here, just perfect—wish you were with us. Rest assured you are not forgotten in this Summer Land so far away.

Moscow is getting notorious. One of her time honored knights becomes dissatisfied with single blessedness and leads one of the fair ones to the altar with the usual "love, protect, and defend" declarations. The event occurred last week. The twain were formerly Levi Bennett and Sarah Coryell, aged 79 and 85 respectively. The "one flesh" is now tied up for better or worse, and we expect to see it toddle down life's sand hill as gracefully as the leaves fall in autumn.—Addison Courier.

HURRAH FOR OLD WINTER.

Hurrah for old Winter! Hurrah for the snow,
Hurrah for the sleigh and the cutter may they blow,
We'll laugh by the fire, yellow and warm,
And laugh at Jack Frost, who can do us no harm.

We'll eat mince pies, made of pumpkin and squash,
And laugh at the wind, blowing coldly and gash,
We'll feast upon turkey and chickens and pork,
And laugh at the cakes swimming in lakes of gravy.

We'll skate on the ice and we'll ride in the sleigh,
And laugh at the boys with the mud as we pass by,
And kiss them at parties and spare not the girls,
Till blushed by their pals for remaining so late.

We'll nestle up snugly in a big feather bed,
And pull heavy blankets up over our heads,
And let the storm howl and rages and roars,
And answer it back with a volley of snores.

Hurrah for the Winter! because we are young,
When old and rheumatic this tune will be sung,
Then bills from the doctor and salvman and plumber
Will make us hurrah very loud for the summer.

2,000 YEARS HENCE.

Chicago's Ruins Explored and Wonders Unearthed.

The Board of Trade "Restored"—Wall Advertisements of City Politics and Theatrical Matters—The Mysteries Surrounding So-Called "Base Ball."

A pensive poet away back in the nineteenth century, named Bryant, wrote that

> All that tread
> The Globe are but a handful to the tribes
> That slumber in its bosom.

We can form but little idea, even from the estimates at hand, of the numbers and characteristics of the human race in past ages. It is no more easy task to conjecture the number and importance of the buried cities which exist in every part of the earth. If we could but trace the history of the cities of our own country back to the date of their founding, and recall the names of the now unknown heroes, whose exploits made themselves and their cities alike famous, we would undoubtedly feel the same pride in the ruins of America which the intelligent Greek was wont to feel in the ruined greatness of his own, we are told, marvelous country. The Americans, however, have not been remarkable for their records, and we have but little to guide us in our study of the annals of the ages which have preceded our own. But this year of our Lord 2,886 has been very fruitful in scientific discoveries and Mother Earth has been forced to yield some of her secrets, and it would seem as though it had been reserved for the generation that is dying out to penetrate, and not in vain, the depths of enigmatical ruins, to disentomb from them the past, and to restore to it the real aspect that once it wore, along with a part of its lost chronology. Thanks to the acquisitions of modern science, for which progress the genius and the blood of America have helped to clear the way, thanks to the successful excavating by our savant amongst the ruins of our buried cities, and to their unhoped-for deciphering of the records, rich in detail, that have been unearthed, through which the Americans of twenty centuries ago seem to converse with the men of our own time, thanks to this, the historian can at length present to us testimony certain and reliable regarding them, and, although the idea of again securing the thread, a hundred times broken, of American tradition, must be once for all abandoned, we have it in our power at last to reconstruct the most brilliant part of it almost to perfection. The period that it covers flourished in times which natons the most jealous of their antiquity do not, in their authentic records, pretend to have attained.

The work of subterranean exploration which has been steadily going on in the buried ruins of Chicago for over a century has not yet enabled us to form any accurate notion of the nature and extent of the catastrophe, but it is clearly evident that the city was swallowed up in a few brief moments by a most phenomenal convulsion of nature. Of the discovery of the tomb of Chicago, there are various accounts. That which is the most credited relates to the sinking of a well, the bottom of which fell out, and upon examination revealed the inside of the massive white marble structure which has been unearthed and restored, and which bears the inscription "Board of Trade." Prof. Henry Schlemann, whose excavating efforts in Chicago have been so successful, is a lineal descendant of the famous Schlemann of the nineteenth century, who, two thousand years ago, did such a grand and noble work in Greece. But it is to the records of America that the intense excitement of the day is directed, and the news which has reached us of Prof. Schlemann's rich find in the ruins of Chicago would seem to indicate that the grandest and most valuable discovery of all had just been made. Chicago is undoubtedly the most wonderful of American antiquities, and no traveling can be disappointed who has any acquaintance with ancient history. The impression which it gives of the actual presence of an American city two thousand years ago is so vivid and intense that it requires but a small effort of the imagination to place yourself among the multitudes which once thronged the streets and theaters, and occupied its now voiceless chambers. The streets before you are generally paved; some are well worn, and others, one broad avenue in particular, in as good preservation as though in use the day before. The houses, many of them, extend in unbroken lines, and in nearly every instance the doors are firmly closed. One curious class of discoveries in Chicago consists of the advertisements upon the dead walls, which relate to city politics and theatrical affairs. Candidates had the blushing impudence to bespeak support for themselves from their tombs, and the play-houses announced in bright colors on huge posters the coming attractions, proving that up to the year 1885 the show printers had the edge on the press for theatrical advertising. All the observations which have been made from time to time, however, on the posters made among the ruins of Chicago are as naught when we consider the opportunity which is now given of the signature and study, by the great "not" just recovered by Prof. Schlemann. From our newspapers of to-day, we learn that the work which the professor has been following up for weeks of exploration and excavation in Chicago, that of investigating the position of the cornerstones among the ashes of the largest structures, recently unearthed in the ghostly ruins which lie to-day, which is nothing less than the discovery of numbers of the city papers under dates in September and October of the year 1886. They give long accounts of a most singular and curious game, which from the reports seemed to excite a goodly number of people to the highest pitch. In one place an allusion is made to the coming "battle of the giants," and the description is made that in the first game McCormick, who must have been a very celebrated man, will "pitch for the home team." What a field for operations in scientific research has opened before us! Let us find out something authentic in regard to the stature of these "giants"; let us ascertain what the features of this game of so-called "base-ball" were; let us grub the expressions "Anson's hot-in-it," "Worth's sky-scraper" and "Kelly's daisy-cutter," of the mystery which surrounds them. When we shall have been able to comprehend the meaning of "a rank decision by the umpire," the statement that "Dorgan was given a base on balls," the report that "Williamson flew out to Gerhardt," and the emphatic accusation that "Clarke took chances, and stole second," we shall, doubtless, have a clear insight to the peculiar customs and characteristics of the people who lived in Chicago in that ancient epoch, together with some understanding of their pastimes and principal occupations. The material now in the professor's hands will require years to exhaust by deliberate study and scholarly criticisms, for how long will it not take to master the significance of expressions like these: "Spalding's Salvationists followed amid tremendous enthusiasm," "Anson's infants have gained all the glory there is in the world," "New York's bandbearers have dropped both gold and glory," "the mascot stood on his head," "'Pat' let Gerhardt throw him out at first," "Gillespie hit four bases" (how that man must have been a "giant"), "O'Connor stole one base on Sunday" (this makes it clear that their moral natures were sadly blunted), "Kelly's home-run was received with a mighty yell," etc.

The puzzling quotations give but a faint idea of the bewildering mass of material Prof. Schlemann has secured among the ruins of Chicago, a city, which, judging by the report that "five thousand people were at and the diamond," must have been one of gigantic splendor and unequaled resources. We have reason to congratulate ourselves on the brilliant results of Prof. Schlemann's labor and upon the valuable addition he has made to the history of America. Time enough it may be years before we shall get at the precise meaning of the assertion that "in the pool-rooms men went mad," which sad condition of affairs, they tell us, was brought about by "betting on one or no run in the eighth inning." In another account it is stated that "the pool-room was suddenly emptied, and for a few minutes loose teeth and bloody noses were very plenty in the alley." All this occurred in connection with what was known as "base-ball," and the "meeting of the giants." From this we should judge that their "national game" was of a barbaric nature, and that the people were fond of violence. This idea is borne out by the report that "Kelly wanted to black Curry's eye for him." This game of "base-ball" must also have been to the taste of the masses, because the papers containing the reports of the game were "snatched from the stands," and we are told that they "sold like hot cakes." Hot cakes must have been plenty and cheap among that very peculiar people. It seems to us that men must have attained great eminence in that city by their connection with the "league," for we learn that exclamations like the following were made on the "grounds" and in the "pool rooms": That "McCormick is a fine deady," "the Harlem twirler is no slouch," "no flies now on the pennant for Anson," "what a lala Gore is," that "O'Rourke is a holy terror," "Williamson can down them all," and "Mutrie is a kicker."

We shall look with interest for further reports from Prof. Schlemann, and with great curiosity for his understanding of the contents of the papers discovered, for it must be conceded that the day these papers were printed must have been a red-letter one in the calendar, and that the accounts in them of the excessive strain of excitement endured by the people over the "base-ball game" will prove a study of intense interest.—Chicago Journal.

A Mustard Sponge.

In referring to sponge as a carrier of poultices, Dr. Richardson considers that it makes the best of mustard carriers. Mix the mustard in a basin with water until the mass is smooth and of even consistency. Then take the soft mass all up with a clean sponge, lay the sponge in the center of a white handkerchief, tie up the corners neatly, and apply the smooth, convex surface to the skin. This mustard sponge, warmed again by the fire and slightly moistened, can be applied three or four times, is good for several hours, and saves the trouble of making a new poultice during the weariness of night watching. The sponge can afterward easily be washed clean in warm water.—Scientific American.

ACTRESSES.

Their First Appearance Upon the Stage in England.

There seems no doubt that actresses did not perform on the stage till the Restoration, in the earliest years of which Pepys says for the first time he saw an actress upon the stage. Charles II must have brought the love from the Continent where women had long been employed instead of boys or youths in the representation of female characters. Congreve's "Craddles on Parnassus," Dublin, M. Lee says, saw a woman first appear on the stage as Viviana, Dryden, in his letter to Dudley Carleton, 1663, relates a scandal which played upon the public by a person who assumed that high price of tragedy, of actresses to Antwerp. Chapman, 1663, refers to the stage in Ireland. Mrs. Pepys says women did perform, as masques, and were played before royalty or at the assistance by persons of quality. Henry VIII. is said in the "Chronicles" of Hall, 1512, as having introduced masques into England and having taken a part in them himself. Edward III., however, is said to have given a precedent to the dramatic masque which flourished during the sixteenth century in England. Masques are said to have been taken from Italy. Henry VIII., with a Spanish wife who participated in them, may, however, have been adopting the manners of Spain and Portugal. Instances of women acting in plays and of royal personages taking the parts in them are afforded in Portugal by Gil Vicente, who in the beginning of the sixteenth century wrote dramas in the Castilian languages, which gave rise to the Spanish theater and anticipated Lope de Vega and Shakespeare nearly a century. It is related of him: "His plays were enacted at the Court of King Emmanuel, and the first of them was performed in 1504. They had great success, which increased during the reign of Emmanuel's successor, John III., who often played a part in them. It appears that Gil Vicente acted himself in his dramas, and it is certain that his daughter Paula (lady of honor to a royal Princess) was the first dramatic performer of her time in Portugal." Gil Vicente wrote autos or religious plays, comedies, tragi-comedies and farces. Being the only dramatic author of his time, he gained a European reputation, and Erasmus learned Portuguese in order to read his works. It appears, therefore, that in 1502 the public were not averse to seeing actresses on the stage, as in their disappointment they wreaked vengeance on the furniture of the theater, breaking to pieces what was in it. This was different from what happened nearly thirty years afterward, in 1629, when, as Mr. Colber relates, a French company were not permitted by the public to perform because they had actresses to fill women's parts.—Notes and Queries.

THE BANK BURGLAR.

A Class of Criminals That Will Disappear Entirely in the Near Future.

"There are many men in New York City who could formerly boast of a peculiar distinction, that are now designated in police circles as members of the 'Order of Lost Nerves,'" said Detective Billy Pinkerton yesterday. "They were once the flowers of the profession of crooks, but long terms of imprisonment took the sand all out of them."

"What is the real cause of the depression in the bank-burgling industry?"

"The decay of the bank burglar, chiefly, though the improvement in safes may have had some influence. Still, mechanical safe-guards would not be so effective as they seem to be if the bank robbers of to-day had the ingenuity of those of former times. But now you can count on your finger nails all the first-class burglars of that grade who are not dead, in prison for long terms, or nerveless because of long imprisonment. There are just as many burglars as ever, but the genius of the profession appears to have died out. There are no such men now as Scott and Dunlap, the Northampton bank robbers; Joe Howard, Hope and Brady, and Johnny Dobbs. Of these, Scott is dead, Dunlap is serving a long sentence in Massachusetts, and so is Dobbs; our people convicted Joe Howard in Coldwater, Mich.; Brady is doing seventeen years in New York; Hope is in San Quentin for an attempted robbery in San Francisco; big Frank McCoy is a race-track 'tout' and a 'bum' in New York, and so the record could be filled up for pages."

"Do you anticipate a revival of higher grades of burglary?"

"No; it will never occur. The rising generation of thieves is destitute of the intelligence necessary to make the exact plans and close calculations without which it is foolish to attempt to rob a bank. They are naturally and professionally of a grade too low for the business. Then they get no encouragement from the old-timers who are living out of prison. Such men, after serving long terms, have no heart for stealing. The best proof that bank burglars no longer exercise much influence on the fears of capitalists is to be found in the fact that our agency has been for some time arranging for the employment of its operatives in other fields. So far as the bank burglars are concerned, there is, practically, nothing for us to do, and as the race is rapidly becoming extinct this feature of our business promises to disappear entirely before long."—Chicago News.

THE WONDER

is becoming universal as to how such an immense sale could be created in Lowell for HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. But, my friend, if you could stand behind our counter a week and hear what those say who are using it, the reason would appear as clear as the noon-day sun. The real curative power of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA demonstrates itself in every case where our directions are faithfully regarded. We would that we might get before the people a fractional part of the confidence that is expressed to us every day in this medicine by those who have carefully tested (without prejudice) its effects upon the blood and through that upon the whole system, stimulating all the functions of the body to perform the duties nature requires of them. Try a bottle and satisfy yourself.

Cold Hands and Feet.

LOWELL, Feb. 3, 1879.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—About one year ago my daughter commenced taking your Sarsaparilla. At that time she had very little appetite; could take no long walks, and her face was badly broken out with a humor. She was low-spirited; troubled with cold hands and feet; her blood seemed to be poor, and she was in a condition which caused us great anxiety. After taking one bottle of your Sarsaparilla she began to improve; and she now has a good appetite and can take much longer walks. Her humor is nothing compared with what it was one year ago. She is in better spirits, is not troubled with cold hands and feet as previously. And I attribute this improvement in her condition largely to your Sarsaparilla. She has taken six bottles, and intends to continue its use. I was inclined to oppose the trial of it at first. I now have great faith in it as a blood purifier. Very truly yours,

JOSH BILLINGS.

A Few Anecdotes of the Great Humorist's Remarkable Self-Possession.

Before I left New York I called on Josh Billings with an album and modestly solicited his autograph. He took it on his knees, gave his mouth a comical twist and wrote:

"Thrice is he armed who hath his quarrel just."
—The Bard of Avon.

"And four times he who gets his blow in fust."
—J. Billings.

Josh was extremely fond of animals and had a cat in his house at Albany which he gravely addressed as "William." I suggested that that was a dignified name for puss, as cats were usually called "Tom" or "Tip," or a quick, short cognomen.

"But that's a special, swell, blue-blooded specimen of the feline race, I wish you to know," rejoined the humorist. "Recently, poor fellow, he has had fits and since then I call him Fitz-William."

When Rubinstein was over here he was presented to Josh, and the pianist was careful to impress the American with accounts of the nobility of his ancestors. "My family," said he loftily, "goes back to the time of the Crusaders. My researches in this direction enabled me to discover that one of my ancestors accompanied the Emperor Barbarossa." Josh smiled, and affecting to be immensely impressed, immediately remarked: "On the piano, of course."

A story is told of the humorist being thrown on one occasion among a batch of students in a country town near New Haven. He was tramping along with a rusty yellow dog, and entered the bar-room of a hotel for some refreshments. A group of the Yale lads chanced to be there on a frolic, and immediately interviewed Billings, whom they evidently mistook for a farmer. They inquired with affected interest after the health of his wife and children, and Josh, with counterfeited simplicity, gave them a graphic account of his family and farm.

"Of course you belong to the Church?" asked one of the boys.

"Yes, the Lord be praised, and my father and grandfather before me."

"Now, I suppose you would not tell a lie," said one of the students.

"Not for the world."

"What will you take for that dog!" pointing to Josh's cur, which was crouching beneath his chair.

"I won't take twenty dollars for that dog."

"Twenty dollars! Why, he's not worth twenty cents."

"I assure you I would not take twenty dollars for him."

"Come, my friend," said the student, who, with his companions, was bent on having some fun with the old man. "Now, you say you won't tell a lie for the world. Let me see if you will not do it for $20. I'll give you $20 for your dog."

"I'll not take it."

"You will not? Here! let me see if this will not tempt you to lie," added the student, producing a small bag of half dollars, which he built up into small piles on the table. Josh was sitting by the table with his hat in his hand, apparently unconcerned. "There," added the student, "there are twenty dollars, all in silver; I will give you that for the animal." Josh quietly raised his hat to the edge of the table, and, as quick as thought, scraped all the money into it, except one half dollar, and then exclaimed:

"I won't take your twenty dollars. Nineteen and a half is as much as that dog is worth; he is your property!"

A tremendous shout from his fellow-students clearly showed the would-be wag that he was completely sold, and that he need not look for sympathy from that quarter, so he good-naturedly acknowledged himself beaten.—Philadelphia Times.

COOL WEATHER STYLES.

Designs and Materials For Fashionable Wraps and Mantles.

This season's exhibit of outer garments shows a richness of material and garniture not seen before, and the short dress wraps find favor with all ladies of good taste. The shapes are not particularly new, but the few modifications, a slight change in the sleeves and the magnificent garnitures give them variety and elegance. A notable house in this city exhibits an immense number of elegant wraps, and not two alike. Ladies have become very fastidious in the matter; they do not want to appear at the theater, opera, reception or at church and see a duplicate of their mantle in the building. Manufacturers have come to understand this and take especial pains to vary the styles. The Parisian will select his material and order the garniture made, and if the match is not perfect he will not use the material at all.

The finer garments are cut short at the back and long pointed fronts in some cases, the points reaching nearly to the foot. A wrap may be trimmed all around with feather bands and have oxidized metal clasps and the lower points finished with fringe made of braid, chenille and jet or of rosary beads and drops covered with iridescent wire gauze. Those trimmed with fur or feather bands are the most sought for and the feather bands are more in favor than fur, as they are lighter and more appropriate to much of the material used. These feather bands are shown in great variety. Ordinary goods can be bought at $1.50 per yard and $8 is the price asked for the best. In buying this trimming ladies should be particular to notice how it is made. A style that is simply gummed upon cloth is very frail and will, if it becomes warm or damp, fall to pieces. The better goods has the feathers woven into the foundation and heat nor water will hurt it, and it will bear considerable hard usage. This refers to the Marabont trimmings.

A most attractive mantle is in brown heavy cord sicilienne and brown velvet. The short back and very long pointed fronts are of velvet, the sides and sleeves of sicilienne. The front is ornamented with rich passementerie medallions, and it is trimmed around with gray fox fur. It is an extremely stylish garment. Other wraps of this shape are brocaded with feather bands and rich fringes, and in some cases the lower ends are gathered or plaited in bell-pull fashion, surrounded with a very rich and elegant network and fringe of chenille, braid cord or jet or a combination of several materials. It is not necessary that this ornamentation should match the style of trimming on the remainder of the garment, it being often selected with much more richness.

A magnificent carriage wrap for a young lady is of fine seal plush. The sleeves are marked and outlined with elegant gold beaded passementerie, while the tabs in front are finished with rich beaded tassels. The collar and cuffs are formed with beaver fur. Very rich ornaments are placed on the small, puffed postillion, and the garment is lined throughout with gold colored quilted satin. Another elegant mantle of seal plush for a matron has the back and fronts of fine astrakhan, the whole bordered with Alaska sable, an excellent representative of Russian sable.

A very elegant and lady-like wrap is in brown faille cloth, hand embroidered, with wood beads and bordered with brown feather trimmings, chenille and wood bead fringe. This is lined with brown quilted satin, and, if worn with a brown costume, will form a most elegant finish. Another handsome brown cloth wrap is covered with braid embroidery and bordered with brown feather trimming. This would form a very distingue traveling wrap. The shape of these garments is all about the same. They are extremely stylish and elegant and the newest thing in the market.—Brooklyn Eagle.

FERTILITY.

Neglected Resources for Obtaining Luxuriant Crops.

To improve a farm that is rolling requires something mixed with the soil to hold it together to make a foundation for manures that may be applied and to keep it from washing, and for this business there is nothing better than rye; no other vegetable growth is better adapted to all soils. Sow in September, that it may get as good a fall growth as possible. In the spring, as soon as it shows sign of ripening, turn swine on and "hog it down." After the hogs have pretty well eaten all the grain turn the straw under; the remaining kernels will soon sprout and bring on another crop. The decomposing straw will give food to the young growing rye and keep the ground from washing. The next spring, after the rye is two or three feet high, turn it under and plant to corn. That fall put the corn and sow wheat and in early spring sow clover seed on the wheat; harrow first and then sow is best. While taking land through the rye process keep a lookout for manure.

Our stately forest proves that leaves are one of the most powerful fertilizers. Heap them in large piles in the woods, cover with loam; if loam be mixed all through the pile the better. Thus covered the gases are held. These leaves will be rich in plant food, when well rotted, but would be better composted with stable manure. Cover stable floors a foot deep in the fall while these piles are dry. They will absorb all the liquid from the stock. Use of economy in this way will give a surprising quantity and value of manure. Collect all bones, large and small, into a vessel for safe-keeping. When winter comes and you are burning sound wood, put in boxes or barrels a layer of ashes and a layer of bones, then another layer of ashes and then bones until the vessel is nearly full, then finish with ashes; put about twice as much ashes as bones. Keep the mass wet with soapsuds or chamber lye, but do not suffer it to freeze; the process will stop it you do. Through winter save a hopper of strong ashes.

When spring comes and the bones are not dissolved sufficiently put the bones and ashes into a large kettle filled with lye leached from the ashes in the hopper and boil them until the lye eats them up. Put this away in barrels until wanted; you can mix it with dry soil to make it better to handle. I have thus made a fertilizer that gives better satisfaction than commercial manure that cost three dollars per hundred pounds. Hen droppings well take care of is second only to guano. It should be composted or mixed with the leaf mold in some dry place, or it can be swept up every week and put in barrels and mixed with loam as used. All the above manures can be broadcasted and thoroughly mixed with the soil and crops planted, or be used in the hill, and you have not had to pay out one dollar money.

A beginner on poor land may have a small lot of the best of it to raise fruits and vegetables, to make a supply until the farm is improved up to make good crops. Have pigs in pens fed all the refuse from the table or garden, keep plenty of sod, chip dirt and road dust as absorbents; pigs will eat sod with seeming thanks. This will also make a fine lot of manure and give you cheap pork. When your clover is in its second year cut it when some heads are a little brown, for feed in the winter. This clover hay fed to stock (a calf or two, as many as you can get, if nothing else) and the manure carefully saved, I believe will help renovate land faster than to turn the clover under. But after the crop of clover is cut the fall growth should be turned under and the ground sowed to wheat. Turn the clover sod under some three or four weeks before sowing wheat. The clover thus turned under will furnish an abundance of rich food for the growing wheat. If any young calves have been fed through the winter they can be sold off in the spring or pastured until fall and sold for beeves.—Thomas D. Baird, in N. Y. Tribune.

—There is a dog at Lewisburg, N. Y., that acts as a post-boy. It knows when the train is due, runs to the railroad crossing, and as soon as the mail pouch is thrown from the cars grasps it and drags it to the Post-office. He will allow no person to molest the mail until it is delivered at the office.—Buffalo Express.

—A Georgia blacksmith is six feet ten inches tall, and he can hold a 120-pound anvil at arm's length, and break chains that a horse can not pull in two. He is said to be "much respected in the community in which he lives." We can believe it.—Lowell Courier.

PLATFORM ECHOES.

Living Truths for Head and Heart, by John B. Gough.

This work is wholly and entirely new, and is the crowning life work of its illustrious author. It has a clear and well-defined purpose which is best expressed in Mr. Gough's own words, taken from a chapter of this book—

"I like to interest if I can, and amuse if I can, but, above all, my earnest desire is to benefit. If I can say any word or utter a thought that will be a help or stimulus to any one in the great conflict of life, which I look on as a daily battle, and may be a daily victory, I am content."

In this book Mr. Gough presents great and living truths, and illustrates and enforces them by weaving into every chapter anecdote after anecdote, incident after incident, story after story, with marvelous power and effect. It is permeated with the spirit and motive which have controlled his public life, and is the greatest effort he has ever made to promote the cause of temperance and social purity. He is absolute master of pathos and humor.

Platform Echoes contains a complete history of Mr. Gough's life by Rev. Lyman Abbott, D. D. It also contains 227 magnificent engravings, making it the finest pictorial book of the time. It is sold exclusively by agents, and we want active canvassers—both men and women, everywhere, to whom very liberal terms will be given.

Thousands of people in all sections of our land have read Mr. Gough's previous books and been fascinated therewith. This is his crowning work and surpasses all his other efforts in the book making line.

We want one hundred first-class agents to canvass for this grand work. Hundreds of men and women now canvassing for it can testify to its unequalled merits as the fastest selling book of the times. It is not unusual for some of them to sell as many as twenty copies in a single day. It offers to agents, both men and women, whether experienced or not, the best chance of their lives to make money.

No other book combines such intense interest and great value with such irresistible attractions as this. It is in popularity, head and shoulders above every other book. Old agents, ministers, school-teachers, students, ladies, farmers, etc., are numbered among our successful workers.

S. C. Stacy, of Tecumseh, has the general agency for this work in the counties of Monroe, Washtenaw, Lenawee and Hillsdale. Address him at once for territory and terms.

Mistletoe for Kissing Purposes.

No English lady considers her home decorations for Christmas complete, until a little sprig of Mistletoe, no matter how small, is hung over one of the doors on the inside of the house. Upon this day, "if a gentleman discovers a lady standing under the Mistletoe, he has a right to kiss her."

If this ancient and honored custom becomes as popular in America as it has been for centuries in Europe, it will be largely due to the Emporia (Fla.) Gazette, which, by the way, is published in Volusia County, Florida, which is famous for its Summery Winters and Orange Groves; for this journal has prepared packages of Mistletoe (a parasite and a native of Florida) which it will send to any address upon receipt of five 2 cent stamps to cover postage, &c. The Gazette has published a "Florida Catechism," that gives full and accurate information upon all subjects of interest to tourists or settlers, which it will mail, to any applicant, with a sample copy of its paper, upon receipt of two 2 cent stamps.

Read our club list and then subscribe for the HERALD.

WASHINGTON LETTER

From our Regular Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4, 1885.

Ere this communication reaches you Congress will have convened. The Senate and House of Representatives will be called to order simultaneously. After the formal organization, the House will probably the Senate will open with a discussion of the rules.—The contest will be between those who want to make this a working session, and those who, it is alleged, would squander it in idleness and talk.

Many of the arrivals of congressmen say if any business is to be accomplished during the session, there must first be a revision of the rules. The popular plan is to take some of the power away from the committee on appropriations, by placing a part of their work in the hands of other committees.

It was a standing joke during the last session that the United States congress consisted of the Senate and Sam. Randall. Underneath the joke there was much deep felt jealousy of the fifteen members who compose Mr. Randall's potent committee. Any plan to curtail their prerogatives it is thought will meet with favor from the remaining three hundred and ten members of the House, who belong to the less important committees.

The Democratic majority in the House of Representatives has a useful if not a brilliant part to perform in national politics this session. It will occupy a peculiar position. The Senate being Republican by a small majority, the House will be without the power of positive legislation, while at the same time the responsibility will be great. It will be practically on its good behavior. It will be required to show to the country that it is not inclined to do anything radical and extreme and that it is ready to propose everything that is conservative and good.

Its first work probably will be to provide for a rational count of the Electoral votes and for an orderly succession to the Presidency in case of vacancy. After these matters are disposed of three questions of great importance will have to be dealt with,—the reform of the currency, the reform of the tariff, and the reform of the civil service. On the latter no affirmative legislation will be required beyond the passage of the necessary appropriation. But efforts will be made to prevent the appropriation, to repeal the law, and to cripple the system.

The question of a successor to the late Vice President Hendricks continues to be an absorbing topic here.—The caucus of Republican senators to be held at the capitol to-night will decide who it shall be. You will know the result of the caucus before this letter reaches you. Consequently it is useless to forecast its action. The Democrats would greatly prefer Senator Edmunds for presiding officer of the Senate, and look upon the selection of either Senators Logan or Sherman as a kind of menace.

Having completed his message, the President has begun upon the District of Columbia appointments. The Marshalship being first in order, the long struggle for that office has ended by Col. Wilson, a well known citizen of Washington, securing the coveted prize. As usual, the contestants were all left in the race. Mr. Wilson was not an applicant for office. The President summoned him to the White House, consulted with him for a short time and in about two hours issued his appointment. The compensation of the office is $6000 a year. District Democrats are delighted with the appointment of a District man. "The President has kept faith with us," they say, "and we are satisfied." Unlike his predecessors, the new appointee will be excused from social duties at the White House. He will be required to give his attention to the more weighty business of the office prescribed in the statutes. Some one else will make introductions at the Presidents' receptions, and be master of ceremonies at his State dinners.

As usual, just before the meeting of Congress, official department reports are coming out with quantities of information. The Postmaster General led off with a voluminous document. He tells that the revenues of the Postal Department are steadily falling off, while the expenditures are just as steadily increasing. Owing to large pension payments there was no reduction last month of the national debt. The surplus was used to pay debts to the soldiers instead of to the bondholders.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

For December opens with a very timely article called "Another Bit of Turkey." It has no reference to Thanksgiving, but to the annexation of Roumelia by the the Prince of Bulgaria. This unexpected seizure of another bit of Turkey, and the events that have followed, required explanations. In this article Mr. Oscanyan formerly Turkish Consul-general thoroughly versed in the system of Oriental rule, gives a clear view of the Province and its people, as wall as Bulgaria. "The Shakers of Niskayuna" is a sketch by a lady of that curious community accompanied by a fine series of illustrations, and other miscellany, make the number from every point of view extremely attractive. Published by Mrs. FRANK LESLIE, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York city, at 25 cents a number, or $3,00 a year, postpaid.

The success of "Science," the scientific weekly for general readers, and the increasing quantity of scientific news published by the metropolitan dailies, are indications of the increasing interest of scientific matter to the country at large. When the interest of newspaper readers has once been fairly fixed, we shall no doubt have a scientific daily, perhaps a "Daily Science." Any reader desiring to try "Science," the new scientific weekly, will be entitled to the four issues of December on receipt of twenty-five cents by the publishers, 743 Broadway, New York.

The Thanksgiving number of GOOD HOUSEKEEPING had so large a demand and sale, and was so well received generally, that we are induced to issue a Christmas number, to be prepared expressly for the days of Christmastide. The next number, then, which will be on sale and ready for mailing, on Saturday, December 19th, will be a Christmas number and be filled to the brim, with some of the choicest literary Christmas Plumbs, the Bill of Fare for which we may safely promise, will be unusually rich and appetizing. Single copies, 10 cents. Clark W. Bryan & Co., publishers, Holyoke, Mass.

Malaria Produces Spotted Fever and Cerebro Spinal Meningitis.

The two most malignant diseases, which afflict humanity are Spotted Fever and Cerebro Spinal Meningitis. For many years physicians were unable to determine the cause of these difficulties. The latest scientific investigations demonstrate the fact that they are produced by Malaria, and all other malignant forms of disease can be traced to malarial blood poison as the cause. The greatest blessing to humanity comes in the form of a medicine called Dr. J. C. Henion's Sure Cure for Malaria. It is a new discovery by Dr. Henion, and he has placed it on the market at One Dollar a Bottle. It is not advertised as a cure all, but simply as a cure for Malaria, and nothing else. All druggists keep it.

CLINTON CHRONICLES.

B. O. Randall visited Detroit to-day, on business.

Jas. Bradner and daughter Maude, departed on the morning train for a visit in the City of Cleveland.

It happened last Thursday night; it is a nice little start for a crinoline inspector, and we are obliged to refer you to Charley Kayser, that you may know who is the happiest man in Clinton.

J. C. Burroughs went to the county seat, to day, we understand, to meet a second party who is talking business with him as regards the celebrated hoof ointment.

Kos. Davis went down to have a chat with O. B. DeWolf to-day. Look out, the holidays are nearing.

"Minn" Rose, who has been sick for some time, returned to his home in this village a short time since, and his many friends and relatives will regret to learn that his recovery is doubtful.

Do not forget the baby show at the fair next Wednesday afternoon, from 2 until 4:30 o'clock. A silver cup will be given to the one receiving the most votes and a silver knife, fork and spoon to the one receiving the next highest number.

The Clinton cider mill has manufactured this season, four thousand barrels of the juice termed by Dr. Reynolds "the devil's kindling-wood." It would require a train of forty cars to haul the juice.—Adrian Record.

Mrs. Loren VanAntwerp and children, and Mrs. Kennedy, of Tecumseh, have been visiting at Frank McClure's. Mrs. V. is now the guest of the Severance sisters, in Franklin.

The meeting of the Literary Society at the High School last Friday evening, was well patronized, and the question Resolved, "That skating rinks are detrimental to the best interests of society," was very cleverly disposed of in the affirmative. Managers will please make a note, and prepare to put out the lights.

The young men of this place and surrounding country have entered a compact, for the purpose of giving a series of club dances at town hall and the first party will take place next Friday evening. The music will be furnished by Eugene Smith and wife, of Hillsdale, and is sure to be a success as every body knows who has "tripped the light fantastic" in days gone by, after the same.

The weather was rather a "deadener" on quite a number of the treats in store for our citizens of late, and the temperance meeting at town hall, addressed by Rev. E. B. Sutton, was no exception. Mr. S. is a very able, clear, and interesting speaker, and we had hoped to have seen him enjoy a crowded house at the meeting Sunday afternoon, and we think, had the weather been fair our hope would have been realized.

D. A. Turrell, of Somerset, was in the village last Saturday, and expected to meet Mrs. T. here, who was visiting C. Lamb and family, at Blissfield, but the weather was so unpropitious, that he merely whispered over to Blissfield and had her return by railroad thinking that would be preferable to a drive overland of so many miles in such a storm. Mr. T. has been a resident of Hillsdale county for many years, and his father at one time owned a large tract of land in the neighborhood of Gambleville.

Ed. Seamark visited Toledo on business Saturday, and stayed over Sunday there. He went to see about a cornice for that new store on Chicago st., which is nearly completed.

Miss Nora Martin, of Tecumseh, who has been in the employ of Miss Edwards, of Manchester, Milliner, stopped off to shake hands and have a chat with her Clinton friends last Saturday. She was on her way home to fill a position offered her in the Novelty store until after the holida trade. She has occupied this position previously, and the customers of that establishment will be glad to step in and meet her again.

Polly June, who resided so long at Wm. Rogers and family of this place and was taken home so low from protracted illness, at last accounts was gradually recovering.

John Rix, of Dowagiac, is the guest of his uncle, Dan. Davis and family, this week.

Wm. Rogers made a large shipment of poultry to the Tecumseh buyers Tuesday and Wednesday. Will. is busy among the feathery tribe and they coming and going.

S. C. Stacy, of the Herald, was in town interviewing his many friends, the first of the week.

Mrs. Joseph Kies paid a visit to Tecumseh relatives last Thursday.

Wm. Rogers paid Tecumseh friends a hurried visit Monday.

Leb. Pomeroy is rather indisposed from the effects of a bad cold, and Doc. is hardly himself because of a sort of neuralgia which he declares makes those front teeth dance, and we dont like to dispute it. We have seen there!

Dr. R. B. House, of Tecumseh, came up to Clinton Wednesday noon to hold a consultation with Dr. Cameron over the serious illness of Mrs. Sam'l Larzelere.

Will. Searles telephone operator and Harry Stevens, of Tecumseh, were in town yesterday, for the purpose of repairing the line. The heavy winds of late had caused a cross near this village.

Bell. Mills returned from a trip to Buffalo last Saturday and he reports the sleighing fine in that part of the country.

Hattie Stanclift, who has been living with E. Eddy, in Franklin, the past summer, has returned to her home in this village.

James Aten, deputy sheriff, and Henry Stevens, of Tecumseh, were in town yesterday. Your informant did not learn whether they were going to "Podunk" to look for Aaron Palmer, or not.

Miss Anna Cutting received a slight injury and escaped a very serious one, yesterday. She was crossing the yard with a friend somewhat hurriedly, when she came in contact with the clothes line and she missed her footing and fell, striking her head upon the ice underneath. It was some moments before she was able to realize what had happened.

The first quarterly meeting of the present year at the M. E. Church, will occur on Saturday and Sunday next. There will be services on Saturday afternoon and Sunday evening, and the new presiding elder of the district will discourse on both occasions. It is hoped as many as can do so will turn out Saturday afternoon and greet him with a full house. All are welcome. The Lords Supper will be administered on Sunday evening.

The praise service at the M. E. Church last Sunday evening, was rather thinly attended, the weather being so stormy as to deter many from participating, but those who were there were not disappointed, for it was an enjoyable occasion, and the small gathering turned to their homes profited thereby.

George H. Miles and family visited with George's cousin H. Power and family, of Addison, the first of the week.

The knitters in the Local office, are kept busy supplying the demand for comfortable socks and mittens. This weather calls very emphatically for woolen wear for both hands and feet.

The pop corn and candy social given by the Baptist society, at the residence of deacon Downs, on Tuesday evening, was a success in every particular notwithstanding a storm of wind and rain that prevailed. There was a large gathering for such a night, and the treasurer smiled upon all present, as they enjoyed the social time for which compensation had been made and the contents of the treasury swelled.

This weather ought to satisfy any person who is in favor of changes, for the varigated tints of this week, thus far, have given us a taste of four below and from that up to the thirties.

John Mason, the gentlemanly district manager of the Michigan Bell Telephone, was in town Tuesday on his way northward on business pertaining to this line. He stopped just long enough to shake hands and pass the time of day.

The ladies of St. John's Episcopal Church are making arrangements to outdo all former efforts, at the coming fair, which is take place next Wednesday, Dec. 16, at town hall, and in addition to the usual program, offer premiums for the babies receiving the first and second largest number of votes. Bring your little ones under two years old and let them try their luck.

Old Boreas has produced a change in milk venders and Tommy is relieving Willie in those duties, as the lad thinks July weather with ice in the wagon, is preferable to December with its ice and snow surroundings generally.

A Study of Husbands.

BY A WOMAN FOR WOMEN, BUT MEN MAY READ IT WITH PROFIT.

We hear much about the art of winning a husband. Let us take a step further and make a study out of keeping a husband. If he is worth winning he is worth keeping.

This is a wicked world, and man is dreadfully mortal. Let us take him just as he is, not as he ought to be. In the first place, he is very weak. The wife must spend the first two years in discovering all these weaknesses, count them on her fingers, and learn them by heart. The fingers of both hands will not be too many. Then let her study up these weaknesses, with a mesh for every one, and the secret is hers

Is he fond of a good dinner? Let her tighten the mesh around him with fragrant coffee, light bread and good things generally, and reach his heart through his stomach. Is he fond of flattery about his looks? Let her study the dictionary for sweet words, if her supply gives out. Does he like to hear her talk about his brilliant intellect? Let her pore over the encyclopædia to give variety to the depth of her admiration. Flattery is a good thing to study up at all hazards, in all its delicate shades, but it must be skillfully done. The harpy who may try to coax him away will not do it absurdly. Is he fond of beauty? Here's the rub—let her be bright and tidy; that is half the victory. Next, let her bang her hair metaphorically and keep up with the times. A husband who sees his wife look like other people is not going to consider her "broken down."

Though it is a common sneer that a woman has admitted that her sex consider more, in marrying, the tastes of her friends than her own, yet it must be considered ludicrous that a man looks at his wife with the same eyes that other people do. Is he fond of literary matters? Listen to him with wide open eyes when he talks of them. A man doesn't so much care for a literary wife if only she will be literary enough to appreciate him. If she have literary inclinations let her keep them to herself. Men love to be big and great to their wives. That's the reason why a helpless little woman can marry three times to a sensible, self-reliant woman's none. Cultivate helplessness. Is he curious? Oh, then you have a treasure; you can always keep him if you have a secret and only keep it carefully.

Is he jealous? Then, woman, this is not for you; cease torturing that fretted heart which wants you for his own, and teach him confidence. Is he ugly in his temper, and faultfinding? Give him a dose of his own medicine, skillfully done. Is he deceitful? Pity him for his weakness, treat him as one who is born with a physical defect, but put your wits to work—it is a bad case. It is well not to be too tame. Men do not waste their powder and shot on hens and barnyard fowls; they like the pleasure of pursuing wild game—quail and grouse and deer. A quail is a good model for a wife—neat and trim, with a pretty, swift way about it, and just a little capricious. Never let yourself become an old story; be just a little uncertain.

Another important fact is, don't be too good; it hurts his feelings and becomes monotonous. Cultivate a pleasant voice, so that this very mortal man may have his conscience prick him when he is in jeopardy; its pleasant ring will haunt him much more than would a shrill one. It is hard to do all this, besides taking care of the babies and looking after vexatious household cares, and smiling when he comes home, but it seems necessary. "To be born a woman is to be born a martyr," says a husband who for ten years has watched in amazement his wife treading the winepress of her existence. It is a pitiful sight to some men.

But if the wife does not make a study of these things, the harpy will, to steal away the honor from his silver hairs when he is full of years and the father of sons and daughters. At the same time, gude-wife, keep from trying any of these things on any mortal man but your own. These rules are only evolved in order to "keep a husband." The poor, weak creature would rather be good than bad, and it is woman's duty to hold him by every means in her power.—The Argonaut.

A Rare Talent.

The faculty of drawing out of persons with whom one is conversing the best there is in them—brighter things even than they suppose themselves capable of—is the rare gift with which Nature has endowed some women. George Eliot was a most charming person in conversation, though she was a women of few words, because of her intuitive insight into the thoughts of others. A few words would put her in possession, not of what they said, but of what they would fain have said, and she would so improve upon it that ordinary people went away charmed with her who had made them for once at least feel themselves to be wise. Long afterward, perhaps, she would call to their remembrance the wise or witty things which they could hardly believe themselves to have said, and which they assuredly never would have said but for her quickening influence.

A distinguished scholar and writer recently said: "I flounder in a sea of scraps." In these days, when the papers contain so many fine sentiments, beautiful descriptions, touching incidents, items of importance, and matters of permanent interest, culled from all departments of life, there is scarcely a day in which something does not strike the eye which the reader wishes to preserve, in order to remember and perhaps to use. One of the first things a bright boy or girl should make is a scrap-book of things which interest most. If you have no book, put your selections in different envelopes, according to subjects. The newspaper is a circulating library, with little of everything in it, and a little for everybody. Make sure of your part of it as you read.

It is proposed to use stiff canvas stretchers in place of the ordinary berths in sleeping cars. They are comfortable, and can be so cleverly stowed away during the day that one would think himself in an ordinary drawing-room car. The canal-packet men knew this fifty years ago.

PARIS SEWERS.

Interesting Description of the Most Perfect Sewage System in the World.

The sewer we first entered is about fourteen feet high and sixteen feet wide. The masonry appears to be of the most substantial kind and every care is taken to keep these sewers in the cleanest possible condition. They look like underground railways or like the tunnels of any surface railroad passing through mountains. Arched overhead there is a flat projection at each side, and between these two projections there is a trench five feet deep and four feet wide. To-day the trench was nearly full of water. The little cars for tourists span this trench, and the men who push them run along the ledges at each side, which are about three feet wide. Overhead is an iron pipe about three feet in diameter, in which runs filtered water for drinking purposes, and another smaller pipe filled with unfiltered water for street cleaning and general use. It was cheerful information which one of the men gave us, that should either of these pipes happen to burst while we were in the sewers it would be useless to try to escape, as the mere pressure of air within the pipes was so tremendous that it would kill us all immediately. "But there is no danger," he said, the iron is nearly three inches thick. They will not burst." Upon the top of the sewers are all the telegraph and telephone wires of Paris, and the streets, therefore, are not disfigured with poles and wires. These wires are completely insulated so that even though when in heavy rains, or when the sewers are flushed for cleansing, they may be touched by the water, the electric current is not affected in the least. After a ride of about a mile on these little cars we reached a place where we were changed from cars to boats. These boats are about about four feet wide and twenty feet long, and are pulled along with ropes by men who run along the narrow ledges at each side. Here, in addition to the lights on the boats, there are lights attached to the roof of the sewers. Yet as we looked ahead to the long dark tunnel and saw the boats silently speeding along with their cargoes of humanity, the weariness of the scene reminded one of the mythological Charon and the river Styx, or of Satan and the lost souls, as represented in Michael Angelo's picture of the Last Judgment.

There has been much written about the pleasantness of this trip and its entire freedom from noisome odors, but while as a great piece of engineering it surpasses even the under-ground works of ancient Rome, and is, therefore, wonderfully interesting, it is by no means a wholesome excursion, for after having been in the sewers only half an hour the entire party complained of nausea, and other symptoms of malaria, and my head still rings with the heavy doses of quinine which I have found necessary to counteract the effects of the sewer gas. There are nearly one hundred and fifty miles of these sewers now in Paris, most of which have been built since 1852. It is stated that the sewer system has reduced the death rate of Paris from thirty-six per one thousand inhabitants to twenty-five per one thousand, and Paris is now the healthiest capital on the continent.—*Paris Cor. RUBBER ADULTERATIONS.

Hurtful and Poisonous Substances Employed by Rubber Goods Manufacturers.

Rubber is at present largely adulterated so as to make it cheaper. The overshoes and boots made of this material are adulterated with finely-ground burned potter's clay, of which it can stand as much as 65 per cent. without losing its fitness for the purpose. The adulteration is harmless, only the material is not so strong, and the shoes or boots, instead of lasting several seasons, as the old-fashioned little non-adulterated material, scarcely last one season, as they tear very easily and holes very soon wear in them. While the pure rubber is stronger than the best leather, the adulterated rubber is less strong than the worst leather. Rubber hose and sheet rubber are usually adulterated with soapstone. This gives a lighter color to the material, while the burnt-clay adulteration leaves it dark-colored which is preferred for shoes. But some adulterations are hurtful, being poisonous in their nature. Such is the adulteration with zinc-white, which makes the rubber very light-colored, and is used in the rubber for nursing-bottles and children's toys. The effects of zinc poisoning on the system are scarcely less alarming than lead poisoning. Some time ago, says the Manufacturer and Builder, a little child in Pennsylvania died from chewing a paper collar, which, like many paper collars, was prepared with zinc-white; and cases are now on record where children have become sick from keeping rubber toys in their mouths. So many cases of zinc poisoning from the white nipples of nursing-bottles have already occurred, that the use of zinc in them has been mostly abandoned. These rubber nipples, or dolls, when laid in vinegar, become covered with an incrustation of zinc acetate. In one case, in 0.73 gram of a doll 0.45 gram of zinc oxide was found (over 60 per cent.) In subjecting such rubber objects to a red heat, 62 per cent. of ashes remained, while the ashes were yellow while hot and became white on cooling, which is the characteristic behavior of zinc oxide, called zinc-white. In another case, in a doll warranted harmless, 58 per cent. of ashes was obtained, mostly all zinc oxide. Several chemical journals are now calling attention to these facts, and it is to be hoped that it will effect an amelioration in the consciences of the manufacturers.—Boston Journal of Commerce.

—It is said that the first restrictive liquor law ever passed in this country was enacted in a little town in Rhode Island and read as follows: "Every saloon keeper who sells more than one gallon of liquor to a minor shall be fined one dollar and costs." The first temperance pledge remembered in circulation in New England was thus worded: "I solemnly swear to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors on all occasions except on training days, wedding days, banquets, and other great occasions."—N. Y. Sun.

SIBERIA.

Its Manufacturing Industries and Commercial Importance.

In the region of the Amoor, the industries are of very small extent, chiefly on account of lack of means of transportation. The only possible communication at present is upon the rivers, and is completely closed during a great part of the year, when the rivers are impassable for both boats and sledges. This is unfortunate, for on the borders of this immense territory, lie important industrial interests.

At the sources of the tributaries of the Amoor are gold mines. Kamschatka and the neighboring islands produce valuable furs; the island of Saghalin has rich and excellent coal deposits. Moreover, in the southern part, in the so-called Usuri region, are rich timber-lands and some land even capable of cultivation. The pursuit of these industries, with the fisheries and coal mines, would make this Usuri region a valuable source of revenue at present, however, they are very slightly developed, and that mostly by Americans and Chinese, rather than by Russians. The latter, however, are making strenuous exertions to colonize the territory, and thus avail themselves of its resources.

The industries of the two western provinces, Tobolsk and Tomsk, are somewhat farther advanced; these two provinces contain over eighty per cent. of all the manufactories of Siberia. According to the official reports there are 2,300 of these, of which 1,460 are in Tobolsk and 660 in Tomsk. In all 12,500 hands are employed, and 14,000,000 roubles value produced annually. The most important class of manufactures is that which uses raw animal materials—dyeing and tallow rendering establishments, etc. The class next in importance includes the distilleries, breweries and flour mills. Besides these there are numerous soap, candle and glue factories, carriage factories, rope walks, felt-boot making establishments, etc. These latter can scarcely be called factories, but are rather of the nature of small work-shops. Except the mines and the smelting works closely connected with them, there is very little manufacture of mineral products in Siberia. There is one exception in the case of considerable glass works, which produce 200,000 roubles worth annually. There are also small potteries and brick kilns. The only textile manufacturing worthy of notice is done in a single establishment in Tjumen, which produces annually 200,000 roubles' worth of army cloth. The needs of the people in this line are almost entirely supplied by household manufactures. Many knit and woven woolen articles prepared in this way find a market even in European Russia.

In all the Siberian manufactures there is almost no national division of labor or management of capital. The same person is often both capitalist and laborer, and the production of the raw material goes hand in hand with the manufactures. The manufactories are distributed here and there about the country, where the raw material is to be had to the best advantage, for transportation is difficult and costly.

Many products, even those which have a wide demand, produce a bad impression on account of their clumsiness and tasteless execution. The low standard of living and education among the peasants, who are the principal customers, is the main cause of this. For instance, in a town of Tobolsk are produced coarse, clumsy muskets with flint locks, which, nevertheless, find a ready sale at a good price, even as far as East Siberia and Amoor.

In general, however, manufacturing has taken many steps in advance in Siberia within the last fifteen years. In many places machinery has taken the place of hand labor, better processes in tanning, dyeing, etc., have been introduced, and a general improvement is noticeable in the quality of all the productions. With better means of transportation and an infusion of European enterprise, Siberia will yet contribute an important share to the resources of the world.—Science.

ALL HASH TO HIM.

An Ingenious Westerner Who Believed in Calling Things by Their Right Names.

The daughter of a Boston merchant of great wealth, wide mercantile connections and boundless hospitality was lately married. The Western agent of the merchant happened to be in town, and, as the proud father was inviting about everybody to his daughter's wedding, he invited the Westerner, too.

The Westerner came. He was uneasy, and shifted about from place to place in the house as if he were hunting for spots that fitted him better than those he had been in. He put his hands nonchalantly on things and took them off again suddenly, as if he found them hot, and grinned familiarly at people he had never seen before, and then suddenly drew his features back with a ghastly solemnity. It seemed to be an occasion of great and overwhelming novelty to him.

When the refreshments came around he was inclined to fight shy of pretty nearly everything. It was as if he proposed to take on a little Boston formality, now that he was in Boston, and require an introduction to every dish. His host saw that he wasn't eating much, and came around to see about it.

"Why, you aren't eating anything, Mr. West," said he. "Can I help you to something?"

"No, I thank you," said the Westerner, "I ain't very hungry to-night. I reckon I've eat enough."

Just then a waiter came along with some croquettes.

"Mr. West, take one of these croquettes; I think you'll like them; take one, take one."

The Westerner took one. He punched it with his fork, laid it open a bit, and examined it critically. Then he tasted it and exclaimed:

"Gosh! Hash!"—Boston Record.

—Prosecuting Attorney to prisoner—What provocation, Mr. Smith, had you for shooting the deceased? Prisoner—He called me Mr. Smith instead of calling me Colonel Smith. That's why. During the subsequent proceedings Mr. Smith was referred to as General Smith.—Texas Siftings.

A BIRD STUDY.

The Disgust Evidenced by a Mocking-Bird after a Fight with a Hand-Glass.

The mocking-bird's emotions were so intense and so originally displayed that he was a constant source of interest. A hand-glass lying face up gave opportunity for an amusing exhibition one day. Leaning over it, he puffed out every feather, opened his mouth, and tried the glass with his beak at every point. Meeting no satisfaction, he turned to leave it, but first peeped slyly over the edge to see if the stranger were still there, no doubt unable to get over his surprise at seeing a bird in that position and ready to meet his bill at every point. The same glass standing up brought out a different demonstration. He stood in front of it and swelled himself out, while the feathers of the shoulders and breast were erected. Then he opened his mouth wide and attacked the reflection, but was astonished to meet the glass. He touched the bill of his double with his own, and moved all the way to the bottom of the glass, not taking it away, but apparently trying to seize the one which opposed his. He lowered his head as though to take hold of the enemy's foot, then pulled himself up as straight as a soldier, wings and tail constantly jerking with excitement. After indulging for some time in these proceedings, he dodged around behind the glass, plainly expecting to pounce upon his opponent, and surprised not to do so. Several times he drew himself up, swelled out his breast, and blustered before the glass. Once he flew up with the reflection in the manner of a quarrelsome cock, and upon reaching the top of the glass naturally went over and landed behind, with an enemy in sight. Upon this he stared a moment, as if dazed, then shook himself out, and flew away in evident disgust.

The deliberate, leisurely dressing of plumage with which many birds pass away the dull hours in as occupation in which the mocking-bird never had time to indulge. He was a bird of affairs; he had too much on his mind for loitering. A few, sudden, thorough shakes, a rapid snatching of the wing and tail feathers through the beak, or, after a bath, a violent beating the air with both wings while holding tightly to the perch with his feet, sufficed for his toilet. Notwithstanding his apparent carelessness, his plumage was soft and exquisite in texture, and when wet the downy breast feathers matted together and hung in locks, like hair. Through a common magnifying-glass each tiny barbule was seen to be ringed with gray and silvery white, so finely that the rings could hardly be seen.—Olive Thorne Miller, in Atlantic.

GREAT SALT LAKE.

The Shrunken Remnant of a Great Fresh Water Lake System.

Great Salt Lake is in fact not a branch of the sea at all, but a mere shrunken remnant of a very large fresh water lake system, like that of the still existing St. Lawrence chain. Once upon a time, American geologists say, a huge sheet of water, for which they have even invented a definite name, Lake Bonneville, occupied a far larger valley among the outliers of the Rocky Mountains, measuring three hundred miles in one direction by one hundred and eighty miles in the other. Beside this primitive Superior lay a great second sheet—an early Huron—(Lake Lahontan the geologists call it) almost as big and equally of fresh water. By and by—the precise dates are necessarily indefinite—some change in the rainfall, unregistered by any contemporary, made the waters of these big lakes shrink and evaporate. Lake Lahontan shrank away like Alice in Wonderland, till there was absolutely nothing left of it; Lake Bonneville shrank till it attained the diminished size of the existing Great Salt Lake. Terrace after terrace, running in long parallel lines on the sides of the Wahsatch Mountains around, mark the various levels at which it rested for awhile on its gradual downward course. It is still falling indeed, and the plain around is being gradually uncovered, forming the white, salt-encrusted shore with which all visitors to the Mormon city are so familiar. But why should the water have become briny? Why should the evaporation of an old Superior produce at last a Great Salt Lake? Well, there is a small quantity of salt in solution even in the freshest of lakes and ponds, brought down to them by the streams and rivers, and, as the water of the hypothetical Lake Bonneville slowly evaporated, the salt and other mineral constituents remained behind. Thus the solution grew constantly more and more concentrated, till at the present day it is extremely saline. Professor Geikie (to whose works the present paper is much indebted) found that he floated on the water in spite of himself; and the under sides of the steps at the bathing places are all encrusted with short stalactites of salt, produced from the drip of the bathers as they leave the water. The mineral constituents, however, differ considerably in their proportions from those found in true salt lakes of marine origin, and the point at which the salt is thrown down is still far from having been reached. Great Salt Lake must simmer in the sun for many centuries yet before the point arrives at which (as cooks say) it begins to settle.—Cornhill Magazine.

Picot Ribbons, Stripes, Etc.

The novelty in ribbons is the revival of picot edges or tiny scallops formed of graduated loops of the silk of the ribbon or else of tinsel threads. This is the finish for repped silk ribbons of the ordinary gros grain or the softer faille francaise, and it is also seen on the mixed ribbons that are partly of open wool in lace-like patterns, and partly of velvet or plush. Wide ribbons are on French bonnets both for trimming and for strings, but American women prefer narrow ribbons for strings, or else small set bows.—Bazar.

—English Cousin—Don't say "stove-pipe," Fred, it's so vulgar, you know! Fred—What shall I call it, then, "tile?" Fair Briton (scornfully)—Why, "chimney pot," of course.

OUR HOLIDAY SUPPLEMENT.

We take pleasure in presenting to the small army of HERALD readers our regular annual supplement for the holiday season of 1885. It has been our custom for five or six years to issue an extra sheet during the month of December. We consider it a good custom. In fact, people have become accustomed to look upon the HERALD holiday extra as a source of both pleasure and profit. The sheet always contains entertaining reading for the family circle and it reveals to all this important business secret—where their holiday purchases can be made to the best advantage. The head of the family should read it, that he may know where to buy christmas gifts for wife and little ones; the housewife should peruse it, that she may be posted on the best place to find nicknacks for the children; Sammy and Sally should read it, that they may learn the store houses for the candies and toys; old St. Nick himself will certainly read it to his edification and profit, for he can learn thereby where to replenish his stock on short notice and at wholesale rates, in case his regular annual supply should become exhausted.

One page of this extra is allotted to our Clinton neighbors, in which the live business men of that town are fittingly represented, and thus a healthy emulation is established between the merchants of these two neighboring villages.

The HERALD of the present week is a newspaper achievement of no mean proportions. Its twelve pages, containing 72 columns of choice reading and advertising matter, constitute a faithful pen and ink mirror of the business interests of Tecumseh and adjoining towns. Our leading business houses, our live business firms, our successful business establishments are represented in these columns. They speak to the people through the types and tell purchasers where to buy. Do you wish anything to eat or drink or wear? do you desire any necessity or luxury or comfort? do you want to bestow a christmas gift upon brother or sister, father or mother or friend? then carefully peruse these advertising columns, heed the injunctions conveyed therein and you will be wise.

A large number of sample copies are transmitted this week to persons who are not now, but who ought to be regular subscribers, and all those receiving a copy are respectfully invited to join the HERALD family. Read our club list and profit thereby. Now is the time to subscribe.

The Leading-Strings Fallacy.

From the moment a child is born, he is treated on the principle that all his instincts are essentially wrong, that nature must be thwarted and counteracted in every possible way. He is strapped up in a contrivance that he would be glad to exchange for a straight-jacket, kept for hours in a position that prevents him from moving any limb of his body. His first attempts at locomotion are checked; he is put in leading-strings, he is carefully guarded from the out-door world, from the air that would invigorate his lungs; from the sports that would develop his muscles. Hence, the peevishness, awkwardness, and sickliness of our young aristocrats. Poor people have no time to imitate the absurdities of their wealthy neighbors, and their children profit by what the model nurse would undoubtedly call neglect. Indian babies are still better off. They are fed on bull-beef, and kicked around like young dogs; but they are not swaddled, they are not cradled, and not dosed with paregoric; they crawl around naked, and soon learn to keep out of the way; they are happy, they never cry. If we would treat our youngsters in the same way, only substituting kisses and bread for kicks and beef, they would be as happy as kids in a clover field, and moreover they would afterward be hardier and stronger. Every week the newspapers tell us about ladies tumbling down stairs and breaking both arms; boys falling from a fence and fracturing their collar-bones. From what height would a young Comanche have to fall to break such bones—not to mention South-sea Island children and young monkeys? The bones of an infant are plastic; letting it tumble and roll about would harden the bony tissue; guarding it like a piece of brittle crockery makes its limbs as fragile as glass. Christian mothers reproach themselves with neglecting their duty to their children if they do not constantly interfere with their movements, but they forget that in points of physical education Nature herself is such an excellent teacher that the apparent neglect is really a transfer of the pupil to a more efficient school.

Sun-Spot Suppositions.

Enthusiasts who make a special study of sun-spots and attendant phenomena believe that the corner-stone of a new science is being laid by discoveries pointing to an intimate connection between solar and terrestrial meteorology. Just what the connection is they are not yet able to clearly define, although electricity is suspected of being the agent through which the effects are manifested upon our planet. It is known that the gaseous envelope of the sun is affected by eruptions of such prodigious magnitude as to be utterly beyond our power of conception, these disturbances appearing to us in the form of rapidly changing spots and protuberances The eras of the spots—or sun-storms—occur at remarkably regular intervals, a complete cycle of the various stages of activity from maximum to minimum and again to maximum being performed in about eleven years—the so-called "sun-spot period." The sun-spot physicists claim a coincidence of the periods of maximum spots and years of great atmospheric and physical disturbance in the earth. The year 1881 was one of greot solar disturbances, while it was marked by violent storms and earthquakes upon our globe. Further than this, these scientists claim to have recently detected by simultaneous observation minor atmospheric changes as the result of corresponding movements in the sun. Many difficulties attend these observations, but the Astronomer Royal for Scotland and others believe that the state of the sun will some day become an important factor in weather forecasts and like calculations.

Small Pox and Vaccination.

A writer on vaccination says, "Small-pox and varioloid could be entirely driven from the face of the earth by vaccination, and revaccination and re-revaccination at proper times. It is a well settled principle in pathology that two diseases cannot exist in the system at the same time. Also, it is admitted that a milder form of a disease will prevent or modify a severer type of a disease of a similar nature.

As an example, a child who has had "simple scarlet fever," or measles, seldom, if ever, afterwards has "malignant scarlet fever," unless, it may be, in some cases where some disease of another character may have eradicated the effect of impression made upon the system by simple scarlet fever or measles. The vaccine disease will modify, and always prevents small-pox proper. The contagion of small-pox is conveyed from victim to victim across street and from house to house, by the air, and is also conveyed by bed-clothing and wearing apparel of small-pox patients, and by letters written by an affected hand, and in so many ways that it seems almost impossible for the unvaccinated to escape. Persons who have never been vaccinated are liable to take small-pox from small-pox, and from varioloid. Persons who have been vaccinated are liable to take varioloid only from exposure to small-pox, but will not take varioloid from varioloid."

Home Politeness.

A boy who is polite to his father and mother is likely to be polite to every one else. A boy lacking politeness to his parents may have the semblance of courtesy in society, but is never truly polite in spirit, and is in danger, as he becomes familiar, of betraying his real want of courtesy. We are all in danger of living too much for the outside world, for the impression which we make in society, coveting the good opinions of those who are in a sense a part of ourselves, and who will continue to sustain and be interested in us, notwithstanding these defects of deportment and character. We say to every boy and to every girl, cultivate the habits of courtesy and propriety at home—in the sitting room and the kitchen, as well as in the parlor—and you will be sure in other places to deport yourself in a becoming and attractive manner. When one has a pleasant smile and a graceful demeanor, it is a satisfaction to know these are not put on, but that they belong to the character, and are manifest at all times and under all circumstances.

How Does He Sleep?

One of the most important things to know about any man upon whom you are going to place any dependence, is how he sleeps. Sleeplessness may sometimes be involuntary. There may have been some shock to the man's nerves which has made him insomnolent; but sleeplessness is more frequently voluntary. Men choose to push their studies or their work into those hours when they should sleep. It does not matter for what cause any man may do this, the mere fact of not sleeping spoils his case. He may spend his nights in the theater, in the study, or in the "protrated meeting." It will make no difference; the result to the body will be the same. The sleep was not had, and for that the man must pay.

One man may do with a little less sleep than another; but, as a general rule, if you want a clerk, a lieutenant, a lawyer, a physician, a legislator, a judge, a president or a pastor, do not trust your interests to any man that does not take eight good, solid hours of sleep out of every twenty-four. Whatever may be his reason for it, if he does not give himself that, he will snap sometime just when you want him to be strong.

The intellectual and moral connections of sleeping have, I think, not been sufficiently appreciated. Men and boys have been praised for "burning the midnight oil." Now this "midnight oil" is a delusion and a snare. The student who is fast asleep, at eleven o'clock every night and wid awake every morning at seven o'clock is going to surpass another student of the same intellectual ability who goes to bed after twelve and rises before five. In sleep, the plate on which the picture is to be taken is receiving its chemical preparation, and it is plain that that which is the best prepared will take the best picture.

Men who are the fastest asleep when they are asleep, are the widest awake when they are awake.

Great workers must be great resters.

Every man who has clerks in his employ ought to know what their sleeping habits are. The young man who is up till two, three and four o'clock in the morning, and must put in his appearance at the bank or store by nine or ten o'clock and work all day, cannot repeat this process many days without a certain shakiness coming into his system, which he will endeavor to steady by some delusive stimulus. It is this way that many a young man begins his course to ruin. He need not necessarily have been in bad company. He has lost his sleep; and losing sleep is losing strength and grace.—Rev. Dr. Deems.

Missed the Train.

It was a colored man. His back was all dirt, one tail of his coat was gone, and every button had been ripped off his vest. He had two limps and a hitch as he came out, and there was a new French shade of sadness in his voice as he toed the mark and said:

"I missed de train, sah."

"Yes, it looks like it. Is your name Gen. Scott Green?"

"Yes, sah."

"What train did you miss?"

"I doan' just remember what train it was."

"Whar was you going?"

"Down the road."

"What road?"

"Dat's what I can't 'member, sah."

"Well do you remember of getting on a drunk?"

"No, sah. Maybe I called fur lemonade an' dey gin me whisky, but I doan' 'zackly 'member it. All I recollect is dat I missed de train."

"I think you got the train all right. You were training around pretty lively when the officer got hold of your collar."

"I allus walks in my sleep, sah."

"Well, that's bad for you. You broke a window, kicked in a door, and raised a big row. Have you observed the state of your wardrobe?"

"I has deserved dat I'm all broke up, sah. Dis suit ob close cost me seben dollars cash, an' I doan't believe it would sell fur six. Did dey roll me down sta'rs?"

"No; you resisted arrest and the officer had to mop you around a little."

"He did? I wish I d bin dar to seen de fun. Kin I step out an' see my pardner 'bout two minits?"

"No, sir; you can step up to the workhouse for sixty days."

"Shoo! Why, dat upsets me from gwine to Bufferler."

"Can't help that. Please fall back."

"Can't I settle dis lawsuit fur fifty cents?"

"No, sir. The omnibus will be along for you in about twenty minutes. Call the next case."—Detroit Free Press.

What Common Sense Does.

Common sense is symmetry of mind, of character, and of purpose in the individual combined. It represents man in completeness, harmony, and equipoise. It clothes him with dignity, invests him with power, and stamps him with superiority. It is not genius, for that is often erratic; not cunning, in its sinuous course; not tact, with its decline into trickery. Common sense is the embodiment of true manhood. It confers a patent of royalty, though birth be plebian, and exalts men from their lowliest spheres to the highest stations. Not by sudden freaks of fortune or a train of adventitious circumstances are they thus dignified; but step by step, through obstacle and hindrance, they overcome by force of character and the proper force of will power. Common sense is a tremendous force in this lower world. Its power is felt and acknowledged through all the ramifications of governments, society, business, finance, science and commerce. In fact it is the history as well as the true philosophy of the ages. It is the salt that has saved humanity from barbarism, and the moving power that has propelled the race onward in its march of progress and civilization.

The highest elements of character, of power and dignity lie within reach of the lowest and the poorest.

Instead of being content to live so as to escape blame, the Christian is required to live so as to prove a means of blessing.

The government of a nation demands a certain harmony like music, and certain proportions like architecture.

FOR NEWLY MARRIED COUPLES.

How to Furnish a House and Where the Outfit Should Be Purchased.

Of all the wonderful ideas people take up there are few to equal in strangeness the notion a good many people appear to possess of the spending value of money, and when suddenly called on to lay it out judiciously and carefully it is hard to imagine anything so "sair left tae themselfs," to use an old Scotch idiom, as these good folk.

There is a great advantage in getting most of your furniture at one large, good store, instead of wandering around, trying for special economies, which is that, in the first case, the shopkeeper or his assistant will generally take an interest in your wants, and, knowing what you have got, will suggest many little alterations that will add vastly to the convenience and beauty of your purchases, even if not sensibly decreasing your actual sum total. It is not possible to catalogue all the different sorts and shapes of furniture kept in a large establishment, and very often the shopmen will be able to point out articles which will exactly meet your requirements, and which they on their side are equally glad to sell off, even at a little discount, as, though just the very thing for you, they might not suit the tastes of one in fifty of their other customers. A very good plan in buying bedroom furniture is to buy a very simple, inexpensive suit for your own room, to begin with, until you know what you really have to spare for decoration, and then you can, when all the actual necessaries are purchased, consult your taste as well as your purse, and relegate your first set to the second or spare bedroom.

It is wonderful, when you come to look into the matter, how very little furniture is actually required, in a bedroom especially. As a rule houses are overcrowded, to the great increase of dust, and not especially work. We are at present trying to replace the old fashioned wall-to-wall carpet by bare boards, stained or otherwise, and rugs, which can be taken up and shaken at any time, and, in case of dirtiness, can be rolled up and put away bodily. Then, again, it has dawned on us that our dressing tables do not require petticoats, or our beds vallances, all of which alterations add amazingly to the airiness and cleanliness of either a bedroom or a sick room.

The great thing in furnishing is to consider the rooms to be provided for under all their aspects, and then to make up your mind as to what is wanted and stick to it. You must not go changing about, now trying one fashion and then another, or the result will be fragmentary incongruity. A thing may be lovely in and by itself, though it will utterly at once spoil the effect of your room. Of course, if money is no object, and you can afford to get rid of furniture as soon as it grows common or you are tired of it, well and good; you may allow yourself some "fancies," but when your purchases will have to last you pretty nearly your lifetime it behooves you to choose such as will not carry their date legibly on their surface.

Above all, remember that if you are to live in a room, your surroundings must bear close inspection. Those "sweetly pretty" paper and panels of impossible flowers and improbable dicky birds may do well enough for a day or two, but in a month or so you will become more than dubious as to their coloring, and utterly disturbed by their drawing, and these states of mind are fatal to comfort. If you can not afford the really good in any branch of art, do not be content with indifferent specimens, but try for a less ambitious style of beauty. "Vieux Save" is delicious, but its modern imitation, which one sees only too often, is usually a base calumny on its lovely original, and good, honest Japanese or ordinary pottery, would, in the long run, be fifty times more satisfactory. Orchids are doubtless beautiful but it is not given to every one to own such luxuries, and the common buttercups and wild honeysuckle will be exquisite in their own style, and undoubtedly better than waxen portraits of the gorgeous exotics.—N. Y. Herald.

PECULIAR WOODS.

A Block Whose Woody Fiber Forms a Perfect Maltese Cross.

"I have the dead-wood on you," remarked Prof. Rothrock in response to the applause which greeted him as he appeared in the lecture-room at Horticultural Hall, Fairmount Park, Saturday afternoon. In his arms he carried a number of chunks of "peculiar woods" to better illustrate his lecture. His subject was "Peculiar Woods." The lecturer explained that peculiar exogenous woods were those that differed in important particulars from the normal or average growth. He classified them as peculiar in color, weight and manner of development. He showed several specimens having peculiarities of color. There are no less than sixteen plants grown in the United States that are peculiar, because they are of greater weight than water and will therefore sink when placed in it. These heavy woods grow in the Southern States, in the damp atmosphere of the country adjacent to the Gulf of Mexico, and also in the dry climate of Arizona and New Mexico. Their peculiarity is due evidently to heat more than to any other one agent. He next exhibited a number of specimens of peculiar growth, showing with the aid of the blackboard that they had not grown as trees usually do, with perfect medullary and cambium formations. Sometimes, instead of the regular rings formed at the ends of the several years' growth, they have bark soundings, becoming, as it were, trees within trees. The professor showed one block in which the woody fiber had formed a perfect Maltese cross, another a checker-board surface, and several others nearly as remarkable.—Philadelphia Times.

—The late Walter Weldon was one of the five men and the only man outside of France, deemed by the French Society of Encouragement worthy to receive its "grand medal." It was he who invented the process by which bleaching powder is made, thus, as the chemist Dumas said, cheapening every sheet of paper and every yard of calico in the world.

—The evidence of the value of oil to lessen the dangerous effect of heavy seas is reported by the United States Hydrographic Office as continuing to be "of the most satisfactory nature," and with its latest Pilot's Chart it gives instructions for its use, and invites suggestions from mariners as to their practical experience in using the waves. The safety of navigation may be much increased by their hearty compliance.—Chicago Journal.

—Our social humanity is so dependent upon our surroundings—we so need each other's help that we can not afford to be other than good neighbors. For knowing and pendent of our fellows we may imagine ourselves to be, there is sure to come a time when we crave human companionship and aid, and then it will be well for us to have sought "the good folks," who really and truly live "everywhere, if we only find them."—H. Annette Poole, in Good Housekeeping.

—In a recent lecture Prof. Virchow, of Berlin, stated that the Semitic race more readily adapts itself to a change of climate than the Aryan, and that the South Europeans owe their advantages in this respect to the admixture of Semitic blood, through contact with the Phoenicians and Arabs. The want of adaptability shows itself especially in diminished fertility. Creoles die out after the third generation, or become absorbed with the natives.

—In his "Historical Sketches of the town of Swampscott," Mr. Waldo Thompson states that about 1835 Mr. John M. Ives, of Salem, received two or three marrow squash seeds from a negress whose husband was a cook upon one of the merchant ships, Captain Lord, from Valparaiso. He also obtained the tomato seed in the same manner, as "love apple," and after growing them a year or two back of his store he was told by a sea captain that they were eatable, and from that time they were used as food.—Boston Transcript.

A MICA MINE.

Description of the Famous Ledge at Groton, New Hampshire.

The chief attention at Groton, aside from its mountain scenery, is the mica mine, opened something more than a year ago and now operated by a large force of men. The ledge is really a large hill of solid rock, composed in the regular order, after the covering of schist is removed—quartz, mica, feldspar and quartz, mica, feldspar again and again, down through the hill to an unsertain depth. The work of blasting has been carried forward here until an open drift has been cut three hundred feet long, at least forty feet wide and not much less than fifty feet deep. Branching off from this cut is a tunnel now about seventy feet long and twenty high, drilled horizontally into the ledge. Small iron tramways lead to the "dump," and little cars, pushed by hand, carry the refuse rock out of the way. The mica crystals, of all sizes, from an inch across to more than two feet in their larger axis, protrude from sides and from above and below, with their planes at every conceivable inclination, waiting for some well-placed charge of giant powder to free them from the mass of worthless rock in which they are imbedded. These crystals vary from the size of one's hand to blocks two feet in length and from six inches to a foot in thickness, and are rapidly split into sheets by a group of men seated on low stools. The thin sheets are carried from this group to a long line of men standing at benches, who cut them to the largest possible patterns with tinman's shears. The market value of mica depends on the size of the sheets, and it is here that one first understands the real character of the work that is going on around him, for these sheets of mica, seven or eight by nine or ten inches, bring in the market no less than fifteen dollars a pound. The smaller portions vary in value from five dollars a pound up. Beryls abound, and some valuable specimens have been quarried here. In the roof of the covered drift was one, a perfect hexameter, two feet of which had been laid bare, while each end was still imbedded in the rock. It would be a magnificent specimen if it could be cut out whole, but the mining company is not seeking beryls, and some day, probably, a blast that has been arranged with reference to a mica crystal will throw the beautiful specimen shattered to the floor of the tunnel. Mica mining is not a new thing in Groton. A few years ago the Hartford mine yielded a large product, and doubtless would to-day, but there was no convenient place for disposing of the enormous bulk of refuse rock, and the expense thus incurred drew heavily from the profits. At this time a shaft more than one hundred feet deep is now abandoned and filled with water. Other mines have been opened at various times in the past eight years, but none of them have been found as profitable as the one described.—Boston Transcript.

—The American Medical Missionary Association held its first annual meeting recently. —The Church Missionary Society represents the evangelical element in the Church of England. This country can afford to lose all that it has yet attained if by so doing its inhabitants become true, noble, faithful men and women. The founders of this university were patriotic men, and it was for this purpose that they conceived the idea of bettering the nation. Clinton has a cemetery association The by-laws provide that $1 shall be paid into the treasury every time a new grave is opened. Recently a member lost a child, a grave was dug, and the dollar paid. Shortly the good brother lost another child, and instead of opening a new grave he reopened the old one, and placed the second coffin upon the first, and refused to pay the fee, standing upon the fact that he had not opened a new grave. The other members of the association kick.—Detroit Journal.

The entertainment given by Beers' Post G. A. R. was not the success that it should have been had they had more practice, and the night not been so cold. "Fun by the boys" introduced some good singing by W. T. Eccles and Geo. Buck, which was one of the best features of the evening. The Post gave a good illustration of a military court martial and "Helen's Babies" furnished a good bit of amusement for the audience, the whole being interspersed with music by Knapp's band. We are glad to hear that the Post will have a nice little sum to put in their treasury as the result of their enterprise, the net proceeds being about $70.

John Hubbard went to Angola Ind. last Monday where he will work in a cooper shop.

Will L. Blackmar, of Cambridge, was in town last Saturday and paid his respects at the HERALD sanctum.

Andrew J. Hunter, of Iowa, formerly of Franklin, is spending two or three weeks with his Tecumseh and Franklin friends.

Mr. F. E. Smith, treasurer of Raisin, will be in Tecumseh on Thursday, of Christmas week, instead of Friday, to receive taxes.

The M. & O. R. R. will run a refrigerator car to New York every Saturday hereafter for the preservation of perishable goods.

Clinton young people have organized a dancing club. Four club hops will be given Dec. 11th and 25th, and January 8th and 22d.

Geo. H. Buck, of Monroe, an old resident of Tecumseh, is in town this week. He came on purpose to help the G. A. R. boys in their entertainment.

Fadover informs us that Mrs. Fadover says that the muskrat has gone into winter quarters, and that the clerk of the weather is laid up with the mumps.

The Prohibitionists carry on their campaign "between times." They find that the best time to proselyte voters is not during the excitement of a campaign.

The Hudson Gazette says that place has all the old maids it wants. Let the new postmaster do his duty and the number will be decreased.—Morenci Observer.

There will be a Fish Pond and Post Office Social at Britton's hall, Britton, on Wednesday evening. Dec. 16th, for the benefit of J. H. Eaton Post, G.A.R.
JOHN BRITTON, Com.

The Salvation Army of Tecumseh will give a grand jubilee next Friday evening at their barracks. Soldiers and officers from Adrian and Monroe are expected. Ten cents admittance.

Last Wednesday the rumor struck Deerfield that Palmer was in that vicinity, and the whole town turned out en masse and organized a searching expedition, but it proved to be a false report.

Don't fail to see the beautiful Indian baskets, bark and sweet grass goods from northern Michigan, which Mrs. J. R. Root is selling in Tecumseh. They are just the thing for holiday presents.

Mr. Sparks is adding something to his museum collection nearly every week. The latest addition is a pitcher over one hundred years old.—Herald. The attention of the Boston base ball club is directed to the foregoing. They'll need an old pitcher next year sure.—Adrian Press.

Col. Burr's Life of Gen. Grant ought to sell well in this section. We have secured some good canvassers and we bespeak for them the good will of the people when they call round. L. H. Sweet has the towns of Macon and Ridgeway; Mrs. J. R. Root has Raisin, Tecumseh and Clinton; John Wallace has the town of Franklin; Will. L. Blackmar has the towns of Cambridge and Woodstock.

A Hudson preacher was invited out "just for a little ride," by a Bohemian oat man, and when about a dozen stops at the houses of various farmers had been made it struck the servant of the Lord that he had been taken along to impart a religious coloring to the Devil's work. It is a wonder how the dominie ever escaped being inviegled into the purchase of 20 bushels of oats at $10 a bushel. The Bohemian is such a good talker.—Adrian Record.

Last Tuesday afternoon we dropped into C. E. Williamson's poultry packing establishment and were somewhat surprised to see the extent of the business done there. He is now in the highth of his chicken and turkey packing for the holiday trade. The entire basement of his large building is filled with poultry. The dressing room would hardly be an appropriate place for a fashionable lady, attired in silks and satins, but the way the dressed chickens are turned out there is a caution. Last Monday Ed. made one purchase of two wagon loads of chickens and turkeys which weighed 3312 pounds, and absorbed $213.59 to pay the bill. He now has 27 hands in his employ. Just at present it is one of the busiest business establishments in this section.

Tribou LeBaron, of Toledo, was in town last Saturday.

Henry Marr, of Cambridge, favored the HERALD with a call last Saturday. He is now engaged in selling the New American Sewing Machine.

Mrs. Pittinger, of Wellsville, N. Y., who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. P. S. DePuy, for the past few weeks, returned to her home on Monday.

The New York World is to-day the ne plus ultra of American newspapers. Taken altogether it leads them all.—The weekly World is clubbed with the HERALD at reduced rates.

The new machinery of the Clinton roller mill is now in position and the mill is ready for business. The proprietor, Edwin R. Smith, is always making improvements somewhere.

Tecumseh will indulge in a grand christmas dance on Dec. 25th, at the Opera House. Arrangements are being perfected by a committee in charge for the largest dance this place has ever witnessed.

The Monroe Daily Commercial has again made its appearance and we hope it has come to stay this time. It is well printed and ably edited and is a credit to the publisher and to the city of Monroe. It certainly deserves to succeed.

The Smith tribe is in no danger of extinction just at present. Mrs. John Smith, of Milan township, gave birth to three female babies last week, two of them weighed four pounds each and the other three pounds. All are healthy and doing well.

"Grandpa" is the way we call Geo. Spafford now. Mr. and Mrs. Will. C. Blood, of Lansing, were made happy one day last week by the arrival of a fine girl baby at their home. A telephone message announced the news and Mrs. Spafford took the next train for Lansing.

The firm of H. Brewer & Co., will be represented at the tile convention, which is held this week at Indianapolis. Their new Brewer-Tiffany Machine is leading all competitors.—Their new clay crusher is also meeting with a ready sale, and gives the best of satisfaction.

We paid a visit Thanksgiving evening to the Tecumseh skating rink.—There was a large crowd in attendance. A large portion of the number being skaters, with a good sprinkling of spectators. The Tecumseh rink is one of the best managed and orderly rinks we know of.—Clinton Local.

Patrick Murphy, of Clinton, and his daughter Mary were in town Monday and paid their respects to the HERALD. Mr. Murphy is always happy, and he has abundant reason to feel so just at present, for in addition to his other household comforts he has fuel on hand for eighteen months ahead.

A christmas dance will be given at Exelby's hall, Britton, by J. Gibson on Dec. 24th. Mr. G. intends to have a first-class party and everybody is guaranteed a pleasant time. $1.25 pays the bill, which includes an oyster supper at Exelby's hotel. Young man, engage your best girl and go and enjoy yourself.

Among all the agricultural papers published, the best one in our opinion for a Michigan farmer is the old reliable Michigan Farmer. Every Michigan farmer who knows what is what will keep the Michigan Farmer in the house. It is as necessary for his comfort and success as good crops or a good housekeeper.

Hudson is to have a packing house. Mr. D. H. Patterson has gone into pork, although he has not turned a porker by any means. The gentleman will occupy the egg room of the Hudson creamery and will buy dressed hogs which will be cut up and packed for shipment. This is a business needed in Hudson. Success to the new enterprise.—Hudson Gazette.

A late number of the Atkinson, Neb., Graphic contains the following notice about Arthur C. Crossman, a former Tecumseh boy. He is evidently doing well in his present location:

A. C. Crossman has just had a dozen or more bulletin boards painted to thoroughly advertise his loan and real-estate business with at the different cross roads in the neighborhood. He is a man of push and energy, and will win.

Edgar A. Tribou, the Assignee of Woolston Comfort, will expose for sale the mill property and real estate known as Comfort's Roller Mills, on Wednesday, Dec. 30th, inst. A full description of the property will be found in the legal notice which is printed elsewhere in the HERALD.—This will be a rare opportunity for some one to buy a valuable property at a cheap figure.

W. & S. W. Anderson & Co., are putting a rapid service cash railway into their store. This is an improved cash railway and the best thing yet devised for that purpose. They propose to be in readiness for a big holiday trade. The time saved by the clerks in travelling to the cashier's desk will enable them to sell nearly double the amount of goods in the same length of time. This enterprising firm are bound to keep up with the times in introducing new improvements.

FARMERS' SOCIAL CLUB.

Friday evening Nov. 27 the Farmers Social Club met at the residence of Mr. John Rector. There was a tremendous outpouring of the people. Uncle John's spacious parlors were filled to overflowing. The program previously arranged (as published) was well carried out, each one filling his or her part without a break, and all done so well that I think there is but little chance left for your reporter to give any particular praise to any one on the program.

The question, Which is the most profitable, deep or shallow plowing, was well discussed on both sides.

Mr. Alanson Bangs opened the discussion, saying that he had always plowed his ground what might be called deep or below medium. Said that the results had been satisfactory. Had not experimented to see what the result would have been if he had plowed only 2 or 3 inches instead of 7 or 8, but was inclined to favor the latter depth especially for wheat and corn.

Mr. R. B. Gillespie followed next saying that he had been in his farming operations successful in the main. Had always favored and practiced a good depth of plowing, but of late had been inclined to think that he might get better results by plowing more shallow, still the most of the tests that he had seen resulted in favor of deep plowing, said the crop would not start quite so rapid where the ground was plowed deep, but held the moisture better when the drouth came as we usually have it the last of July and August.

Mr. F. C. Rector believed we had all been in the habit of plowing altogether too deep. Thought that 4 or 5 in. plenty deep enough for corn or wheat. Thought it was all nonsense to lug our teams plowing 8 or 9 inches deep when 3 or 4 inches at the bottom was cold subsoil and did not contain vegitable growth and had a tendency to retard vegitation until so late that the hot dry weather would ruin the crop. Thought we could see the effect of shallow plowing in some wheat on the Peter Waldron farm, it having a better top and plowed the shallowest of any ground he had seen this fall

Mr. Lyman Sweet, of West Dundee, a visitor being called upon by the President, said that in his section the farmers had found that if they expected to get crops they must plow deep. Their soil was flat and rather inclined to be wet (unless underdrained) so that by plowing deep it gave the surface water a chance to drain off and let the sun and air have a chance upon the surface to help the crop and also they had found that deep plowed land stood the drouth far the best. Noted a piece of corn raised upon his farm the present year treated in this way, of 9 acres from which was taken 1050 bushels of good sound corn. This corn was husked by the bushel. Said it was equally true that deep plowing was best on their soil for wheat.

Mr. George Griswold had always been an advocate and practicioner of deep plowing. Noticed one piece of land on his farm that he once plowed a foot deep and raised the same season 150 bushels of ears of corn to the acre. Had always noticed that when he plowed the deepest (other things being equal) he had the largest crops both of corn and wheat. Said he knew that crops started out more brisk on shallow plowing but did not hold out when coming to maturity.

Mr. Russell said that on the prairies west the farmers did not plow deeper than from 2 to 4 inches. Said they raised immense crops of corn. In fact their raw prairie they only plowed from 1½ to 2½ in. and got their best results from that depth. Was inclined to think that we here were in the habit of plowing too deep to get the best results. Thought the ground would warm up quicker, thereby adapting it to the want of vegetation sooner, thereby gaining a wanted time for the wheat plant in the fall and the corn plant in the spring.

Mr. A. G. Hall thought perhaps that the kind of soil made a difference in regard to the depth that it should be plowed. Some soils perhaps would be better plowed shallow, whereas other soils might be the better plowed very much deeper. Was inclined to think that sand or gravel would be the better not plowed too deep, but thought that clay or clay loam would be the better plowed much deeper.

Club adjourned for three weeks to meet at R. B. Gillespie's, Friday eve., Dec. 18th. As this is our annual meeting for the election of officers, it is hoped that there will be a large attendance of the members. There will be no question for discussion, but the following program will be presented:

Music—Choir.
Declamation—Freddie Rector.
Essay—Anna Everhart.
Inst. Music—Eva Rector.
Dialogue by the School Children.
Reading of Poe's Bells by Minnie Rector and Lizzie Henderson.
Declamation—George Henderson.
Music—Choir.
Election of Officers.

W. D. Adams, proprietor of Tecumseh's novelty store, has a new card in this week's paper. His place is headquarters for Christmas goods.

THE SHOOTING AFFRAY

The Anderson's Rapidly Improving—An Interview with Them—Palmer not yet Taken.

We are happy to be able to state to day that Berf and Ernie Anderson are both doing finely and no apprehension whatever is now felt for them. Unless some very unexpected relapse should occur they will speedily recover. Although the report in the HERALD of last week was in the main correct, there were one or two erroneous statements, which in justice to the parties concerned should be corrected.

From all testimony now at hand we are convinced that Palmer had his dirk knife with him at the Salvation Army meeting and before he went home.

We are also satisfied that Berf Anderson gave Palmer no provocation for firing upon him by anything Anderson said after leaving the post office.

Last Tuesday afternoon we called to see the wounded men and had a very pleasant interview with them. They were both sitting up and were taking their situation as comfortably as possible. Berf is about the house and could probably be out now, but the doctors caution him against venturing out too soon, lest he take cold. We found Ernie taking it easy in a large rocking chair. He is in no condition to move about much, but is doing well and his wounds are rapidly healing. He thinks he can come down town in about two weeks, but we are inclined to think that four weeks will be nearer the mark. Mr. and Mrs. Albert Anderson feel greatly relieved and encouraged and feel that all danger is now over.

CLIPPINGS FROM EXCHANGES.

Sheriff Whitmore telegraphed the chief of police this morning to look out for the assassin, Aaron Palmer, who was described as a railroad man, of rough appearance, about 30 years old, who often came to Jackson, and is supposed to have friends here. If this notice had been sent Saturday night there might have been some chance of catching Palmer if he came this way, but the police officers here say he had plenty of time to reach Canada, or almost any other point, before they heard of his crime. A reward of $500 is offered for his capture. Jackson Citizen.

The Adrian Times quotes the above and comments thereon as follows:

Marshal Moir, of Tecumseh, distinctly informed a Times representative that dispatches were sent up and down the road promptly after the shooting Saturday night. This was about the hour that the average Jackson officer is viglently watching a game in some "club" room, and figuring out how much it is safe to invest on one little pair. No wonder they did'nt get the news from Tecumseh.

Palmer, the Tecumsgh would-be murderer, is causing Sheriff Whitmore a great deal of trouble in one way or another. Yesterday a man conducted the following conversation with the sheriff, after nine other men had asked him the same series of questions:

"Ance, have they caught Palmer, yet?"

"No, sir."

"Which way do you think he went?"

"I can't say," in a tone that meant he would'nt if he could.

"Which way did Bowen go after him?"

"I don't just know where he is, now."

"Where did Teachout go?"

"Can't say."

"Where is Burch?"

"Give it up," impatiently.

"Did Aten go after him, too?"

"Say, by thunder! Look here. Have you seen Tom. Hunter to-day?"

"Yes, just saw him about five minutes ago."

"Well, that settles it," and the sheriff "quit" his interlocutor suddenly.—Adrian Times.

The number of persons who could have caught Palmer before he got out of Tecumseh has increased amazingly: opportunity for reflection having given each a chance to size up his own great intelligence and cool bravery.—Adrian Record.

"Aaron Palmer is easily controled if rightly handled," said a railroad employee last evening. "I have seen him drunk and very ugly and a few kind words always controled him. I remember once when he was a little off and had got his back up at Conductor Ketcham and remarked to me at that time that he would hunt him up and lick him till he couldn't stand. I argued the point with him a few moments when he said 'all right, all right, just as you say,' and that was the end of it." All this sounds very fine, but Palmer is too eccentric altogether. For his own good for one thing, but more for the safety of the public, for another, he should be put where his oddities will not harm better men then himself, and a worse one than he or one more utterly dangerous it would be hard to find.—Adrian Record.

Our readers will remember that Palmer was arrested here last September for shooting at Tom Vansickle in a house on North Winter street, but got off on payment of a fine and costs. He is said to be a desperate character when under the influence of liquor, and was a terror to the peaceable citizens of Tecumseh. The probabilities are that had he been captured soon after the shooting that night, he would have been lynched then and there, as the people were so excited they might have taken the law in their own hands. The reward offered for his capture will doubtless stimulate officers and his apprehension is only a question of time.—Adrian Press.

John Smith, the turnkey at the jail, knows just how many ties there are on the railroad track between Blissfield and the Lake Shore depot in this city, because he counted them while walking up from that village last Sunday morning. John went down there Saturday night on the midnight train having heard that Aaron Palmer had been seen in that vicinity, and as he had to be back at the jail early Sunday morning, and there being no train coming up, John took a tie ticket and arrived on time.—Adrian Press.

Wednesday officers Hyde and Burch of Lenawee county, were in town exhibiting photographs of the ruffian Palmer, and claiming that he had been seen the previous day on the prairie north of Deerfield. Wednesday evening deputy Sheriffs Bowen and King of Adrian, were also in town on a similar mission. The officers all seem to be working on the theory that Palmer is hiding somewhere in this vicinity.—Dundee Reporter.

THE ACTION OF THE OFFICERS.

Some impatience has been manifested over the fact that Palmer has not been captured, and a disposition has been manifested to criticize the action of the officers. From all information we can gather on the point, we believe that the action of the officials was prompt and thorough. What they have done and what they are now doing is not a proper matter for publicity at the present time. It is sufficient to say that we feel confident of Palmer's capture.

WEDDING CHIMES.

Another of Tecumseh's respected bachelors has joined the army of benedicts. The event took place on Thursday last, Dec. 3d, at the residence of Mrs. S. T. Dunn, in this village, at which time Mr. Irving S. Osborne and Miss Fannie Bottom were united in marriage. At twelve o'clock the ceremony was pronounced by Rev. T. G. Potter, in the presence of about 75 guests, and a reception was held immediately after. The company was most hospitably entertained. A large number of guests were present from abroad among whom were these:—Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Dickey, of Marshall; Geo. L. Graves and Wm. H. Osborne, of Milwaukee; Mrs. Henry Lowe, of Detroit; Mrs. M. T. Walline, of Northville; Samuel Foote and Miss Foote, of New York.

The bridal gifts were numerous, handsome and elegant, which the happy pair will value highly as mementoes of esteem from their best and truest friends. They left on the four o'clock train for Hinsdale, Mass., the bride's old home, where they will pass a brief honeymoon and then return to Tecumseh for their permanent home. The groom has lived in Tecumseh and Macon since early boyhood, and it is no flattery to say that he is universally esteemed as one of our most enterprising and highly respected young men. The bride has found a home with Mrs. S. T. Dunn for the past four years and during that time she has gained a warm place in the hearts of all her acquaintances. That abundant happiness and prosperity may be their lot is the wish of all, in which the HERALD most heartily joins, and we take occasion to extend extra congratulations over the fact that Tecumseh is to be their future home.

THE CONGO COUNTRY.

Pastoral, Habits, Language and Peculiarities of the Natives.

A Boston gentleman, who has spent about fourteen years of his life on the east and west coasts of Africa, but most of that period on the east coast, in conversation the other day, gave some points in regard to the Congo country (where he spent some three years, and about which public curiosity has lately aroused,) which are not covered in Mr. Stanley's latest book, and may therefore be interesting.

The language of the natives of the Congo country is called Layott, and is so very difficult to acquire that he knows of only one European who had mastered it sufficiently to understand it, though he can speak but very little of it. It appears to be composed of short words which, in the rapid manner of speaking, seem to be run together, and each sentence to consist of a longer or shorter compound word. It is capable of strong emphasis, and is quite expressive, but the natives are not given to gesticulation even when talking excitedly, excepting always the feticharo or fetich man when dealing out damnation to transgressors. The trouble in acquiring the language appears to be the general unwillingness of the natives to teach it to white men. It is said, however, that some of the Portuguese who are born and raised there have acquired the language, and speak it as fluently as natives. In their intercourse, the blacks are generally polite toward one another, and have great respect for old age. This is as true of the people of the East as of those of the West Coast of Africa. But the coast people of the Congo are neither industrious nor sober. When the Portuguese first established trading stations on the Congo, they taught the people to drink rum, and this is now a universal habit among them. In their native villages and settlements the men will not work in cultivating the soil, but spend the time in hunting, war and such amusements as their country affords opportunities for pursuing—and drinking rum or gin, when they can get it.

When they hire out to the European traders, the natives are good workers, but a certain proportion of their monthly pay is stipulated to be rum or gin. They hire out, agreeing to stay a year, at the end of which time they return to their tribe, where they have a grand jamboree. They bring home the liquor by the cask, two or three men of the same village frequently combining together in the ownership, and when they arrive it is the signal for all their relatives to receive them with joy and gladness. When the liquor is landed the King or chief is first served with his share or tax of it. Then a certain amount is sold to procure meat and rice, or perhaps more frequently these articles are purchased with other commodities brought from the factories, and the feast begins. When the returned men and their friends drink and gorge, gorge and drink, until their entire store of earnings is exhausted—the orgies lasting longer or shorter, according to the amount brought home and the number of helpers that aid in consuming it—then they return once more to the monotony of hard work at the factories. The men of two tribes—the Cavindas and the Kroboys—are principally employed by the Dutch, English and Portuguese factors. They are physically a strong and hardy race of men, and make splendid sailors, and, barring some drawbacks, good servants.

Like all aboriginal people the Congo blacks are very superstitious, but to what extent they believe in a future state can only be conjectured. They believe in the existence of good and bad spirits, which they believe are all the time hovering around, and when one of them dies they believe that his spirit or soul is seized by either the good or the bad spirits, and carried away to become one of them. Hence, when a native is dying, his friends come around, fire off guns and make horrible noises, for the purpose of frightening off the evil spirits. What effect this may have on the good spirits is not stated.

Their religious ceremonies are not of a very high order, being mostly of a propitiatory nature, or for the purpose of warding off danger, disease, etc., and here the fetich plays an important part. They do not make human sacrifices like the Ashantes, but when they want any favors from the invisibles they bring a goat or a chicken to the fetich man to be sacrificed, and are given in return an amulet or charm, or fetich, as they call it. The fetich is the terrible, the unknown power, at once the persecutor or the avenger, according as its power is invoked or rejected. This the present informant illustrated by an anecdote. The Dutch have a factory at Banana point, which is approached by two roads, one on each shore side of the narrow peninsula. On the boundary line of their property, on each road, a watch-house was established, to regulate admittance from the outside. But the laborers, servants and sailors from outside came in in such numbers, and gave so much trouble by getting drunk and creating disturbances, that the agents finally thought it best to make fetich, as it is termed, on the boundary line. They employed a fetich man to make fetich. This consisted first in bringing his fetich idol on to the line, making figures in the sand around it, and flourishes or signs around and above it with his hands and arms, and then taking a chicken, cutting its head off and sprinkling the blood around. This ceremony was performed on each road. In about twenty-four hours' time the news of what had been done spread far and wide, and so effectually did it frighten the natives that they ceased to go to the Dutch factory town thereafter unless they had business there. They supposed that if they passed that line and made any trouble, they would be subject to the penalties of the fetich, whatever they might be, and they were no doubt all the more terrible because their precise nature was not known. One of the chief uses of fetich by the factors on the Congo is to recover stolen articles of value, for unless the loss be considerable it often costs more to recover it by this means than it is worth, though the chief has invariably to pay the cost of prosecution if he can be held to do it.—Boston Herald.

OF GENERAL INTEREST.

—The Spanish-American belle has her photograph taken every time she gets a new dress—at least so says a Buenos Ayres correspondent.—Chicago Journal.

—The New York Herald predicts that the c[illegible] day when the last of the telephone poles will have to go. Business men in the East are throwing them out.

—Among the Indian tribes one in four die of consumption, a larger portion than among the white or colored races. Consumption is more prevalent among the Irish than any other race.

—If, according to a New York coin collector, a complete collection of American cents is cheap at five hundred dollars, how much would a good collection of common sense be worth?

—Agriculture is a dangerous business in California. Recently a squash broke loose from a vine, rolled down hill, smashed in a side of a barn and killed a horse.—Chicago Times.

—A Worcester County woman, whose husband is a dentist, engaged a man to saw wood for her, and when the job was done told him she hadn't got any change, but the Doctor would pull a tooth for him for nothing some time.—Boston Traveler.

—"All life is a joke to the Japanese," says Lieutenant Wyckoff, of the Hydrographic Bureau, who lived in Japan for five years. "During all that time I never saw any one angry. I hardly believe that they could lose their tempers if they should try."

—The amenities and sweets of journalism are found in the Southwest. Thus the editor of the Richmond (Mo.) Conservator thanks a friend "for a basket of superb grapes, sweet as the honey of Hybla and dusky as the cheek of a daughter of the Upper Nile."

—An electrician asserts that in bodies in which life is not extinct the temperature rises upon the application of an electric current, but never in the case of actual death. This fact supplies a test for use in cases where life is suspected to remain in persons apparently dead.—Chicago Herald.

—Many thousands of tons of cotton seed, once considered valueless, are now sold from ten to twelve dollars per ton. In seven months ending last August, $1,828,771 worth of cottonseed oil was exported to Europe from the Southern States, or about twice as much as during the same period of last year.—N. Y. Post.

—Some one has come forward with a new arm of defense in the shape of a steel shield which can be attached by a sort of sleeve at the extremity of a rifle. Each soldier, instead of having to throw up a "cover" at every place he may be halted under the fire of the enemy carries his cover along with him, ready for use at any moment.—N. Y. Tribune.

—The monument at South Coventry, Conn., erected to the memory of Captain Nathan Hale, the martyr spy of the Revolution, by Coventry citizens in 1846, is being taken down and rebuilt at the State's expense, the action of the frost having pushed out of position some of the Quincy granite blocks of the structure, and also somewhat soiled its surface.—Hartford Courant.

—An old coffee machine has been patented in London. A lamp beneath boils the water for infusion, and at the same time roasts the berries, which, as roasted, are automatically emptied into a hopper and ground by a mill attached. Thus the whole process of roasting the green coffee berries, grinding and infusing the same, is simultaneously performed within about fifteen minutes.

—"We make a detour of a mile," writes a correspondent of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, "to drive by the homes of Chiefs White Ghost and Don't-Know-How, neat, two-story houses; one frame, the other logs, with shingled roof, in the Crow Reservation. The owners are both out, but we read over the door the ambitious sign that has become famous:

"MR. D. K. HOW,
"Dry Goods and Provisions."

—The question of the right to hiss in theaters has lately been brought to trial in France. At the Lyons Casino a poor singer was applauded by the claque; a member of the audience expressed his disapprobation by vigorous hissing, and was arrested therefor. The Judge decided in favor of the defendant, and was supported in his decision by the superior court, on the ground that one member of an audience has as much right to express his dislike of the performance as another has to manifest his approval.

—Surf bathing has developed a new danger, says the New York Commercial Advertiser. Recently a young woman was found on a Coney Island train who, on examination, proved to be demented. The matter was explained by her relatives thus: While bathing at Long Branch during the summer she was struck violently on the side of the head by a large wave, and since then has been subject to fits of temporary insanity. Perhaps most sickness can be traced to surf bathing than is generally supposed.

—The general interest in the yacht race for the America's cup shows how near the people in all parts of the country have been brought together by telegraph and railroad since the day when the America won the trophy—over thirty years ago. Then the interest in the victory was confined to the Atlantic sea-board; but now the race between the Genesta and the Puritan is an affair of almost as much interest among people of the prairies who never saw a ship as among those whose lives are spent within sight of the ocean.—Chicago Current.

—Porpoise leather is a novelty as yet, especially when used in the manufacture of shoes. It has been largely used, however, in making shoestrings, owing to its great strength and pliability. It has a long, tenacious fibre, and, as it will not crack and tear, it makes an excellent leather. When made up into a shoe it greatly resembles French kid. It wears like iron and would be suitable for boys' shoes. It is entirely waterproof, and very cooling to the feet, making it excellent for summer wear. The skins cut from five to six pairs of men's vamps. The leather is hemlock tanned.—Exchange.

ACHES! PAINS!

"I ache all over!" What a common expression; and how much it means to many a poor sufferer! These aches have a cause and more frequently than is generally suspected, the cause is the Liver or Kidneys. No disease is more painful or serious than these, and no remedy is so prompt and effective as

MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS.

No remedy has yet been discovered that is so effective in all KIDNEY AND LIVER COMPLAINTS, MALARIA, DYSPEPSIA, etc., and yet it is simple and harmless. Science and medical skill have combined with wonderful success those herbs which nature has provided for the cure of disease. It strengthens and invigorates the whole system.

Hon. Thaddeus Stevens, the distinguished Congressman, once wrote to a fellow member who was suffering from indigestion and kidney disease. "Try Mishler's Herb Bitters, I believe it will cure you. I have used it for both indigestion and affection of the kidneys, and it is the most wonderful combination of medicinal herbs I ever saw."

—In Havana cigar manufacturers pay their hands three times a day.

—Codfish are swarming in Shasta River, California, where they were never known before. They bear a remarkable resemblance to salmon.—San Francisco Call.

—It is proposed to utilize the motive power of the Montmorenci Falls, near Quebec, to operate a railroad to the miraculous shrine of St. Anne which yearly attracts eighty or one hundred thousand visitors.

—A Texas editor complains of a hook and ladder company recently organized in his neighborhood. The editor intimates that the ladder is used for getting into windows after dark, after which the hooking is done.

—The swiftest large river in the world, according to a traveling correspondent, is the Sutlej, in British India. It has a descent of twelve thousand feet in one hundred and eighty miles, an average of about sixty-seven per mile.

—While some colored hands were packing cotton near Monticello, S. C., an iron bolt weighing nineteen pounds fell a distance of nine feet and struck one of them on the head without causing any perceptible injury.—Atlanta (Ga.) Chronicle.

—The Jacksonville (Fla.) Herald reports that a most excellent lady says that she has practiced the following rule for twenty years with never a failure: "Trim your finger nails every Friday, and you will never have the toothache." But perhaps the most excellent lady had no teeth.

—Horse cars in Brazil are called "bonds," from a peculiar circumstance, which illustrates how words can be popularized. When started by some Americans, the bonds of the company were first offered on the market, and everyone talked of them. When the horse cars, or mule cars, arrived they appropriated the name of bonds.

—The latest "propah capah" in London society (where there are imitative dudes, as here) is to affect American accents and inflections. The Springfield (Mass.) Union submits for the benefit of our English brethren two specimens of the genuine thing, such as "Wal, I swow," and "Ainter feelin' right smart peert terday; on'y tollerble."

—La Nacion, a Buenos Ayres paper, contained an announcement, signed by eight physicians, that connection by telephone will be made on application by any patients requiring medical attendance at night. The fee for a visit after eleven p. m. would seem somewhat large in our latitude—thirty dollars—but it is not thought to be exorbitant there.

—It appears that in Philadelphia the names of applicants for marriage licenses are not to be given out for publication, on the theory that, whatever interest the community may have in the marriage itself, the agreement to marry is a private matter, which should not be made public except with the consent of the parties immediately concerned.—Philadelphia Press.

—The industry of a honey bee working a clover field is something wonderful. Each clover head has sixty separate flower tubes, each containing about the five hundredth part of a grain of sugar. There are seven thousand grains to a pound, so that the bee must have sucked the contents of three million five hundred thousand clover tubes to have gathered one pound of honey.—Chicago Herald.

—The amended game law of Colorado says that insectivorous birds shall not be killed at all (except patridges, pheasants, prairie chickens, prairie hens, and grouse, and these only between October 1 and November 15). "No person shall kill or wound, entrap or snare any elk, deer, buffalo or bison, fawn, or antelope, between the 1st day of January and the 15th day of October in each and every year." Mountain sheep can not be killed for ten years from April 7, 1885.

—I have peeped into quiet "parlors," where the carpet is clean and not old, and the furniture polished and bright; into "rooms" where the chairs are neat and the floor carpetless; into "kitchens" where the family live and the meals are cooked and eaten, and the boys and girls are as blithe as the sparrows in the thatch overhead, and I see that it is not so much wealth and learning, nor clothing, nor servants, nor toil, nor idleness, nor town, nor country, nor station, as tone and temper that render homes happy or wretched.—Dr. John Hall.

—Mr. D. A. Coffin is the most truthful if not the most facetious hotel keeper in Maine. He advertises on his envelopes: "The original and only third-class hotel-keeper in Maine—where everything fails to suit—tough beefsteak, dirty rooms, useless servants, debilitated coffee. This house, of world-wide bad reputation, is owned, occupied and presided over by the laziest man in the State. Satisfaction not guaranteed; no money refunded. Dilapidated stable in connection. Everything warranted strictly shoddy."—Boston Journal.

Dumas' Liberality.

The elder Dumas was asked to contribute a louis toward the funeral expenses of a poor huissier or bailiff. "Here are forty francs," said Dumas, "bury two." He was, as everybody knew, most liberal. "I have never refused money to anybody except to my creditors," he would often remark. One day Houssaye was at breakfast with him at Monte Cristo, when an actor's wife, poorly attired, but too timid to ask for assistance, called upon Dumas. The latter understood the situation at once. "My poor child," said he, "the sun is very fierce just now. How can you walk without a sunshade?" And he slipped a five hundred franc note into the young woman's hand, adding: "Go and buy yourself one." As she moved off he concluded, merrily: "If you will come and see me on a rainy day I will give you enough to purchase an umbrella."—Christian Union.

—Hamilton College has in its museum a series of ivory figures delineating the stage of the opium eater's descent through emaciation and degradation to death.

—There is some demand that the schools return to the old-fashioned system of oral spelling, as being better in its results than the method by which students are taught words as a whole.—Chicago Current.

—The United Methodist free churches represent the union of three denominations of Methodists, and they constitute the youngest of all the organized offshoots from the old Wesleyan body. There are 76,385 members and 382 preachers.

—The Free Church of Scotland has determined to found a permanent church in Geneva, the city sacred to the memory of John Calvin and the sphere of the labors of John Knox. The services are to accommodate the English speaking people. A number of Americans reside in this city.

—"Young women get more culture and young men more special facility in college. The broader education must always be literary—must deal chiefly with concepts and their expression, and women pursue the literary education while men more and more specialize with reference to some bread-winning craft." So says Dr. D. H. Wheeler.

—The whole educational question appears to be resolved into this formulation: Plain simple instruction in the elementary principles. No cramming. No fancy studies. Short lessons, well prepared. If any genius be developed, seeking higher methods and wider culture, he will, with the weapons provided, make his way. But it is folly to overdo instruction with the average mind, which, like some Virginia land, described by John Randolph, is "poor by nature and ruined by cultivation."—Augusta (Ga) Constitutionalist.

—Wisely said once a tough old sea-Captain to the assembled passengers at the ship's table: "You've got to take things mighty early; the first week I was married me and my mother-in-law had a rough and tumble fight to find out which one of us had married her daughter, and I guess I settled it."—Boston Herald.

—The marvelous fowl.

The oracular owl
Is a very wise fowl.
He sits on a limb
By night and by day.
And an eager assembly waits on him
To listen to what the wise bird may say,
I heard him discourse in the following way:
"The sun soon will set in the west,
'Twill be fair if the sky is not cloudy,
If a hundred are good, only one can be best,
No gentleman's ever a rowdy."
"Ah! ah!" cried the birds, "what a marvelous fowl!
Oh, who could excel this oracular owl?"

The Unpardonable Offense.

The other day the steward of one of our clubs solicited an interview with a member. It was granted, and the steward stated, with a reluctant and shamefaced air, that a certain young Englishman, well known about town, and who had been introduced to the club as a guest by the member in question, had borrowed money from him (the steward) and refused to repay it.

"How do you mean by borrowing?" demanded the member. "Did he ask you?"

"Yes, sir."

"When?"

"Several times."

"And how much does it amount to altogether?"

The steward produced a memorandum. It was for $5, in three installments. The club man gasped: "Good heavens! I thought he was a gentleman," and fainted. He paid the bill when he came to, and told me next day: "If it had been a hundred or so I might have forgiven him, but now I shall never speak to him again; no, never, upon my honor!"—To-Day.

Outcast London.

Much excitement has been made by reports recently published on the vile condition of the slums of London. In a cellar was found a family consisting of a man sick, with small-pox, his dying wife, three half-naked and dirty children, and one pig. In some parts there is one gin-mill to every hundred persons. What defilement! Yet corresponding impurities often defile the human blood. They can be cast out by Brown's Iron Bitters, the great strengthener and purifier. Mr. B. J. Strange, of Stark Lake, Florida, says: "Brown's Iron Bitters is the best blood purifier I ever tried. It gives all the satisfaction a man can want."

After a druggist has filled a perscription it belongs to him, and not the customer who brought it to his store.

Captain Mitchell, of the bark Antonne Sala, New York and Havana trade, came home in May, entirely helpless with rheumatism. He went to the mountains, but received no benfit, at his wife's request began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. He immediately began to improve; in two months his rheumatism was all gone, and he sailed in command of his vessel a well man. Sold by all druggists.

You will notice how quickly a thoroughly successful article is imitated, and also that the imitations are without merit, as they are gotten up by unscrupulous parties. Price fifty cents.

Many a man who had lost nerve, vigor and energy, has been cured by Hunt's Remedy.

Four score years and ten have not seen the equal of Ely's Cream Balm as a remedy for Catarrh, Colds in the Head, and Hay Fever. It works like magic, giving relief at once, and permanent benefit. A thorough treatment cures the worst cases. Apply into the nostrils.

We have sold Ely's Cream Balm about three years, and have recommended its use in more than a hundred Special Cases of Catarrh. The unanimous answer to our inquiries is, "its the best remedy that I have ever used." Our experience is, that where parties continueed its use, it never fails to cure.—J. H. Vassar girls ate 692 pounds of candy last year. Sweets to the sweet. But alas! they ate also forty bushels of onions.

It is seldom that a medicine is efficacious in such a long list of diseases as Michler's Herb Bitters has proved itself. Consumption, dyspepsia, liver complaint, every form of fever, jaundice, scrofula, and other complaints yield speedily to its powerful effects. S. Weaver, of Perryville, Md., was cured of neuralgia and bleeding piles, and his wife found it invaluable in a case of fever and ague.

CATAARH—A NEW TREATMENT.

From the Montreal Star.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 3000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety percent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished he claims the Catarrh is practically cured and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The Application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.

BONDED EMPLOYES.

How Embezzlements are Checked by Surety Companies—A Possible Example.

Clason Graham drew the money on a check for $26,000 signed by his employers, Spencer Trask & Co., oil brokers, and took a train for Omaha, but was stopped on the way only four hours later both man and money being back in New York next day. The quickness of suspicion and action in the case of a man whose reputation had been good was due to the fact that he had given bonds to the firm for honesty, and his bondsmen were one of the several guaranty and fidelity companies that have lately come into use here in New York. These concerns insure employers against loss through the thefts of employes, and relieve the latter of the often difficult task of finding available friends to take the risks. No less than six thousand men are already bonded in this way by the companies, among whom brisk rivalry has already arisen. Visits to their offices show large premises and numerous clerks, indicating far more labor than would be requisite for merely making out the papers and dealing with the customers up to the point of completing the bonds. The explanation is that the most elaborate systems of watching the insured men and registering their behavior are in operation, and already the extent and thoroughness of this espionage has become an acute nuisance to its subjects. To feel that his every action may be under surveillance by a spy is annoying in many cases even to men of well behaved and much disliked of the new order of things are developed. But there is no escape, because the existence of the company is a provider so to speak, an average for individuals to become honest, in the sense that there is no escape.

Railroad employes, bank clerks, company officers and all others in financial offices are already more or less involved before making the round in personal charge to be investigated, as fully as possible, but there is no complete protection, for the company has already lost ten thousand dollars through Paying Teller Charles A. Hickey, of the West Side Bank, and Teller F. J. Diederichs, of the Laclede Bank, St. Louis, both of whom were above reproach. The preference is for companies of institutions subject to State supervision annually rather than the guardians of money for private firms. Nearly all the men in the New York post office and over that those in minor capacities of trust are now insured in companies. The charges range from one half to one per cent on the amount of insurance. The principal business is legitimate. Every insured person is watched and very closely too. If the slightest suspicion of dishonesty is asserted, for instance, in the case of Clason Graham, a hint or a rumor that he was becoming a stranger about town at night and apparently was spending more money than his salary could provide. At the moment when he passed the big chess a spy and a man in sight and followed him and took the train. The detective telegraphed to the company that he was going to go, too, and would look for orders at Springfield, where the train would make its first stop. Hasty inquiry of Spencer Trask & Co. brought out the fact that Graham was absconding with $26,000 and word was wired to Springfield to arrest him.

A feature of the new business is a registry called the "List of Prevarications," in which the particulars of every obtainable case of prevarication or actual misdoing by an insured man are noted. The books of the institution contain about twenty thousand names. Another fourteen thousand and there are not less than fifty thousand altogether thus recorded, comprising cashiers, bankers, public officials and other functionaries. The amount of money stolen by trusted employes is not known of by the public as proved by the aggregate of nearly three hundred thousand dollars paid from the office. But the bondsmen are aware of their positions, and the consciousness of being under surveillance has become one of the common sensations of their lives.—N. Y. Times.

CONFUCIUS.

The Religious Doctrines of the Great Chinese Philosopher.

It may be asked, what was the religion of Confucius himself? It must be answered, he accepted what he found without laying stress upon any special doctrines. While recognizing an unseen divine power, he yet never spoke of it as personal. He believed in spirits, conformed to ceremonies and did not check special prayers. Once, when sick, his friends asked that prayers should be made for his recovery. "Is that," said he, "the proper thing to do?" "It is so set down," they answered, "in the sacred books. Address your prayers," etc. He thus uttered this memorable sentence: "The prayer of Confucius is constant." Men observed that he sacrificed to the dead as if they were present, yet he evaded all questions concerning them. "Shall we serve the spirits of the dead?" they asked; his answer was, "If you can not serve men, how will you serve spirits?" "I venture to ask about death," said a disciple. "You know nothing about life, how can you know anything about death?" "Have the dead knowledge?" still urged the eager student. "You need not know whether they have or not," said the master, "there is no hurry, herself you shall know." He taught, we find, divers virtues, letters, morals, devotion and sincerity of heart, but amid stories of unnatural feats of dexterity, abnormal states, and the existence of spiritual beings, he shrank from discussing. Yet the instant the sphere of practice was touched the trumpet gave no uncertain sound. "Without obeying the ordinances of heaven (i. e., the moral law), it is impossible to be a superior man." "He who sins against Heaven, to whom can he pray?" "No man knows me. I do not complain. Heaven alone knows me." This is the nearest approach I find to the recognition of a personal God, and it does not amount even to monotheism as taught by Moses.—Good Words.

DIED.

NICHOLS—Tuesday, Nov. 24th, 1885, at her home in Tecumseh, Michigan, Mrs. Margaret L. Nichols, widow of Rev. Erastus N. Nichols.

This estimable woman was the daughter of Capt. Isaac Littell, an architect and builder of New York. She was born in New York city Sept. 12th, 1799. In 1817 the family removed to Auburn. Upon the death of her father in 1819, she accepted an invitation from Rev. Dr. Lansing to make his house her home, and remained with him until 1827. On Nov. 1st, 1827, she was married to Rev. Erastus N. Nichols. They came to Tecumseh in 1836. The death of Mr. N. occurred Feb. 17, 1882, since which time Mrs. Nichols has been in feeble health, and at length in a good old age she has been taken home. She became a christian in a revival in Auburn the year previous to her marriage.

Her husband has left the record that as a wife she was "affectionate, patient and the companion through all the lights and shadows of a responsible life." She was dignified yet kind in her deportment and is remembered with affection by those who knew her. Her christian character was consistent and she retained her christian hope and welcomed always the voice of prayer in her sick room.

This has another place been made vacant in the society of our pleasant village which has been long and honorably filled. W. H. B.

HOAGLAND—Lena M., died in Ridgeway township, Dec. 4, 1885.

She was the only daughter of Thos. V. and Hettie Hoagland and was very loved and dear to her parents. She was not expected to live as well and therefore her death was peculiarly a sad one. Four children are left to mourn the irreparable loss. We have the sincere sympathy of all and be comforted by their heavenly father. The last sad rites were performed Sunday, Dec. 6, at the home of the parents, by Rev. Wright, pastor of the Christian church, in a very appropriate and solemn manner. Extract, a portion of one of the hymns, and highly appropriate will express what she was to that home:

"She was the queen of our home
A daughter that shone so bright;
The flower in our garden bower
A thing all shades and light."

The parents also wish to express their heartfelt thanks to their many friends for their kindness in their great affliction.

The new volume of Cassell's Family Magazine, which begins with the January number, will contain three serial stories, "A Willful Young Woman," by Jessie Fothergill, of "High Life," by the author of "When the Tide was High," and "Hachiko's Sacrifice," by Frank Barrett, author of "John Eden."

HOLLOWAY HAPPENINGS.

A very distressing accident occurred here on Saturday last, the circumstances of which are as follows: Chas. G. Babcock, a farmer living two miles south-east of here, on the Wells' farm, brought his hogs to the station and started to return home just as the express train was pulling through. One of his boys was in the wagon with him and the other had hold of the rear end board trying to climb in.—Mr. B. was looking around at the boys and failed to notice the train, which was running at a high rate of speed, as it does not stop here, and just as the wagon was fairly on the track the engine struck it, completely demolishing the wagon and throwing Mr. B. as high as the smoke stack, catching him on the pilot as he came down. The boy was thrown about fifteen feet into the air and alighted nearly one hundred feet from where he was struck. When the train was brought to a stop Mr. B. was found to be fatally injured about the head. He was carried into the depot where he remained until a jury was impaneled, after which the remains were carried home. Strange to say the boy escaped with a couple of scalp wounds and a little bruising of the face. The remains were taken to Morenci on Tuesday for interment.

The December number of THE DECORATOR AND FURNISHER, is one of the most elaborate of all the Christmas magazines and one of the best in an artistic and practical sense, that this publication has given us. It has evidently been the policy of The Decorator and Furnisher to notice, in illustrations and descriptive articles, the various rooms throughout the house in a more or less defined order, so that it would only be necessary to look over the back numbers or examine those that are yet to come in order to get any kind of information that may be desired upon any particular furnishing or for any special room. In the December number there is a beautiful colored plate, showing an apartment decorated in Moorish style, and there is a supplement giving the studio of Frank L. Kirkpatrick, the artist. There is an elegant design for an Entrance Hall, a most interesting account of the Produce Exchange, with sketches of its new building, an illustrated paper on Chantilly, design for a kitchen, Decoration of City Houses, Christmas decorations, designs for Cabinets, Mantels, etc. A magnificent Ceiling and frieze from a new Brooklyn house. Articles on Furnishing Country Houses, Picture Frames, Art Events, Curtain Hanging, and a vast number of other valuable and interesting pieces. The magazine is published at 30 and 32 East 14th Street, New York City.

In Huron county, Ohio, last week, Judge Wickham presiding, a number of Bohemian oat cases were decided. Owners of notes given by farmers sued on them. The judge held that the notes must be paid. Those were cases where farmers bought oats at the usual extravagant figure, giving their notes with the understanding that the Bohemian chaps were to sell the oats for the farmers who gave their notes for seed, deduct from the proceeds the value of the notes and return to them the handsome surplus. The Bohemians failed to sell the oats, but there was no failure about their selling the notes at a small shave. Then the honest yeomanry of Huron county kicked, and set up that the notes being without consideration, were void. The judge, however, held that the notes must be paid to the persons who purchased them they being unconditional, the only redress being against the Bohemian oat men they had made their agents. If they could not collect of the agents they must fall back upon the principals, and they themselves being those principals they could only proceed against themselves—a poor source of satisfaction—and could not escape the payment of the notes their agents had sold.—Adrian Record.

BURSTING A CROWN WHEEL

In the Globe Mill—Serious Damage to the Machinery—Estimated Cost of the Repairs.

A break in the machinery of the Globe mill occurred last Monday forenoon which will cause several days' time and several hundred dollars expense to repair. Tuesday we dropped down to the mill to inspect the scene of the damage, and after looking over the pieces we were quite astonished that no more damage was done, and that no injury resulted to any of the hands in the mill.

When the mill was first built there were two large overshot wheels, each of which furnished the motive power to propel 4 run of burrs. The pit wheel at the east end of the water wheel shaft, about eleven feet in diameter, mashes into a crown wheel on the main upright shaft, which weighs half a ton or more. Upon this shaft was a large spur wheel some ten feet in diameter, driving four runs of burrs and two sets of rolls. Through the eye of the crown wheel and resting in a socket below was stationed the main upright shaft which ran up through two floors and conveyed the motive power to much of the machinery. When the rollers were put in, two more pinions were attached to the spur wheel to run the rolls. The origin of the break was caused by the point of this main upright shaft breaking off, thus throwing the large spur wheel east among the pinions, and breaking the crown wheel into many pieces; also breaking the large pit wheel at the shaft of the pinion that drives the two sets of rolls and splitting the upper coupling of the main upright shaft. Mr. Hayden himself was standing near the main shaft on the first floor when the crash came, and it rather stirred him up. He didn't know but the Salvation Army had struck ile in the basement. In less than a minute the water was shut off, but the mischief had been done.—The pinions were all more or less displaced and will need overhauling.

The repairs will be made in the following manner: A similar crown wheel was originally connected with the north overshot water wheel.—When the turbines were put in the mill a few years ago extra machinery was put in, connecting therewith, with which to run the bolts and some of the rolls. Since then the latter crown wheel has remained idle. The plan is to remove this wheel and put it in the place of the broken one.—But this is no small task, for several timbers and a lot of heavy shafting in the basement must be removed. This is the plan adopted however and the work is being rushed as rapidly as a large gang of men can do it. The main shaft has been taken out and taken to Brewer's foundry to be repaired.

It will take about two weeks to put the mill in running order again and the expense will reach seven or eight hundred dollars. If a new crown wheel had to be purchased it would add about five hundred dollars to the damages. It is the worst break the old mill has experienced in over twenty years.

If you are suffering with any form of female diseases, do not throw away time and money on doctors and patent medicines, but inclose me a stamped envelope (addressed to yourself), and receive a free cure. Address, Mrs. Clara B. Wright; 78 E. Eagle Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

The bachelor editor of the Hudson Gazette moralizes thusly:

We secured a load of wood Tuesday. We did for a fact, and while it lay at the foot of the stairs not less than nine boys popped into the office during school hours exclaiming: "Say don't you want that wood carried up?" Every one of those youngsters ought to have been at school.

Monroe Democrat: In a certain case during the recent session of the circuit court, after the judge had delivered his charge, making as clear as possible the law, the jury retired to wrestle with the facts, their consciences, the lawyers' arguments and the judge's charge. After 'mature' deliberation a verdict was rendered that surprised everybody except the jury, but none more than the attorney for the prevailing party. On meeting one of the jurors the usual congratulations were exchanged, and the attorney inquired how, in the face of the charge of the court, he received such a verdict. "Well, you see," said the juror, "we were unanimous of the opinion that the court was mistaken in the law."

BABY IN HEAVEN.

When Day has burden of toil and care
Has laid at the golden gate of the west,
And the purpling haze fills the air,
And the bird and the bee have gone to rest—
I wonder then, mid the tender light,
Who's taking care of baby to-night?

If somewhere above, in the far-off sky,
Is the home where my baby stays to-night,
As I watch the place of light on high,
I wonder what rapt, golden light
Falls on that unknown dwelling where
Lveth my baby, golden-hair.

Whose is the voice that lovingly
Tells what her questioning soul would know?
Whose is the hand that tenderly
Leads her where ardent blossoms blow?
In that happy land, so fair, so bright,
Who's taking care of baby to-night?

O soul of mine, couldst thou only know
What she has learned since she went away!
Wonders more great Heaven can show
Than have met the light of an earthly day;
The new, new song, the Glorious Name,
The harp, the crown, and the sea like flame!

I wonder if, when the burst of song
From Heavenly choirs first met her ear,
And she saw the countless, white-robed throng,
She thought of the love of her mother here;
Or if, in her fearless innocence,
She met the gaze of Omnipotence.

She went in the spring-time away from me:
And oft, as the skies bring the fair spring-time,
I long for the hour when I shall see
That happier land, that perfect clime,
Where these weary arms shall fold once more
My golden-haired one as in years of yore.

COSTLY MALE ATTIRE.

Some of the Expenses of a Possible Dude.

About this time of the year the frivolous young man rests his head upon his hands and wonders what he ought to wear, where he can get it and what it will cost. He has perhaps invested sixty-five dollars in a suit of clothes, and feels that, as far as the fit of his coat and the cut of his trousers are concerned, he need fear to look no man in the face. But still he is passed every day by other young men whose gorgeousness rests heavily upon his heart. What it is he can not tell. They have not paid more for that hat than he did; his cost eight dollars, and that is the top price. Nor are they better looking, nor taller, nor have they handsomer legs. In spite of all, however, they have reached a degree of perfection which the young man feels that he can not reach. The flower in their button-hole seems at home there; their collar seems made by an artist, and the splendor of their yellow gaiters escapes comment, so well does it correspond with the splendor of their gloves and trousers, cravat and cane.

If the young man thinks long enough and is bright he will arrive at the conclusion that the other young man owes his superiority to these very things—the gaiters, cravat, etc.—and the young man will be right, for these things are the trimmings. They lift one youth above the other, as the little slices of carrot, bits of raw potato and delicate carving of the rind which decorate the ham ministered to by a French cook render it superior to its plain boiled brother, although they may have been mates roaming the same pen.

The representative store in the city is on Broadway, not far from the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and near enough to Delmonico's to be easily reached in bad weather. Startling socks and blinding cravats hang in rows in the windows, with here and there a pink dressing-gown to tone down the gorgeousness. As you enter you are met and beamed upon by a young man who combines all the most startling points of the show windows, the cravat of a frenzied red, the ear-rasping collar, and the blue silk vest. One glance convinces you that to remove his shoes would reveal a wealth of blue silk socks, with lillies of the valley embroidered upon them. You ask for a handkerchief or three collars, and your modest order is filled with deference and a pleasure that seems very sincere. The bundle is done up, and the young man begins bowing you to the door. This makes you say: "Dear, dear, this young man could not work in my store; he has no enterprise." But you do not yet know the young man. His are not the vulgar methods of the every-day clerk, who tumbles over a pile of goods and rattles off: "Socks, shirts, underwear? Anything else I can do for you?"

The young man is an artist, and he waits for an opening. It comes when your eye falls upon silk underwear marked "eighty dollars a suit," and you strangle and cough. An expression of deep pain settles on the young man's face. He taps his silk vest delicately, murmurs tearfully: "Weak chest, dangerous weather, dress suit, sure death," and pulls down a fancy box. Packed away in it are queer things made of quilted satin, and resembling very large chest protectors. The artist takes one out, straps it around his neck, and, while you stand fascinated, explains how admirably it would protect your lungs while wearing a dress suit, and how it would preserve your shirt bosom from dirt. If your eyes do not express admiration, his words change from loudest praise to biting criticism.

"You do not like it, of course," he says, "nor do I, to be frank. Most unpleasant to advertise the weakness of one's lungs to the world, and apt to act as a damper upon the ardor of one's fiancee. But kindly look at this."

And then he drags down another box, and arrays himself in a garment queerer than the chest protectors. It is a vest, cut as all vests usually are, except that it is wonderfully high in the neck, and is nearly all "back," the only substantial part of it being a piece of flannel, oval in shape, meant to cover and protect the lungs also. That, the artist explains, is to be put under your dress shirt, and saves your lungs without in any way undermining the affections of your loved one.

Near to the chest protector is a box, also very good, with a lining made of paper which looks very much like lace. The salesman pulls from it a handkerchief, unfolds it as tenderly as though it were his last one, and begs of you to look at it, as the light shines through it. You observe that you can see about as well as though the handkerchief were not before your eyes, and that the threds that cross each other with surprising regularity suggest the threads in a cobweb. This makes you think the handkerchiefs are probably very fine ones, and that $9.80, the price you paid for your fine handkerchiefs, would probably not buy you a dozen of these. But nothing in the plain piece of linen, with no ornament but a hemstitch border, prepares you for the staggering remark by the young man. His face lights up with joy at the bargain he is offering you, and he says: "Those beautiful hand-woven handkerchiefs are only sixty dollars a dozen. Please look at them as the light shines through them once more."

You do so this time with much reverence, and ask, in an off-hand way, what nose requires such pampering. Many noses, the clerk will tell you, among them that of Mr. Whitney, the Secretary of the Navy, who knows a good thing when he sees it, but who is sometimes satisfied with goods as low as forty-eight or fifty dollars a dozen. Some of their best customers would not condescend to take up any such bargain, and would fail to be suited in the store, which just happens to be out of the very finest grade of linen. This grade, with a modest profit attached, costs one hundred dollars for a dozen handkerchiefs, or more if a monogram is desired. You sternly refuse to invest in a dozen of the bargains, even to present to a friend, and then the young man, rather more cheerfully than before, leads you with delicacy and grace to the rear end of the store, and arrays himself in a garment which he calls a wrapper, and which seems to have been made of a slice of rainbow, cut off when the rainbow was in a particularly high-colored state. The main color is a delirious sky blue, with flowers of all the colors you ever saw blossoming on it, and vines of an æsthetic assortment of tints that balk the imagination. The young man explains that the gentleman who has just laid it down is one of a family of German bankers. He wanted a present for a lady, and wanted something a trifle richer. The price of that work of art was only ninety dollars, and it would soften the heart of any living female. You explain that ninety dollars invested in strawberry and vanilla mix would beat any wrapper in the opinion of your girl, and the young man, concluding that you are sordid, turns wearily away and pulls down a pair of cotton socks. At last you feel at home. Here is a cheap avenue of escape; you will buy all the cotton socks in the store and get away without wounding the young man. But in the midst of your happy thought your blood is chilled by the request to look at those socks as the light shines through them. You know what that means, and, sick at heart, you inquire "How much" without caring whether the light shines through or not. "Only thirty-two dollars a dozen," the young man says; "absolutely the finest thing made in the world," and he calls your attention to the fact that with a pair of the socks in your right hand and a piece of tissue paper in the left hand you can not tell the right hand from the left. No silk sock could be woven as fine as that, and many gentlemen will wear nothing else. Their feet are so small that the size of their shoes renders such socks necessary.

"Certainly, if you prefer a silk sock, you can have it," and the young man hauls out endless pairs, each a dream of loveliness, from the rather inferior article at three dollars a pair, which he could, of course, not recommend, to an article that you will find serviceable and satisfactory at seventy-two dollars a dozen.

If you escape the silk sock snare, you are dazzled with a series of snowy white shirt bosoms of wonderful patterns; some curiously embroidered, which you are confidentially warned against wearing; others with little linen knobs sticking out all over them, to imitate the fashion of rough goods for ladies, and others in the good old styles that you have been used to. Then comes the ordeal of gazing on what seems about one million cravats, every one different; as many scarf-pins, and twice as many collars and cuffs. Everything is from London or Paris, with all sorts of coats of arms stamped over foreign names. Roaring beasts prowl around, uttering the sentiment "Honi soit qui mal y pense," which is a thrust at any one who may not approve of their actions; and the statement, "Ich dien," is always to be found near the lions, with three little feathers backing it up, the young man tells you that "Honi soit qui mal y pense" is the ma of "Ich dien," and that both wear just such gloves as he is offering you. Under these circumstances you knuckle down, invest a week's fun in a pair of gloves, with three small mounds of black thread on the back of each, and escape with a sigh toward the door. But it is plain you do not yet thoroughly know the young man whom you despised. You flit pervously past the eighty-dollar underwear which first unsettled you, and glancing timidly around as you pass a case filled with canes you meet the smiling eye of the young man and it pins you. He hands you a beautiful cane with a Chinese head of oxidized silver and a queue braided of silver threads. Mechanically you raise it to the light and beg to know how much a dozen. But as you frame the question you push up the Chinaman's queue, and from the Chinaman's mouth a jet of cologne spray bursts forth and shoots into your right eye."

As you fly out into the cheap world once more, rubbing your eye, you look fondly at your handsome trousers, wondering how much they would be worth with the light shining through them, and contentedly wipe the tears from your eyes with the handkerchief that came at the rate of nine dollars and thirty cents a dozen.—*N. ETIQUETTE IN VIRGINIA.

The Exquisite Politeness of Genteel Rural Virginians.

The Virginians lose a good deal of that worthless commodity, time, in the observance of the most remarkable code of etiquette ever invented. It used to be, and in a measure is still, considered the height of rudeness for one person in driving to pass another person on the road. It will be seen at a glance the result of this system. The slowest coach on the road could keep all the others behind it; and it will also be seen that time and distance were relatively of no importance. Even now, when Virginia has been hustled and jostled along in that great movement called progress, the people yet apologize when they pass each other on the road. It has also been alleged that a really high-bred Virginian never so far forgets etiquette as to inquire of a stranger where he was from, because the stranger might be forced to acknowledge that he was from some other State than Virginia, and it was only charity to spare him this mortifying admission. It is a hotly-disputed point, and has been for the last two hundred years, whether a guest spending the night with his host should make the move to go to bed, or whether the host should. The opposite sides on this momentous question were taken by two ancient cavaliers in these parts. At Eagle Point the host always proposed to go to bed, and at Warner Hall the host invariably waited for the guest to advance the proposition. One night it came to a test. The master at Eagle Point went over to Warner Hall to spend the night. Midnight came. Both host and guest remained politely oblivious of the flight of time. One by one the family and other guests dropped off. Still the two old gentlemen sat up and conversed amicably, and were evidently prepared to die in the last ditch for their principles of etiquette. The whole night passed. They replenished the fire and the candles, but never alluded to the going-to-bed question. At daylight the next morning, when the darkey came in to make the fire, there sat the two old Trojans; conversation had never flagged, and they were still hard at it. It was one of those rare tests which satisfies both parties, as each was never tired of telling how he got the best of his adversary and forced him to sit up all night rather than yield an iota of principle. It would be a mistake to think that these harmless peculiarities keep the Virginians from being agreeable. On the contrary, they are singularly courteous, considerate and without angles. The strict attention they pay to the small, sweet courtesies of life is wonderfully quaint and delightful after the hurry, the rush, the economizing of politeness one meets in the busy haunts of the world.—*Cor. STRANGE LAWS.

Tobacco Presented to Every Jury in the District of Columbia.

There are some peculiar customs in connection with the administration of the courts of the District of Columbia, relics of the old Maryland laws, but one which strikes the ordinary observer as the most peculiar is that which requires a winning party to a civil suit to pay for the tobacco that the jury which tried the case is supposed to have used during the hearing of the case. Now, it happens sometimes that not one of the jurors uses tobacco in any form, and yet the pound of tobacco or its equivalent has to be paid the foreman of the jury the instant a verdict has been given. As litigants or their attorneys are not in the habit of carrying so much tobacco in their clothing, for custom requires a pound be given the jury, the lawyer on the winning side as soon as the verdict is recorded hands the foreman of the jury one dollar, which is just as good as the pound of tobacco. Sometimes a jury will try several cases in a day. If they do they will get one dollar for each case from the winner. The juries put all their tobacco money together, and at the end of the term divide it among themselves, reserving a sufficient sum to buy for the foreman of the jury a cane, some kind of a present for the bailiffs who attend the jury and a bouquet for the Judge who holds the court. The jury has legal claim for the pound of tobacco in every case, but there is no case recorded where the tobacco has been refused and a test case was made. On the criminal side of the courts the Judges can, if they desire, impose fines of pounds of tobacco instead of dollars. The penalty for wife beating is from ten to one hundred pounds of tobacco under the old laws. The old laws, however, are seldom if ever entered, for most of them are supplanted by modern ones. Under the former the courts can pierce a hole with a red-hot iron through the tongue of every one who blasphemes the Creator, but they do not do it. There is, however, just as good law for it as there is to hang persons in this District.—Washington Cor. N. Y. Herald.

An Infamous Swiss Custom.

They do queer things in Switzerland, considering that the Swiss eulogize their country as "the land of liberty." The children of poor people are regularly hired out by auction in most of the cantons. There was a most painful scene recently in the market place of Biel, a town near Berne, where, in spite of the heartrending entreaties of a widowed mother, her four young children, ranging from two to ten, were "placed" out for a year to the highest bidder by the public crier; the family being thus broken up and separated for fear lest the woman should be compelled to seek for assistance from the town. This is really very nearly as bad as the old slave sales in America; and I should doubt whether there is any other country in Europe where such an infamous system exists at the present time.—London Truth.

WHITE INDIANS.

Whites Acquiring Indian Rights by Marrying Red Women.

An intelligent Indian recently, in reporting the marriage of an Indian octoroon to a white man, said: "If this process goes on, we will soon have the whitest race of Indians you ever did see." The accomplished daughter of the old missionary, Dr. Robertson, married a full-blooded Creek. Her sister has secured money at the East to establish a seminary among the full bloods, and it has been a question where the seminary could be located to meet the object aimed at. Parties stopping from the train at Vinita, within the Cherokee Nation, the only railroad crossing in the Indian Territory, commonly ask: "Where are the Indians?" On being told that those they see about them are Indians, they reply: "No. They are not Indians. These are white men."

By marrying an Indian maiden, the white man secures all the rights of Indian citizenship. The "headright" of the girl helps the matrimonial contract. To hunters for land, those looking for wide ranges for cattle or agriculture, the temptation is very strong to take this short cut to get an extent of soil they could never hope to secure in any other way.

The encouragement given to the whites on the part of marriageable Indian females is quite observable. They think that by marrying white men they gain socially, and have a prospect of an easier and better cared for life. And they think rightly. In all depressed civilizations, women have a hard time of it. The Indian men do not like this constant raiding through their land and capturing the most attractive of their race, whom they would woo and wed, but they can not help themselves, and retaliate by stealing the affections of the white girls and marrying them. White girls entering an Indian reservation are very soon picked up; not so often by full-blooded Indians; but after the process of intermarriage has commenced, not so seldom by half-breeds, quadroons and octoroons.

White persons who marry into Indian blood almost invariably remain on Indian soil. The white man, in defense of Indian ideas of communal interests and Indian questions as related to the whites, becomes more intensely an Indian than the Indians themselves. I think the fiercest defenders of the tribal system are white men who by marriage have become Indian citizens and are making money out of it. The large crops on Indian lands are invariably raised by white men. Four-fifths of the mechanics are white men, brothers-in-law to the Indians. So on both sides the process of dilution of Indian blood goes on until it becomes very thin, while Indian habits and Indian characteristics still remain.

The common notion among Indians is that Indian blood never runs out, and that wherever the slightest trace of it can be found, there the fullest rights of land and privilege follow. For a man who has one-sixteenth or one-thirty-second part of Indian blood, the claim for his right as an Indian is asserted as for the full-blood. A white man has married an Indian girl, a light blonde, of one-thirty-second Indian blood. His children will be one-sixty-fourth Indian. The family consists of five members. On account of that one-thirty-second Indian blood, that family of five, located on the border of the Indian land, is entitled, by equal division of the tribal land, to five times nine hundred and ninety-five acres, or four thousand nine hundred and seventy-five acres.—Toledo Blade.

TURQUOISE.

Where the Valuable Mineral Is Found and How It Is Mined.

The first historic record of turquoise mining in Persia occurs about the tenth century, A. D., and for ages has been one of the most important sources of wealth in that country. The Persian name for the stone is tirvoz, and the mines now worked are the same as those worked eight hundred years ago. They are found in Kerman and Khorassan, though the former are now almost abandoned, the light green color and early fading making them of small value. These mines are of great depth and access to them is hazardous. The Persians and the people of the United States prize the darkest stones, while in Europe those of a fine light blue, of medium intensity, are preferred. The former are more rare and retain their color longer. Although in general, size has much to do with the value of a torquoise, color is the final test that fixes the price. There is a torquoise now in the bazaars no larger than a pea valued at eight hundred dollars. All the mines in Persia are farmed by officers connected with the Persian Government. They pay a yearly rental to the Shah of eighteen tomans, or thirty thousand dollars. There are no other mines known in modern times that have produced stones of noted value, or in any quantity, except the mines of New Mexico. The New Mexico mines are two in number, and are located about eighteen miles southwest of Santa Fe, in the Cerrillos mining district, being known as the Chalchuitl and the Castilian. The history of the former mine is very interesting, associated, as it is, with the earliest Spanish conquests, where avarice and cruelty resulted in bringing about great loss of life and many reverses to the Spaniards.

This mine was probably largely worked by the Aztecs more than three hundred years ago, so that in 1540, when Coronado and his followers penetrated into this country and captured (after a severe siege) the present city of Santa Fe, then a populous Indian village, their cupidity was aroused, and enslaving their poor captives for more than a hundred years, the gloomy recesses of the mine were thickly populated by the hapless race, lashed by the most cruel of taskmasters.—Mining World.

MARY ROGERS.

A Mysterious Crime Which Has Been Preserved by Edgar A. Poe.

The contest over the will of John Anderson, the millionaire tobacconist, has revived interest in the tragic story of Mary Rogers, whose death caused such a sensation many years ago and gave Edgar Allen Poe the material for his story of "The Mystery of Marie Roget." The unfortunate girl was employed by John Anderson in the days when he kept his little tobacco shop in Broadway, and, as was revealed by the testimony of ex-State Senator Mattoon, in the trial of the will case, the millionaire was, during the latter days, possessed of the delusion that he held almost constant communication with the spirit of the murdered girl. At the time of Mary Rogers' mysterious death, suspicion attached to many people of being her murderer. Among those suspected was John Anderson, though there never was a scintilla of evidence that he was the guilty person.

In the days when Poe was a young man in New York the mother of Mary Rogers kept a boarding house in Nassau street. Mary's father had long been dead, and Mrs. Rogers' only fortune was her tact and ability to make both ends meet. Mary was possessed of a beauty of form and feature that made her well known in the city, and when John Anderson engaged her services as saleswoman in his tobacco store his trade was materially increased. It was considered the proper thing for all young men of fashion to buy their cigars and tobacco at Anderson's, and to be on familiar terms with Mary Rogers. But there was not a breath of suspicion against the good character of Mary, and all the town was wild with surprise when she suddenly disappeared from behind John Anderson's counter, and no one knew what had become of her. Conjecture had almost died out when one day the pretty cigar-seller appeared at her old place behind the counter, and to all inquiries answered that she had been on a visit to an aunt in the country. Things went along their old way for awhile. The young bloods with ruffled shirt-fronts and high coat collars bought their cigars at Anderson's, and laughed and talked with Mary. But the "maiden glee and sport" of the beautiful girl seemed all to have left her since her visit to her aunt in the country, and she had a preoccupied air of sadness.

One Sunday she left her mother's house, saying she was going to call on a relative who lived in another part of the city. There was a young man boarding with her mother at the time, named Payne. He was the accepted suitor of Mary, and when she went out that Sunday she told him to call for her at the house of her relative in the evening. It rained that night and he did not go, supposing that Mary would remain at her relative's house over night, as she had often done before. The aged Mrs. Rogers seemed to have a presentiment of what was about to happen, and said soon after her daughter left the house: "I fear I shall never see Mary again." The next day Mary did not return, and on inquiry at her relative's house it was found that she had not been there. All trace of her was lost until four days after, when her body was found floating in the Hudson near Weehawken. The marks on the body left no doubt but that she had been murdered. A great sensation was caused, and the detectives followed up every possible clue. In a thicket on the Jersey shore near where the body was found were discovered the gloves, parasol, and part of the clothing of the murdered girl. It appeared at first as if the thicket had been the scene of a struggle, but on close inspection it was decided that the place had been arranged carefully to give it that appearance.

Just before this time mysterious boats had been seen on the Hudson. One of them was manned by a gang of roughs who committed all sorts of outrages. Anonymous letters were sent to one of the daily papers pointing to this boat's crew as the murderers of Mary Rogers. It was also discovered that Mary had been in the habit of meeting secretly a man with a gray beard, and that she had been seen with a young naval officer on several occasions. It was alleged that she was in company with this officer when she first disappeared from Anderson's tobacco shop on what she subsequently said was a visit to her aunt. After the murder a rudderless boat was picked up on the Hudson near where the murder was supposed to have taken place and taken to the barge office. From there it mysteriously disappeared. Mary Rogers was last seen alive on Sunday. On Monday an empty boat, with the sail and oars lying in its bottom, was seen floating down the river below Weehawken. The young naval officer accounted for his whereabouts from the time Mary left her home until her body was found, and the mystery of her death became deeper than ever. For a long time the detectives worked on the case and the people talked about it, but as time wore away with no clearing of the mystery, it was gradually forgotten, and would have shared the fate of other mysteries of a great city had not Poe written his story of "Marie Roget." Finally it transpires that the unquiet spirit of Mary Rogers was in the habit of haunting her old employer in his declining years. The mystery of her death was never solved.—N. Y. Tribune.

—A distinguished German physiologist denounces the night-air superstition. "Sleeping with open windows," he says, "is most unjustly decried among people, as well as night air in general. But night air is injurious only in swampy regions, whereas on dry soil in the mountains and everywhere in the upper stories of a house it is more salubrious than day air." "Draughts," he adds, "are not injurious unless we are in a glow. To healthy persons it can not possibly do as much harm as the stagnant air in a close room. The fear of draughts is quite groundless, though it affects most people in a manner which is simply ridiculous."

It is said that every bride that visits the White House receives an elegant bouquet.

The business of the present Congress should be to attend strictly to business.

Let us have the silver dollar, but make the silver dollar worth 100 cents. Isn't this about the right doctrine?

The light is beginning to dawn upon both Democratic and Republican Bourbons that Grover Cleveland is running his own administration.

The Chicago Herald says: "The common salutation in Utah is no longer, 'How many wives have you?' but, 'How many times have you been in the penitentiary?'"

Between the assembling of Congress, the President's message, and the death and funeral of Wm. H. Vanderbilt, the newspapers were pretty well supplied with material last week.

No one can read the President's manly and courageous language on the civil service question, in his message, without coming to the conclusion, that so far at least as his influence can go, civil service reform has come to stay.

Fadover has kindly favored us with the information that Mrs. Fadover is indisposed this week. The old lady, however, ventures the opinion that a cold wave is approaching from Manitoba, and that during the next ten days coal and pancakes will have an upward tendency.

The vigorous language of the President in his treatment of the Mormon question will strike a responsive chord in the hearts of law abiding citizens everywhere. He says:

The strength, the perpetuity, and the destiny of the nation rest upon our homes, established by the law of God, guarded by parental care, regulated by parental authority, and sanctified by parental love. These are not the homes of polygamy.

The best criticism we have seen on the President's message is that of the Adrian Record.

The president's message is well suited to be read by men of abundant leisure, who by diligence might finish it in a couple of days. For business men it would last some time. But it is the president's first message and he must be excused for letting himself out. We should be as lenient as the merchant whose clerk excused himself for absence without leave to attend the funeral of his father. "I'll forgive you this time, but don't let it occur again, was the mild rebuke.

The Springfield Republican, a mugwump newspaper, has this to say about President Cleveland.

The President works hard, and it is said has a better mastery of his office and duties than any of his predecessors since the war. He is so much in earnest that he will not rest until he understands the matter before him, and for that purpose he is constantly sending for members of the Cabinet. They are called at all hours of the day, and the relations between them and him are very cordial. There is not a word of truth in the charge that Cabinet changes may be expected, and the only question of fiction is dispelled by parental support he gives Vilas in his message on the mail subsidy question.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12, 1885.

The Forty-Ninth Congress is now five days old. Its opening scenes were repetitions of those of other openings for years past. Eager crowds rushed to the Capitol undetermined whether to lend their presence to the Senate or the House of Representatives. There were many handshakings among the old members, and as usual the new ones were conspicuous for their self conscious attempts to appear statesmanlike and at ease.

The session began with 330 Representatives present, and 64 Senators. This is considered excellent attendance for the first day. Speaker Carlisle took his seat as presiding officer at one end of the Capitol, and Senator Sherman at the other.

In the Senate, the sombre drapery around the Chamber, in memory of Vice President Hendricks, contrasted markedly with the gay floral gifts which covered the desks of many Senators, and the vari-colored costumes in the galleries.

The first day was taken up by the House in organizing, sweating in the members, and drawing seats. As usual at the lottery of seats, the members retired behind the circle of desks and waited impatiently, like so many school boys, while a blindfolded page drew from a box the numbered marbles which corresponded to the numbers attached to their names.

The second day's session was devoted principally to the reading of the President's message in both the Senate and House. It occupied one hour and forty minutes. It was a much longer document than was expected. Senators listened attentively to the message, and the President's course in devoting more than one fifth of it to a review of the silver question, was commented upon. The absence of any recommendation respecting the internal revenue was criticised. Approval of the Mexican commercial treaty was received with surprise. The absence of any argument for subsides was a disappointment in the lobby. The Indian policy was approved by those interested in the civilization of the red man.

The President's treatment of the Mormon question met with almost unanimous approval. It created some stir among the representatives of the Mormon church in this city. As soon as that part of the message was read, Delegate Caine, of Utah, ran out into the lobby and held a hurried consultation with the man who is understood here to be the Mormon lobby agent. Then Mr. Caine hastily prepared a dispatch to the Mayor of Salt Lake City telling him that the President was inflexible in support of the anti-polygamy laws.

During the reading of the message in the House, scarcely a member left his seat for the first hour. Most of them paid close attention, but when the reading went into the second hour seats began to be vacated on the Republican side of the Hall.

Comments upon the message from Representatives were varied and characteristic. When Mr. Randall was asked how he liked it, he replied:—"Very much, very much." Representative Long, of Massachusetts, said:—"Of course I like it, it's long." The Republican members generally said: "It is sound and clear on Silver and Civil Service, but on the Tariff, vague and unsatisfactory." On the whole it may be said that there is nothing in the document to precipitate a conflict among the Democrats in opposition to the Executive.

The Congress which began this week has an opportunity to make for itself a great name. How far it will improve its chances can be told better when it adjourns next summer. Weighty subjects call for settlement. Besides those questions alluded to above in connection with the message may be mentioned the protection of the public domain, foreign immigration, the succession to the Presidency, railroad legislation, the treatment of the private claimant, a national bankrupt law, strengthening the Navy, and a dozen other important matters. The Senate has already set several of these measures in motion. The House also has received a flood of bills, old and new, but no real work must be expected of that body until it can revise its working rules. This may consume all the time prior to the Holiday vacation.

THE LATE RAILROAD KING.

WHERE HE WILL FINALLY BE BURIED.

Some time ago Mr. Vanderbilt began the erection of a family mausoleum in the Moravian Cemetery at New Dorp, Staten Island. The mausoleum, which is shut off from the cemetery, is situated on the summit of a high knoll, the most prominent site for miles around. The tomb is of Quincy granite after a design by Richard M Hunt. It is of the Romanesque style 100x110 feet on the surface to the apex of the domes, of which there are two. The exposed portions of the structure are of Quincy granite, while the vestibule and catacombs are built of marble and the lofty arches and piers of limestone. It required about 8,000,000 pound of granite, marble and limestone combined to complete it. The cost is estimated at $250,000. The finishing touches were put to it but a very short time ago, and the dead man visited it only last Saturday.

HIS FIFTH AVENUE PALACE.

His home is a palace of which a Doge of Venice might have been proud. It cost him about $2,000,000. It is a brown stone and is more elegant than showy in appearance. It has a fine gallery of paintings which is open to artists and others at certain intervals. Here are examples of the best work of contemporary artists both in this country and in Europe; here are canvasses by Corot, Messonier, Daubigny, Jean Francois Millet, Delacroix, Whistler, Moran, Milais, Watts, and others, not to mention the sculptors represented. Mr. Vanderbilt is said to have been a better judge of paintings than some had supposed.

The appointments of his palace—for it is nothing less, are elegant, not to say gorgeous, in the extreme. One of the bronze doors is said to have cost $80,000, and the bronze railing around the house $60,000. It is located at No. 640 Fifth avenue and extends from Fifty-first to Fifty-second street; it is one house divided into two portions; that on the corner of Fifty-first street was occupied by Mr. Vanderbilt himself, while in the other end at Fifty-second street, reside two of his daughters with their husbands. One married William D. Sloane, the carpet dealer, and the other Elliott F. Shepyard, the lawyer. But it happens that the splendid house is overdecorated. It is too too, as the early esthetes would say. There is scarcely a spot big enough to place your little finger nail that is not covered with some device the result of money and art.

Mr. Vanderbilt had been in the habit of giving art receptions, and tickets for these were eagerly sought by connoisseurs and society people. Very recently, however, he announced that he would give no more public views of his art works, and for the last year the treasures which he had collected from two continents have been visible only to his intimate friends and visitors of the family. His collection of contemporary and other French art he valued at over $1,000,000. A grand fancy-dress ball was given in the mansion the night of March 26, 1883, and on this occasion, for the first time, the actors and other shining lights of the first society of the city appeared in Mr. Vanderbilt's drawing-rooms. The ball was the event of the season, and was said to have cost the opulent host $40,000.

THE CONTEST OVER THE WILL

The contest of the will of the late Commodore Vanderbilt, in which Cornelius J. Vanderbilt's sister, Mrs. La Bau, was the contestant, was one of the most protracted and bitter controversies ever heard or determined in an American court, and lasted over 280 days. By the terms of a will executed in January, 1875, the Commodore made his son William H. his principal legatee, giving to his wife $5,000,000 in cash, some other bequests to his other relatives, and to Cornelius J. the income only of $200,000 to be invested for his benefit. In a codicil executed in the same year he extended the bequests by giving to the grandsons, William K., Frederick W., and George, $2,000,000 each. It was claimed that the Commodore was mentally weak when he made the will.

Although no really authentic statement was then made as to the terms of the settlement, it became generally accepted that William H. Vanderbilt had consented to give Cornelius J. and Mrs. La Bau $100,000 each and an allowance of $250,000 for the liquidation of their council fees and other legal indebtedness. Facts which subsequently came to light, however, showed that the settlement actually made was not reached until May, 1879, and that so far as Cornelius was concerned, his brother William H. had merely provided for him a handsome income.

THE CROSUS OF THE WORLD.

Mr. Vanderbilt died possessed of wealth which seems almost fabulous. His fortune was at one time placed at $200,000,000, and it is believed that he was the richest man in the world. In January, 1883, he told a friend that he was worth $194,000,000 and added, "I am the richest man in the world." In England the Duke of Westminister is said to be worth $200,000,000, but it is mostly in land and houses. It does not pay him 2 per cent.

This was an unusual instance of boastfulness on Mr. Vanderbilt's part, as he was generally very non-communicative in regard to his financial condition. A year ago it was known that he had $54,000,000 in Government 4 per cent bonds, but this was reduced $35,000,000 partly to aid his sons, who had lost $10,000,000 in Wall street. He afterwards purchased $10,000,000 more of the 4 per cents, and he had besides $4,000,000 in Government 3½ per cents. It is said that his Government bonds are worth $70,000,000. He owned, in addition, $22,000,000 worth of railroad bonds, $8,200,000 of State and city bonds, and had $2,000,000 in manufacturing stocks and mortgages. He stated to a friend that his ordinary expenses a year were $200,000.

A Wall street man, referring to his wealth said: "From his Government bonds he draws $2,372,000 a year; from railroad stocks and bonds, $7,394,000; from miscellaneous securities, $570,695, total, in round numbers, $10,350,000 a year." His earnings were thus over $28,000 a day, $1,200 an hour, and $19.75 a minute.

PENSION OFFICE REFORM.

The following dispatch from Adrian to the Detroit Free Press has been going the rounds of the State Press:

"Mr E. A. Milliken has just received an original certificate for pension granting him $50 per month, commencing from date of application in 1884. For five years he has not been out of the house and has had to be lifted to and from his bed. He has suffered with chronic diarrhoea, contracted in the service, but would never apply for pension. Finally the disease superinduced spinal difficulty, and until within a short time he has not been able to sit up, and has been totally helpless. Latterly he has been able to get around in an invalid's wheel chair and spent his time in fancy painting. The allowance of $50 to a private soldier, from date of application, is probably the first instance on record. Never was a pension more welcome, and never was one more worthily deserved."

There is a history connected with this matter which will be of interest to old soldiers, for it shows the difference in the pension office methods since Gen. Black has taken control.

As is the case with the most deserving of the pensioners Mr. Milliken made no application until it was a matter of absolute necessity. About three years ago he made application, and his attorneys and friends have written letters to the department. Congressman Eldredge—who, being a gallant soldier himself has always been ready to do anything for a man who wore the blue—also took an active interest in the case and visited the department several times to hurry the case up. But under the Republican administration all that could be secured was a supply of blanks that did not fit the case, and a succession of requests for additional testimony which the peculiar circumstances of the case made it impossible to supply.

When we were in Washington we visited the pension office in company with postmaster Stearns, of Adrian, and had the case looked up by the chief clerk. He promised to see that it was laid before Gen. Black for special examination, and judging from the past we expected to hear from it about next spring. In two weeks from the day we called at the pension office the above dispatch showed that the case had been acted upon.

At the same time, in compliance with a request from a Petoskey constituent we looked up the matter of Geo. S. Richmond, which had been before the department for twelve years! We found that the former administration had pigeon-holed the papers in a certain division of the Edward department. In a couple of days we had the matter in the hands of a competent Department superintendent of the Michigan rooms, and last week Mr. Richmond received the pension which Republican mismanagement has so long deprived him of.—Harbor Springs Independent.

Wide Awake for December 1885.

The holiday issues of WIDE AWAKE always are beautiful numbers, gift-books in themselves, worthy of permanent binding. This year two "pastie-sketches" in three color-tones, modeled for the magazine by the Messrs. Low, of the Chelsea Art Tile Works, make the Christmas number an art-treasure, and to accompany these unique illustrations there is much instructive gossip about "tiles" in Miss Harris' article, "Fire-Place Stories," which has eighteen pictures. The magazine opens with "Brother Bruin," a humorous poem by Christina Rossetti, with exquisite drawings by Garrett. Elizabeth Stuart Phelps follows with the most charming of "Trotty" stories, illustrated by St. John Harper. F. L. Stealey, a Western writer, has a touching Christmas story of miner's life, "Little Captain" of Buckskin Camp." "Little Deborah's Work in the Secret Service" is a story of the Revolutionary War, chronicling one of those acts of courage which women and children in all ages have undertaken in time of war. The first of Mrs. Sherwood's "Royal Girls and Royal Courts" is very entertaining and instructive: it describes the behavior of some pushing American girls at the Italian court, and the amazing "letter" giving is said to be a copy of one actually sent to an American minister. Three good serials open: "A Gift and a Jewell," by Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford; "A Midshipman at Large, by Talbott; and "Dilly the Captain," by Margaret Sidney. A series of historical stories, by E. S. Brooks, relative to popular holidays, is also begun; the first is "Master Sandy's Christmas Snapdragon," a tale of King James, Whitehall, and Sir Walter Raleigh. Howard Pyle illustrates this series. The Chautauqua Readings are specially interesting—for instance, Elizabeth Robins Pennell describes "A Roman Christmas," which Joseph Pennell illustrates.—Wide Awake is $3.00 a year. D. Lothrop & Co., Publishers, Boston, Mass.

CLINTON CHRONICLES.

Miss Fannie Prichard, of Tecumseh, was visiting Clinton friends the first of the week.

Miss Ida Sutfin, of Tecumseh, has been passing a pleasant time with her friend Grace Spafford, coming here on Friday last and returning on Monday.

The cutters have commenced their usual gliding over the "beautiful" and the tinkling of the bells remind us of the approach of the "kittie-ide," and young America is jubilant.

Miss Maud Eccles, of Tecumseh, was the guest of Mrs. Chas. Clark, of this village, Saturday and Sunday.

There were no services at the Congregational Church last Sunday evening, but a large attendance at the M. E. Church, disclosed the fact that we have a church-going people, and that the above society was well represented there.

William Bennett, son of our new baker, is having quite a serious time, being unable to leave his bed, from some irregularities of the blood that his physician says comes from the heart. He had a very sad experience all through the summer from the effects of an abscess upon his neck, which was at one time very painful, but had nearly recovered from that, when the new outbreak put in an appearance and placed him in the condition named above.

A number of the friends and schoolmates of Lottie Gardner, assembled at her home Monday evening and enjoyed an evening with her guest, Miss Fanny Prichard.

We cannot see any reason why, with three good poultry dealers, Clinton should not be a good market for the ready sale of that holiday staple. Joe, Will and George are a lively, energetic trio, and are raising havoc with the feather-bearers.

The quarterly meeting at the M. E. Church, on Saturday, although not as well attended as might have been wished, was ably conducted by the presiding elder of this district, and we have failed to meet with a person who was present that did not pronounce the occasion one much to be appreciated, the general verdict being, those who were absent from no just cause, were the loosers of much good.

The first of the series of club dances at town hall, took place last Friday evening and is pronounced a No. 1 feast of enjoyment by all who participated therein. The boys were somewhat disappointed to learn at the very last moment that they were not to have the music they supposed they had secured, for the reason that Mr. Smith had overlooked a previous engagement for the same date, but other music was obtained and they went on with the dance. A number of young folks from neighboring villages were present and helped to swell the number of dancers. The next party will take place at town hall one week from to-morrow evening, and preparations are making for a merry christmas for all who would enjoy a first class party.

Mrs. M. Stanclift and daughters, Hattie and Jessie, looked over the curiosities at Tecumseh last Friday afternoon.

The M. E. Church was filled with an appreciative congregation last Sunday evening to listen to the presiding elder of this district. Many were present from other denominations and the Sacrament was administered by elder Joslin assisted by the pastor, E. P. Pierce, and all who believed, and had a desire to do so, were kindly invited to partake.

Miss Ada Stanclift was obliged to relinquish her work at the woolen mill, because of sickness, and has had quite a serious time of it, but we are glad to learn she is able to be about again.

Clinton lodge, No. 175, F. & A. M., hold their regular meeting at their room over town hall, Saturday evening, Dec. 19th, 1885.

Dressed pork is coming in quite freely, and is sought by our buyers who are on the lookout for its appearance, and make for its possessors before they fairly reach the commercial mart of the village. They are paying from $4.25 to $4.30 per hundred.

We were sorry to learn that Prof. Henry Gordon, who came here in the interest of vocal culture, and is pronounced by good judges, an excellent instructor, did not succeed in obtaining sufficient encouragement to warrant him in proceeding with the venture. Clinton is possessed of many good voices that need only cultivation to place them at the head of the list, but the fact is, the call for dimes from other sources—so often, of late—bar the wish of those who have this talent and in consequence about one half of our churches have very poor music or none at all.

Dr. Burchard left Clinton on the Tuesday afternoon train for New York, whither he was called to attend a law suit. He will probably be absent until the first of next week.

It is a little girl, and John T. Clark is the happy father of two girls instead of one, since Monday morning, but they are far from twins, as report first announced.

A man from a neighboring village was seen in the new market making a selection of meat, sausage, etc., last Tuesday, and remarked that he had known Rhefuss for many years and was confident that he wanted some of his make of sausage. That is the general verdict.

There are a class of boys! boys, did we say? We might class them as young men, did their actions not belie the assertion—that seem to think it funny to visit the hall in time of Sunday meetings, for the sole purpose of making a disturbance: nor is this all; they frequent the house of God Sabbath evenings, and make sport during the singing of hymns, and have been known to talk out loud, using a not altogether refined language, during the hour of prayer; and yet this is not the end, drunkeness, hilarity and gambling are practiced right before the eyes and in the hearing of our church going, Christ loving people while on the way to their various places of worship. Now this is not funny, and upon timely, sober thought, the same persons do not think so themselves, and the writer is of opinion—with the exception of a few younger ones, who get a "starter" from those more advanced—it would be different, were it not for whisky. This village is not an exception, as it has not been long since we read of committees being appointed by three churches in a neighboring town to look after these individuals. Will the authorities be able to turn the tide before we realize our situation only by being called upon to witness a facsimile of the Aaron Palmer tragedy, and others similar, occuring almost every hour.

Miss Kitie Abbott visited Tecumseh Tuesday, on the morning train, went down town, obtained the latest publications on dress-making and returned on the freight. How is that for a needle-plyer.

James Hogan is in Ann Arbor, attending court this week. We presume it is hard work for Jim, but should not be surprised if Richmond & Gadd received a heavy installment of cattle, sheep or hogs from that quarter; if they don't, it is because of the non-appearance of the animals during recess.

Frank Bird was in town Tuesday.

The merriest day draweth nigh.

Peck's bad boy is said to have put in an appearance here.

We are sorry to learn that John Hulet is on the sick list and is missed from his accustomed place, at B. O. Randall & Co's.

It is not an uncommon occurence—the unloading of a hog that registers 400 lbs. and upward, upon the tally sheet, at least so say our buyers, and neighbor Miles tells us of "a that weighed 550," but that was up in Bridgewater; the one that attracted our attention only tipped the beam at 438, but it did remind us of the time Chas. made the batch of doughnuts from a receipt in a cook book, and filled every available article from the dipper to the washtub with that commodity, while Mate sit quietly by and informed callers that he was getting ready for a picnic. If Charley only had that hog, we know there would be a Merry Christmas in that neighborhood—you see we are not selfish, we would not carry the hog home for it.

Wood has come into this market quite freely for several days, and the weather will admit of more without overbalancing the demand for that article.

The Clinton Band will go to Brooklyn and furnish music at the rink, afternoon and evening, and also, furnish string music for the merry Christmas gliders as they enjoy the dance, next Friday, Dec. 25th.

Go and see the Comedy at town hall, next Tuesday evening.

Turn out and show your appreciation of the band Dec. 22.

If you would enjoy a good, healthy smile out loud, see those Three Widows next Tuesday evening.

A turkey grab, is advertised at the Brooklyn rink, for Christmas eve.

E. G. Cook, of Tecumseh, was swapping jokes with his Clinton friends, Monday.

About sixty persons from abroad, were present at the Episcopal fair in town hall, Wednesday, and many of them were induced to tarry with friends and enjoy the evenings performance.

Bear in mind the high school public that takes place at town hall to-morrow evening, and be there. The program is a good one and will well repay you for the effort.

The M. E. social at the residence of Mrs. Priest, Wednesday afternoon, was well patronized, and much enjoyed by those who were present.

Conrod Nauman, of Manchester, was down Wednesday evening, practicing with the band, preparing for the Christmas trip to Brooklyn, on which occasion he is to accompany and assist them.

Mr. Codling, who formerly occupied the position of machinist in the woolen mill, we understand has obtained a like position elsewhere, and has gone to enter upon his duties, but we did not learn his destination.

Report has it that the weaving room at the woolen mill has changed "bosses."

The social given by the Congregational society, at the parsonage, Tuesday evening, was enjoyed by a large assemblage, from all directions, and the pastor, Rev. J. A. Barnes, was made the happy recipient of a splendid hanging lamp and five dollars in currency.

St. John's Church Fair.

The fair given by the ladies of St. John's church, was a perfect success. There was a fine display of goods in all departments, and we were informed the sales exceeded the expectations of those in charge.

The baby election was the leading feature in the afternoon, and over 100 votes were polled, but the result of the canvas was withheld from the public until the opening of the evening's entertainment, when it was discovered that baby Gibson, (Lyle's little one) was the lucky one, and baby Rowland, of Tecumseh, carried off the second prize, the vote standing 56 for the winner of the first prize and 50 for the gainer of the second.

The evening's entertainment opened with a song and chorus, "Miss Fogerty's Christmas Cake;" the song being executed by Kos. Davis in his best mood, as an Irishman at a Christmas dinner party was well rendered, while he was joined by several additional voices in chorus, describing the contents of that cake, and this was a feature in the evening program that elicited applause and called forth an encore that was only silenced by the production of the stanza that had been omitted.

The two-act drama was very good, and was given to the audience in the usual fine style, for which participants on the occasions of the annual Episcopalian fair productions, have been commented previously. Indeed, the parts were well assigned and all acquitted themselves to the entire satisfaction of their hearers.

Miss Blanche Smith favored the audience with a song, in a most pleasing manner, and merited the encore and praise so freely proffered from every part of the room by the multitude of listeners.

Miss Lizzie Brooks presided at the piano and is deserving of much credit for her valuable contribution to the happiness of a hall full of people.

TIPTON TOPICS.

People can hardly tell whether to go in a buggy or cutter in these parts. A little more snow would make excellent sleighing.

A coffee and cake social was held at the home of Mr. John VanValkenburg on Wednesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hauford will start Thursday for a visit with friends in Jackson County.

Mr. Wm. Smith of this place is moving to Tecumseh this week. He expects to remain in town during the winter.

Rev. Mr. Crane, of Addison, attended the quarterly meeting of the M. E. church in the absence of the Presiding Elder, Rev. T. J. Joslin.

Saturday, Dec. 5, Mr. John S. Burrick and and Miss Nettie Lambkin were united in marriage by Rev. Mr. Potter, of Tecumseh.

We understand the Young Ladies' Society of the Congregational church are to have a social next Friday evening for the purpose of selling their silk quilt. We regret to say we are unable to state where it will be held.

Franklin seems about to lose some of its best citizens. Mr. Ber. VanNess, who has been on Mr. Fradd's place the past year, has rented a farm four miles south of Tecumseh. He and his estimable family will move in the spring. Reuben Langdon we understand has rented his farm and expects to go north in the spring on account of his wife's health. Mrs. Langdon having been in very poor health for a number of years

THE EGGS THAT NEVER HATCH.

There's a young man on the corner,
Filled with life and strength and hope,
Looking far beyond the present,
With the whole world in his scope.
He is grasping at to-morrow,
That phantom none can catch;
Today is lost. He's waiting
For the eggs that never hatch.

There's an old man over yonder,
With a worn and weary face,
With searching, anxious features,
And a weak uncertain pace.
He is living in the future,
With no desire to catch
The golden Now. He's waiting
For the eggs that never hatch.

There's a world of men and women,
With their life's work yet undone,
Who are sitting, standing, moving
Beneath the same great sun;
Ever eager for the future,
But not content to watch
The Present. They are waiting
For the eggs that never hatch.

MONEY OR LOVE.

How May Haven Married for One and Gained the Other.

"Of course I have not married him because I was in love with him," said May Harriott, with a light laugh.

She was sitting in a gold-and-dun colored boudoir, hung with silken, fluted draperies and carpeted in pale gray Ambusson bordered with scarlet. The windows were full of flowering plants, an exquisite statue of Hebe occupied a marble pedestal in the middle of the room, and the panels of the walls, filled in with mirrors, reflected the young bride's every motion a score of times.

Flora Field, her old school-mate, sat opposite her, secretly envious of all this splendor and wondering that May Haven, who had taught in the same district school as herself, was not more elated at this sudden promotion.

"Well, then," said she, "why did you marry him?"

"Because I was poor and he was rich. Because I was tired of teaching and he offered me all this."

And May glanced around upon the luxuries that surrounded her.

"Nobody could be foolish enough to suppose it was a love-match," said she. "He's ever so much older than I am, and not at all my ideal! But I couldn't drudge on forever at my profession, and I think I've made a lucky exchange."

"May, you are a heartless coquette," cried out Flora Field.

"No, I am not," said May, with a shake of the lovely golden curls. "You would do just the same thing yourself, Flora Field, if you had a chance; you know you would."

And as May laughed out a sweet, defiant chime, she did not know that her silly words had had another auditor than Flora Field—that the door leading into the rich banker's study was ajar, and that he had heard every syllable she spoke.

It was quite true that Frederick Harriott was not a young man. He had passed the rubicon of middle age before he had allowed himself to fall in love and marry—and the flame burned all the deeper and more tender, in that the wood was mellowed by age! He had looked upon May Haven as little less than an angel and now——

"I should have known this before," he said to himself, with ashen-pale face and trembling limbs. "I should have divined that spring and autumn were ill mated. So—she married me for my money?"

"May," he said that evening, "I have tickets for the opera to-night. Would you like to go?"

"No, I don't think I care about it," said May, listlessly.

"Then we will remain at home, and I will read you that new poem," suggested her husband.

"I am tired of poetry," pettishly retorted May. "I do wish you would leave me to enjoy myself in my own way once in a while!"

"Do I bore you, May?" Frederick Harriott asked, with an inexplicable quiver in his voice.

"Awfully! I'm just in the midst of this delightful story and I can't bear to be interrupted."

"Very well. The offense shall not be repeated," said Mr. Harriott, quietly.

After that a subtle and sudden change came over his whole life. He was as courteous and attentive to his young wife as ever; but May felt that all the heart and soul were gone out of the little courtesies, the scrupulously rendered attentions.

For awhile she rather liked it. It was a relief to feel that his eye was not always on her, his thoughts following her. She could go where she pleased now and he asked no questions. She could employ her time to suit herself and he had neither criticism nor censure to offer. But gradually she began to realize that she had lost something which was not easily to be replaced.

May Harriott had regarded her husband's love as one of the fixed polar facts of her existence, and a cold chill crept over her heart when she fully perceived that it was somehow slipping away from her.

"Frederick," she said one evening, sitting opposite to her husband, "have I offended you?"

He glanced carelessly up from his book.

"Offended me, May? Why, what a ridiculous idea! Of course you haven't offended me."

"I—I thought your manner was somewhat different of late," faltered the young wife, bending her head closer over her embroidery.

"One can't keep on the honeymoon gloss forever," said the banker, indifferently.

Life is full of antithases, and love is the strangest complexity in life. For, as May Harriott grew strengthened in the idea that her husband was ceasing to adore her after the old idolatrous fashion, she began to fall in love with the one she had married for money.

Frederick Harriott was not young but he was in the prime of middle age. He was not boyishly handsome, like the wax heads May had seen in the barber's show-windows, but he had the port and mien of a prince. All women are prone to hero worship, and our little May was no exception to the ordinary rule. For the first time in her life she was falling in love—and with her own husband.

A few weeks only had elapsed when a crisis in the banking business had rendered it imperatively necessary that Mr. Harriott should go to Vienna for two or three months. Poor May looked aghast as her husband mentioned his intentions to her in the same cool, matter-of-fact way in which he might have criticised the weather.

"Going to Vienna!" she gasped. "Oh, Frederick!"

"My dear child, it is but a mere bagatelle of a journey! One doesn't mind travel nowadays. I shall not be later than November in returning."

"But—I may go with you?"

"You? My dear, don't think of it. My travel will necessarily be too rapid to think of encumbering myself with a lady companion. I must go and come with the greatest speed."

May said nothing more, but there was a blur before her eyes, a sickening sensation of despair at her heart. He cared no more for the society which had been dear to him once. Oh, what had she done to forfeit the love that had once been poured out so fondly on her life?

It was a rainy June twilight when the banker, wrapped in a dreadnaught coat and with his traveling cap pulled down over his eyes paced up and down the deck of the steamer Galatea, heedless of all the tumult of weighing anchor. Through the misty dusk he tried vainly to catch the ghostly outlines of the city spires—the city that held his young wife.

"She will be happy enough without me," he told himself, bitterly. "She has her mother and sister with her. She bade me adieu without a tear, and it may be that my continued absence will teach her to think less coldly of me. Dear little May—sweet spring blossom—my prayers may reach you, if my love can not."

And as the steamer plowed her way onward and the darkness deepened Frederick Harriott went below.

To his infinite surprise the stateroom he had engaged for his own behalf and use was not empty. A lady sat there with veiled face and drooping head. Frederick Harriott paused in surprise—the figure rose up, and throwing aside its veil revealed the blue, starry eyes and pale cheek of May herself.

"Oh, Frederick, pardon me!" she sobbed, throwing herself into his arms, "but I could not let you go alone! I love you, Frederick; I can not live without you. When I thought of you being alone, perhaps ill, in a strange land I thought I should lose my senses. Dear husband, tell me that you are not angry with me!"

And she burst into a flood of tears.

"My own May—my wife—my love! Close, close to my heart for evermore!"

And that was all he said.

May Haven had married for money; May Harriott had learned the secret of love!—Chicago Mail.

FRENCH-CANADIANS.

The Deeply Credulous Creatures to Be Found Among the Lower Classes.

There is no more deeply credulous being than the French-Canadian of the lower classes. Whatever mental life he has is still the life of a little child standing in the morning of the world. The age of faith has not ceased with him. That there should be places made holy by beatific visions, that relics should work miracles, that all sorts of local saints should have power to bless and all sorts of local devils power to curse, are to him among the deepest facts of life. Such beliefs are so wrought into his thoughts that he never can get outside their grasp. These come to him naturally from his religion, but he is full of superstitions besides. His churchyard is alive with ghosts. He easily credits any supernatural story. And Pierre was no freer from such ideas than were others. One of his most lasting memories was of a little sister of his who for a long time had always been dressed in blue, in fulfillment of a vow to the Virgin. She had been very ill, and his mother—the dear old maman who was now dead—had vowed to the Holy Mother, if she would but cause the child to recover, to dress her in this her favorite color for three years. There were many other instances of the same kind among the neighbors; indeed, it would not be too much to say that there was hardly one of them but could tell some tale which was not of this world.—R. Machray, in Atlantic.

Does Fish Make Brains?

A noted English physician has revived the lie that fish is valuable as a brain food. He knows no more about it than Mark Twain, who gave the following advice to a young author: "Yes, fish makes brain. Judging from your previous articles, you need a couple of whales—not the largest, but good, middling-sized whales." Once let the belief become general that fish makes brain, and the demand for fish will be so great that before long the fish would become an extinct animal, and then what would we do for a vacation? No, it's a great mistake. Neither fish nor any other food can supply the great natural deficiency of cerebral tissue which afflicts the modern man.—Medical Age.

Valuable Arkansas Hay.

A man while passing the house of an honest farmer saw a number of boys breaking a lot of switches from dead trees. The man was at a loss to know what the boys wanted with the switches; and was about to make inquiry of a passer-by, when the honest farmer came up to the fence.

"My friend," said the traveler, "why do you have those switches gathered?"

"Because they are valuable," the honest farmer replied.

"What, to be used for kindling fires?"

"Oh, no."

"Then, what do you do with them?"

"I bale 'em up, take 'em to Little Rock and sell 'em for hay."—Arkansaw Traveler.

WONDERFUL RIVERS.

Streams that Present Unique and Curious Features—A River of Ink.

A number of rivers that can be found in almost any atlas possess remarkable characteristics which entitle them to rank among the natural curiosities of the world. In Algeria, for instance, there is a small stream which the chemistry of nature has turned into true ink. It is formed by the union of two rivulets, one of which is very strongly impregnated with iron, while the other, meandering through a peat marsh, imbibes gallic acid. Letters have been written with this compound of iron and gallic acid which unite to form the little river. In Colombia there is a river which, by admixture with sulphate acid, becomes so sour that it is appropriately named Rio de Vinagre, or Vinegar River. Many varieties of fish abound in the large Orange River of South Africa until the river passes through a rocky region containing copper ores, below which the water is said to be poisonous and to kill the fish that venture into it.

"China's Sorrow" is the name that has been given to the great Hoang Ho, which rises in the mountains of Thibet and follows a wonderfully circuitous channel for two thousand five hundred miles to the sea. The waywardness of this mighty volume of water makes the river a constant source of anxiety and danger, instead of wealth, to 170,000,000 of people inhabiting the central plain of China. It is known to have suddenly changed its course nine times. It has moved its mouth over four degrees of latitude each time, emptying its vast floods in different directions and digging a new channel for itself where scores of villages had stood. It has greatly changed the physical character of a wide area, turning fertile regions into a sandy waste or making shallow lakes of them, in which nothing grows, and over which nothing can sail. Whether it is within the power of western science to save this great plain from disastrous overflows and changes of the river bed is a question that has been considerably discussed in England of late years.

Some recent explorers of Alaska tell us that the Mississippi can no longer be regarded as the largest river of the North American continent. They claim that distinction for the great Yukon River which, according to Mr. Ivan Petroff, who spent two years in Alaska collecting materials for the last census, empties into Norton Sound one third more water than the Mississippi pours into the Gulf of Mexico. The Yukon basin comprises the most of southern Alaska, and is a mile wide 600 miles from its mouth. Many centuries before it was visited by white men it very likely served as the highway into the interior of tribes who are believed to have crossed from Asia to this continent.

A very curious river is the Weibo Shebayli of East Africa, a deep and rapid stream, abounding in fish and crocodiles. Though it flows for hundreds of miles through fertile lands, the immense volume of water never reaches the sea. A little north of the Equator the river loses itself in a desert region a few miles from the Indian Ocean.

Very few great rivers have ever been thoroughly explored by going up stream. Travelers tried for two thousand years to find the sources of the Nile by ascending the river. By the time they had reached the difficult part of the stream their stores and energy were exhausted and they could go no further. It was only by seeking the fountain heads first by overland routes that Schwatka was only able to float down the Yukon, that Stanley mapped the Congo, and that Speke solved the secret of the Nile.—N. Y. Sun.

Bagpipes in Medical Science.

According to the United States Gazette a new use has been discovered for the musical instrument of torture called the bagpipes. Last year, it seems, a Spanish soldier was brought to the military hospital at Havana in a state of catalepsy, and for fifteen months he showed no signs of improving health. At last the doctors ordered the bagpipes to be played near his bed, whereupon the man promptly recovered consciousness and is now able to articulate. His first words, I should imagine, were not couched in the form of a blessing; but there may yet be a great future for the bagpipes in medical science. Their music may be strongly recommended to persons suffering from nervous or hysterical disorders, and, generally speaking, to maladies imaginaires of every description. Whether the disease or the remedy is the worst must be left to the judgment of the invalids themselves.—London Truth.

Old Men Doing Boys' Work.

The proprietor of a nut and bolt factory in West Tenth street advertised yesterday for "two men from fifty to sixty years of age to do boys' work." About twenty-five gray-haired men gathered about the office door at the hour named, although it was apparent that the two wanted would have to work at boys' wages.

"We wanted them to put nuts on bolts," said an employe. "We employed boys, but they were playful and inattentive to work. We thought that we might be able to hire old men, who were unable to do a man's work, at about the wages, and so have employes who would attend to the work better. They sit at their tasks, which are easy enough for girls to do. They make over a dollar a day."—N. Y. Sun.

—Two married sisters, one living at Newburg, N. Y., and the other in Michigan, recently both gave birth to a daughter on the same day. Each intended to surprise the other, and kept the coming event a secret. The same day the children were born they were named by the mothers, and a letter was sent from each family to the other, giving an account of the joyful event and the name of the child. The letters crossed each other on the route, and were received about the same time by each family. Strange to say, each mother had given her daughter the same name.—Detroit Tribune.

LENAH M. HOAGLAND.

Death could not seemingly come to a home at a time more unwelcomed, than in that dark and lonely night at the hour of one o'clock on Friday, Dec. 4th, 1885. Family alone, as no alarming symptoms were perceived, though under medical treatment and for some nine days in a sickness following the whooping-cough. When alone, so unexpectedly, this only bright and sweet little daughter of our dear brother and sister Thomas V. and Hattie Hoagland, (but eight and three-quarter years,) closes her eyes in death. How frequently this pretty little black-eyed girl, had attracted our attention in Sunday school and at church, while in attendance with her parents. This was indeed one of the most severe bereavements that could come to any home, and especially to that home where an only daughter had to die, and a lone brother must be left without a sister. Father and mother can say, and brother may say:

Lenah; thou art gone where the good angels are,
Even in Heaven above with Jesus to dwell;
Neither sin nor death's cold wave can enter there,
A sweet flower, to bloom in glory is Lenah.
Help Lord, though parted awhile, we we shall meet her again.

While as a community, as a church and a Sunday School, we would unite in extending our sympathies unto the dear family in this time of their sorrow; nevertheless, resting in the full hope of eternal life, let us most devoutly join with our bereaved friends to praise Almighty God, in view of the ample provision made in the gospel, through his Son Jesus Christ, who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." On Sunday, Dec. 6th, at the usual morning service, the services of the solemn funeral rites were conducted in the home, in Ridgeway, Michigan, by the writer, assisted by the Rev. Albert Godley, of Meroin, Indiana. Text: Matthew IX, 24th. The maid is not dead, but sleepeth.

Balch, Lenawee Co., Mich.

JOHN A. WILLIAMS.

The following article is clipped from a Jackson paper and portrays the misdeeds of an old Addison boy, whose name and face are familiar to most of our readers. We have known Mr. W. from our boyhood, and the event referred to created unbounded consternation here, as his previous conduct had been comparatively free from fault. It seems that after going west Williams applied himself to business in good shape, and for the sake of his needy family it is to be hoped he may be able to return home as early as possible.

Officer E. D. Winney arrived home Saturday night, having in charge John A. Williams, who was wanted here, and who was brought back on complaint of a farmer named North, who resides in the town of Addison, Lenawee county, and who complains that in October, 1882, Williams forged North's name to a note for $100. The Michigan Manufacturing company were also losers to the amount of $650 in money which Williams collected and then fled with the money in his pocket. On the day in question 3 years ago, Williams, who had been collecting for the Michigan Manufacturing company, came over from Addison to the company's office in this city, and was apparently ready to settle up, but as it was about supper time, W. F. Cowham told Williams that he had better come in after supper and they would fix things up. This Williams promised to do, and Mr. Cowham went to supper, and Williams went—to the far west or any place except Jackson, for he fled and his return in custody of the officer was the first the company have seen of him since that evening, three years ago. The matter was in Winney's hands when the Crouch case came on and that of course caused this affair to be lost sight of. Some weeks ago the officer discovered in some way that Williams was in Wells county, Dakota, and as North had made complaint against Williams for the forgery of a note, Officer Winney procured the necessary papers and started about ten days ago. The officer reached his destination Saturday the 21st. He found some trouble in getting Gov. Pierce to allow Williams to be taken from the state, as the governor considered the papers were not properly drawn, but finally after, causing the officer to make affidavit that Horace Hunt was a justice of the peace, and C. A. Blair a notary public, the papers were pronounced correct. As Williams knew Winney the latter called in the sheriff who proved to be Ralph Hall, formerly of Pontiac, Mich., and they started out to Williams' farm. Here they found that the latter was thirty-three miles from home running the engine to a steam thresher. A team was procured and the two officers started on their trip across the prairie, a distance of forty-nine miles. They found Williams and Sheriff Hall arrested him and brought him back to Jamestown, where his family were allowed to visit him and where a heart rending scene took place at the parting of the husband and father from his wife and children. Williams' farm is in Sykeston township, Wells county. The county last fall cast its first vote, and to give one the idea of its population it may be said that the total number of votes cast was 80 in the entire county. Sykeston is the only township regularly organized in the county, and Williams' nearest neighbor is three and a half miles distant. His family consists of three children, besides a married daughter who was also at home now, she having been deserted by her husband. The eldest of the other children is a boy of eleven years. The wife thus left alone on the farm far from neighbors, is soon to become a mother again, as is also the married daughter, whose husband has left her a burden on her parents. On the way here Williams spoke feelingly of his family, and wept as he alluded to their deplorable condition. He admitted nothing in relation to the forgery of the note, but said that when he left Cowham's office three years ago the temptation to keep the $650 was too great for him, and that he left town by the night train going direct to St. Louis. From there he went to Chicago. While in the latter city he made up his mind to come back here face Mr. Cowham and own up the whole thing and give back what money he had and take the chances. With this determination he went to Toledo but after waiting there over night, he weakened and fled again, this time going to Texas, where after a time he wrote a letter to Mr. Cowham, stating he was willing to do what he could toward making reparation, and asking Mr. Cowham if he considered the proposition favorably to insert a notice to the effect in the Chicago Times. Mr. Cowham never inserted any answer to the letter which he received, and then Williams drifted on westward, and after varied fortune he preempted 160 acres of government land and sent for his family and has since led the life of a farmer, and when he says he hoped to soon pay back all that he had taken from people, and which had made him a fugative from justice and a criminal. He was greatly surprised at his arrest, after the long time that had intervened since he fled. Williams was a justice of the peace in the town of Sykestone, and relates how they started a school fund, which they did by arresting the only saloon keeper there, and fining him $50 which was used as the nucleus for a school which had since been maintained in good shape. Williams is well known in Addison where he resided for a number of years, and where he was considered a straightforward business man of good ability and honorable dealing till this affair of three years ago.—Addison Courier.

HOW WILL THEY LIVE?

A Social Problem that Demands an Immediate and Satisfactory Answer.

"How on earth will they live?" asked an eminently respectable citizen a few days since when informed of the approaching marriage of a Detroit young lady to a gentleman from another city. "He has a salary of $600 a year," he continued, "and the young lady's annual expenditure, exclusive of board, is double that. They can not possibly live on $600 a year."

In the case referred to, the problem will probably be solved by the party that has already done so much in the way of solving similar problems. The bride's father, if he can afford it, will stand in the gap and make up the annual deficit until the young man's salary grows to the dimensions of his needs. If he has two or three other daughters he may find the burden an onerous one and be compelled to drop it before the son-in-law is quite ready to assume it. This will be bad for the son-in-law and the bride; but it will not be the first case of the kind.

In another solution of the problem the young man's father carries the load. But he, too, may be compelled to drop it before the young couple can take it up. And to complicate the situation, every day that anybody else carries it makes it more difficult for them to do so. The habit of eating unearned bread is as demoralizing when it is eaten off a mahogany table with an accompaniment of silver and china and glass as it is when taken at the back door and eaten without butter. When the young couple are thrown on their own resources the old problem recurs with additional emphasis: "How will they live?"

Singularly enough no one seems to think for a moment of answering "on their income." The suggestion that two persons can live on six hundred dollars a year seems as visionary and impracticable as the proposition to flood the Desert of Sahara or establish telephonic communication with the moon. Such an income barely suffices to keep the young man of the period in cigars and gloves, while the young woman could hardly keep her head decently covered—or uncovered—for it. How then could they manage to carry on a household with so insignificant a sum? Preposterous!

Yet the chances are that the father and mother on one side at least, and the grand-parents on both sides, began their married life on quite as small an income. There are couples, indeed, in the City of Detroit to-day who have no greater income and who live within it, neither suffering privation nor running in debt. But the lives they lead and the economies they indulge in, the sacrifices they make and the simple pleasures they enjoy, are quite beyond the comprehension of the young man and the young woman of the period.

It is a pity that this answer will not do, and that there is no other adequate one. For want thereof the young man and young woman of the period fight shy of the marriage compact and cling to single blessedness. This is not as it should be. The future of the race demands a different condition of things. Some satisfactory answer must be found for this important question. It behooves the social scientists, if they expect to retain the confidence of the community, to set their wits to work speedily and effectively.—Detroit Free Press.

AMERICAN FABLES.

The Owl and the Farmer, and Other Tales With Good Morals.

A farmer one morning found a Large Owl in his Barnyard, and the Limping and Distressed Bird no sooner Observed him than it cried out:

"I should like to Know what sort of a Man you are that you let your Geese almost Kill me?"

"Then you have been Maltreated?"

"I should say I had! I have been Pounded almost to Death!"

"But there Must have been some Provocation?"

"Not the Slightest. I simply flew down to Secure a Chicken for Breakfast, and three of the Geese at once Rushed upon me."

"Ah, I see," mused the Farmer; and he at once gave orders to have the Mortal Geese put to Death.

Moral: Any Burglar who may be Shot while Plundering a Citizen's House should Promptly complain to the nearest Magistrate. The Average Jury will make it Warm for the Shooter.

THE SERPENT AND THE PEASANT.

One day while a Peasant was Working in the Field he saw a Serpent Approaching in a Stealthy manner, and the Man Seized a large Stone and Hurled it with Such true aim that the Snake was fatally Injured.

"If you had only Waited a moment Longer," gasped the Serpent, as he writhed about, "I was coming to ask you to let me be your Friend."

"Then I have no Regrets," replied the Peasant; "your Good Will would have been more Burdensome to me than your enmity."

MORAL:—You Probably know Several Such Chaps.

THE HEN AND THE SWAN.

A Farmer one day came upon a Hen and a Swan which were having a Fierce Dispute, and when he Inquired the cause of it the Hen explained:

"Why, I expressed my belief that the Swan's neck was too long."

"Oh, as to that," replied the Farmer, I was about to suggest that your own neck was Altogether too short, and that you are Sadly in Need of new Tail-Feathers."

MORAL:—Don't criticise a man who Toes in when you run your Own Boots over at the Heels.—Detroit Free Press.

—"Cattle have increased more than three-fold in the United States during the past ten years," says the Shoe and Leather Reporter, which adds: "Ours is the greatest cattle producing region on the globe. On farms there are now about 42,000,000; on ranch and range property west of the Mississippi about 10,000,000 cattle graze.

The Church Press notes a growing disposition among Episcopalians to call in question the utility of Sunday-schools.

WHALE HARPOONING.

The Dangers and Excitement of a Whale Hunter's Life.

Now and then a whale manages to make its escape after being harpooned. Whenever that is the case the animal has learned wisdom by experience, and if it should again be harpooned takes very good care not to exhaust its powers by diving. So it remains on the surface of the water, where it can breathe at ease, and rushes along at full speed.

Three or four boats will sometimes be "fast" to the same whale, and will be towed along at such speed that one of the crew is obliged to stand over the line with uplifted axe, ready to cut the rope at a moment's notice. The Northern whales almost invariably make for the nearest ice field and try to dive under it. In one instance a Rorqual, which had been harpooned in mistake for a Greenland whale, rushed off with such unexpected speed that it shot under an ice field before the line could be cut, and neither crew nor boat were ever heard of afterward.

It is, by the way, fortunate for the whalers that the animal can not turn its head or body, as, if it could do so, even civilized men would hardly be able to approach such an animal. As it is, however, the well-drilled boat's crew have just time to back out of reach of its tail before it can made its stroke.

For it must be remembered that sensation occupies an appreciable time in passing along a nerve. All of us who have suffered from an accident must be aware that at the moment of infliction there is no pain, and that there is an interval between the injury and the pain. The duration of this interval is measurable by the length of nerve between the seat of injury and the brain.

Now, the whale is a very large animal; and supposing that a full-grown specimen of eighty feet in length be struck about the middle of the body, the sensation of the stroke would have to be conveyed through nerves nearly forty feet in length before reaching the brain. Then, the return message delivered to the tail would have to traverse nearly twice that distance. So, although the whalers may be wholly ignorant of physiology, they know by practice that the whale never strikes instantly on receiving the wound from the harpoon.

Shell bullets, charged with prussic acid or strychnine and just enough powder to explode the shell, have been found to kill a whale in a very few minutes. The sailors, however, with all the prejudices of ignorance, think that they will be poisoned when flensing the whale, and so insist upon the tedious and dangerous system of harpooning and lancing.—Longman's Magazine.

EXPERIMENTAL SCIENCE.

Medical Authorities Whose Notions Differ Widely.

Prof. Germain See is one of the burning and shining lights in the firmament of French medical science. He has devoted much talent to the subject of contagious phthisis. Of the three stages of consumption, he lays down, the first can be cured; the second also, if not too far advanced, but the third stage is mortal. He has just treated the subject of obesity, and if he turns out to be right there is not a fat man but will subscribe to his statue. All remedies up to the present, though diametrically opposed, have been attended with more or less of success. Physical exercise, early rising, spare diet, and as little as possible of fluids were the basis of the perfect cures. If some David Lamberts grew small by degrees, others became stouter. On the principle of like cures like, Ebstein prescribed doses of fat. The system has many admirers in Germany, and Bismarck's first reduction is due to the process. It was Dr. Schwenninger cured him of sleeplessness. Others swear the Chancellor became himself again, owing to his having set all the nations of Europe by the ears and by his flirtation with Jules Ferry, landed France in the mud of Tonkin to the chin. Pliny recommended fat men to abstain from all liquids, even to a degree of personal suffering, while Dr. Oetel of Muhich laid down fat men could only be happy when shrivelled up like a mummy or becoming as dry as a chip. Sidney Smith alleged his return to leanness was due to his curates having been extracted from him. Prof. See's advice to sixteen and twenty-stone men is: Eat moderately; drink abundantly, especially warm liquids, such as tea, when Richard shall become himself again. The warm solutions cause the fatty elements of the food to "move on" from the stomach. The laughing of the little dog at the sight of the cow jumping over the moon will be nothing compared to the joy of fat men at the discovery of this philosopher's stone. A scientist of another order draws attention to the circumstance that since dogs have ceased to be employed for turning roasting jacks, hydrophobia has largely increased. He ought to call on Pasteur.—Boston Record.

A Man Who is Nicely Fixed.

Edward H. Johnson, President of the Edison Isolated Company, has a residence that fairly bristles with electricity. Not satisfied with telephone, fire racket, burglar alarms at every window and one hundred electric lights glowing from cellar to attic, he has an electric fireplace radiant with a luminous imposture of cold radiance, a center-piece above the parlor aglow with colored flies, a dozen electric clocks in as many rooms, run by electricity to tick simultaneously and never stray apart, an electric telemeter indicating at all times the heat in the basement or the weather outside, we forget which, and various other electric surprises. When he comes home from the club at midnight, pulls off his boots softly and opens the front door, that act turns on the electricity at the head of the stairs, so that he is not left in the dark, and from his bed he can touch a button that lights or extinguishes the gas in any room in the house. Johnson is nicely fixed.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Jennie's Letter to Santa Claus.

TECUMSEH, Dec. 7, 1885.

DEAR SANTA CLAUS:

I thought that I would write you a letter and tell you just what I want for Christmas. I would like to have a baby cab for my doll and a rocking chair because this one is too small, and a hoop. And please don't take Dot or Julia away. I don't suppose that I have been a very good girl but I guess I have been good enough for that many things, and some peanuts and candy. I send my love to you.

Goodbye,
JENNIE.

THE SALVATION ARMY JUBILEE.

The jubilee has come and gone. Capt. Kirk and the squint-eyed sister have valiantly held the fort for the past thirty days. They have called the sinners of the village to repentance, they have gathered themselves together each evening, paraded the streets and summoned the unfaithful to the barracks to fight the good fight and partake of the ginger bread of Salvation. But, like Columbus, when he insisted that he could reach the Eastern lands by sailing westward, his converts have been few and far between. One brother has seen the error of his ways. Wilberforce Shufflebottom joined the ranks about ten days since, and has already mastered the intricacies of the tamborine. But Capt. Kirk saw something must be done, and so a grand jubilee was arranged, which took place last Friday evening, Dec. 11th.

December eleventh is the anniversary of the day on which a misguided whale swallowed Jonah and seemed to be a fitting occasion for a combined attack upon the cohorts of sin. The home squad was re-inforced with detachments from Adrian and Monroe to the number of about twenty, the brothers and sisters being nearly equally divided.

About five o'clock P. M. the Adrian detachment arrived via. the overland route, armed with two snare drums, one base drum, nine tamborines, and a triangle. They at once formed in line near the barracks. A buxom sister from Monroe, who tips the scales at two hundred and seventy-five pounds and stands six feet in her dancing pumps, headed the procession and carried the banner. The banner consists of a red flag with a black square in the center, strung on a beanpole, which, being interpreted, means that a hot blizzard is approaching from Satan's dominions.

The army took up their line of march to the boarding place of the squint-eyed sister, where a bountiful repast of baked beans and hash and sour kraut was served. At 7:30 the the line was again formed at the barracks, the battalion marched down Chicago street to Kies Bros' corner, and countermarched to railroad street, where they collected a congregation and gave a bang-up double-and-twisted tamborine serenade. Upon arriving at the main entrance of the tabernacle, Sister Manypenny of Monroe, transformed her tamborine into a contribution box, and every Gentile was required to deposit ten cents before entering the cathedral. This method of raising funds was a great improvement over the voluntary contribution plan. When Capt. Kirk's old English lever marked eight o'clock standard time, order was called and the exercises began.

The program was opened with a grand instrumental overture entitled, "Toe the Chalk Line, Johnny."

The Captain then dropped upon his marrow bones and thanked the Giver of all good that he was not like common folks and imploring forgiveness for the Gentiles who were arrayed before him.

An experience meeting followed in which the different members related their trials and tribulations, their persecutions and repentance. The Adrian members, having been the hardest cases, were given the post of honor and led off. The tales related by some of them were enough to extract tears of sympathy and remorse from a marble tombstone.

The Captain then introduced Lieut. Josephus Grabum of Monroe, a converted gambler, who is better known as "Bang-up Joe" for short. Joe is an old campaigner. He has been converted regularly once in three months, for the past ten years. He is a native of England and when he came over three years ago he got his H's terribly mixed.

"Hi ham most 'appy, my brethering and sistern," said Joe, as he gaily stepped on the front plank of the platform, "to see you hall 'ere to-night. Wat is 'religion, my brethering, wat his it? Hit's not like a glass o' beer, wich is alf foam and the foam hall on top. Hits not like church soup, with one hoyster in 'alf a gallon o' 'ot water. Hits not like a centribution box wich his filled with bogus pennies and brass buttons. Hits not like taffy, wich his sugar to taste hof but wich stihicks a 'fellers teheeth together. Hits not like a fashionable woman's 'at, thats made with a card board wat costs a 'appenny with trimmings wat costs a heagle. Hits not like a railroad train going down' 'ill, heasy to start and 'ard to stop. But religion, my brethering, pure hunadulterated clear-quill religion may be likened hunto mince pie. Hit contains good beef and potatoes for foundation, seasoned with a few Raisins, some hallspice, a few chopped happles, and a little hold Henglish brandy. 'Ow many 'earts will be made 'appy to-night, my brethering? Let hevery man wat wants a piece raise 'is right 'and and 'ave 'is name henrolled."

"That talk sounds like business," said Judas Priest, who sat on the front row in the pit. "I'm yer hollyhock. Slap down my name. I haint had no pie since the 4th of July and I'm gittin pretty mad fer I want it right bad."

Judas had his name enrolled among the new converts. The choir and orchestra then fiddled and sang the anthem "Salvation is free."

Salvation is free
For you and for me
As free as the winds that blow.
From sinning we'll cease
And get our release
And Satan we'll help to o'erthrow.

CHORUS.

Oh! hi! oh! Bang-up Joe,
Sing halico, calico, Bang-up Joe;
Pollywog, tanglefoot, oh, hi, oh;
Hi, diddle, diddle, don't bother me so,
Come Polly, I beg of you, Polly go slow
Sing halico, calico, Bang-up Joe.

Salvation is mine.
Why should I repine?
Omnipotent mercy will show
The only straight gate;
And then will abate
My troubles and trials below.

CHORUS.

Oh! hi! oh! Bang up Joe
Sing halico, calico, Bang-up Joe,
Pollywog, tanglefoot, oh, hi, oh,
Hi, diddle, diddle, don't bother me so
Come Polly, I beg of you, Polly go slow
Sing halico, calico, Bang-up Joe.

Benjamin Franklin Biggins, a cullud citizen, then majestically arose, removed his dog-skin cap, inserted his thumbs in the armholes of his vest, blew his nose, drew a long breath and began: "Dis heah occashun, my brevren, am de happiest 'cashun ob my trestrial consistence. Dis chile neber seed so much 'ligion befo'. Massa Joe am de biggest gun in de lan'. I'se after um piece uv dat mince pie, brevren. De queshun now am—whar am de pie? Whar am it?"

At this juncture, the Marshall opened the front door to put out a boisterous spectator, a gust of north wind rushed in, and every candle went out. The audience dispersed somehow and the jubilee thus came to an untimely end.

The exercises closed with a chorus by the entire company entitled, "Where was Biggins, when the candle went out?"

THE BAPTIST INSTALLATION

The new pastor of the Baptist church Rev. F. Adkins was duly installed with appropriate religious ceremonies on Thursday evening of last week. The music had been specially prepared for the occasion by Dr. Steinhoff, the chorister, and was highly commended by all present. The installation sermon by Rev. J. S. Holmes was a masterly effort, and the remaining portions of the program were in keeping therewith. The church was crowded with a deeply interested congregation. We present the program of exercises in full.

WEATHER REPORTS.

The arrangements have now been perfected for the reception of the daily weather reports in Tecumseh from the U. S. Signal Service. The necessary flag and streamers have been procured and a pole erected on Chicago street, in front of Satterthwaite Bros. & Boyd's hardware store. J. N. Satterthwaite will receive the report and display the signals each morning.

The firm have issued a neat business card containing a cut of the different flags with the signification of each one. We give a brief description of the signals.

Red flag with black square in centre—approaching storm.

White flag with blue square in center—Cold wave approaching.

Red circle—Higher temperature.
Red moon—Lower temperature.
Red star—Stationary temperature.
Blue circle—General rain or snow.
Blue moon—Clear or fair weather.
Blue star—Local rain or snow.

RINK RACKET

About 40 maskers entered for prizes at the rink Tuesday evening, and almost every character imaginable was represented. The ludicrous costumes predominated and but two or three pretty ones were worn. Miss Humphrey took the prize for having the handsomest costume, wearing a dress of black material with silver stars, representing the queen of night. Miss Emma Aten also wore a very pretty dress with white cotton balls representing snow. The prize for the most comical one was carried off by Al. Heesen and Darius Smith, representing a New England couple. Al's dress fit him very elegantly and his disguise was complete, all but his "understanding." They were somewhat large, but still compared favorably with the rest of his person. It was evident the Salvation Army had not succeeded in their mission before their departure, as "the devil" was there in full dress. In fact it was a very successful affair and everybody seemed to enjoy themselves.

The rink will be open Christmas afternoon and evening with music by Knapp's band.

Physicians' Testimony.

A. W. Brown, M.D., of Providence, R. I., says: "I have used HUNT'S [Kidney and Liver] REMEDY in my practice for the past sixteen years, and cheerfully recommend it as being a safe and reliable remedy."

Another prominent doctor of Providence says that "I am frequently urged to use other preparations as substitutes for HUNT'S [Kidney and Liver] REMEDY. I find on trying them that they are worthless in comparison to it."

An Old Lady.

C. N. CRITTENTON, N. Y., General Agent.

BILIOUSNESS.
Bilious symptoms invariably arise from indigestion, such as furred tongue, vomiting of bile, giddiness, sick headache, irregular bowels. The liver secretes the bile and acts like a filter or sieve, to cleanse impurities of the blood. By irregularity in its action or suspensions of its functions, the bile is liable to overflow into the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, yellow eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling and many other distressing symptoms. Biliousness may be properly termed an affection of the liver, and can be thoroughly cured by the grand regulator of the liver and biliary organs, BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS. Act upon the stomach, bowels and liver, making healthy bile and pure blood, and opens the culverts and sluiceways for the outlet of disease. Sold everywhere and guaranteed to cure.

SUN SPOTS.

A Suggestion That the Orb of Day Is Affected with Measles.

A fresh spot has appeared on the face of the sun, a very large one, humanly speaking. It measures about twenty geographical miles by seven thousand. Perhaps the sun does not think it excessive, having such a very broad face, and being able to accommodate a great number of pimples of the same size. But the extent sounds considerable, all the same. Besides, there are ever so many smaller ones about the size of the earth, and, taking all together, we shall hardly be exaggerating the situation if we say there is "quite a rash." For much less we should call the doctor in. Indeed, we terrestrial atoms could not rise to the dignity of such an eruption, not even if we put all our faces together and went shares in the same spot. We talk of having "the measles," nobody thinks of counting them or asking "How many?" But they are mere pin points, dots, specks. It is very different, however, with the orb "that rules the day." Astronomers keep a register of its eruptions, and book each new "measle" as it comes. They diagnose the phenomenon, and conjecture as to its causes and results, just as the doctors do over the baby's red-speckled body; and, like doctors, they can not stop the process. It must run its course, they say. Some day, perhaps, they will prescribe for the sun. If they already know its weight, and its temperature and constitution, why should they not find all about its digestion and habits? Is it temperate and addicted to a regular life? There is a good deal to be said on both sides. In a general way it is irreproachable, a model luminary, and a pattern to everybody else, doing perennial work conscientiously and regularly. Morally, too, no fault can be found with a body which is all things to all men—answers the negro according to his blackness, and never throws pearls before swine. Early to bed and early to rise, it ought to be healthy, wealthy and wise. But is it? There is another side to the sun. When it has got out of our sight, and beyond the scrutinizing vision of civilization, it conducts itself immoderately. An excessive warmth characterizes its conduct. It blazes out, gets furiously hot over nothing. People beg the sun to keep cool, to calm itself. But this only seems to make it get all the hotter and be all the more intolerable. From other quarters, again, we have very different reports. There, they tell us, and the evidence is trustworthy, it will not show itself sometimes for weeks together. They know it is there, or thereabouts, from the reflections cast on the sky. But, as for melting a glacier or liquefying an iceberg, no such effects or forthcoming. This gratifies polar bears, no doubt, but can not be styled impartial behavior. After all, the Esquimaux are human beings, which even the best of bears are not. Still, as the homely saying goes, we should talk of men only as we know. Report is liable to be biased in the transit or unreliable at the source. So, for ourselves, we ought to speak well of the great orb. That it does not, as a rule, take much notice of us, and that when, as an exception, it does, we grumble, is neither here nor there. Our temperature is the finest in the world, our climate second to none, and the security of our country from plague, pestilence and famine, from drouth and flood, earthquake and hurricanes is the envy of all the inhabited earth. And for all this we have to thank the sun.—London Telegraph.

FASHION NOTES.

What the Leaders of New York Modes Are Wearing.

Beaver muffs are again in vogue for misses.

Cloth boots faced and foxed with kid are again worn.

Boots are again fashionably laced at the side as well as up the instep.

Jackets of real and imitation Persian lamb come among other novelties in wraps.

Capes and pelerines of fur or fur trimmed remain in favor, but are no longer high shouldered.

Ribbons are much used for bonnet strings, and ribbons were never more varied and pretty than this season.

New waterproofs come in velvet-finished surface and various colors, and in imitation of mixtures and fine checks.

Plain skirts are not the invariable rule. Many fashionable women cling to the classic lines of the long draped overskirt.

Fur fringes made of real or imitation tails of the same animal whose fur trims or forms the wrap, is a feature in this fall's wraps.

Mme. Demorest has brought out among her late patterns some excellent variations of the popular Gretchen dress for little girls.

Moliere shoes of glazed kid are frequently seen for outdoor wear both here and on the other side, but with the increasing cold high boots will, of course, be de rigueur.

Plain skirts do not look strong minded when bordered with boucle or astrakhan plush, or when made of striped material with a tiny plaiting of good velveteen at the bottom, or when bordered deeply with any rough-looking or heavy broche bordering.

The short sealskin mantle and its imitation in seal plush, trimmed with feather bands for autumn and with black otter bands and tails for later in the season, are promised an enduring popularity until the weather demands long fur-lined and seal garments of various forms which are brought out for midwinter wear.

India shawl or Persian borderings to plain Oriental-looking stuffs are among the handsomest novelties of the season. In the deep borders at the edges intended to form the bottom of the skirt, all the new colors are combined with that rare taste which makes them seem as if mellowed by time, just as they appear in a fine old India shawl, the designs, of course, containing the Oriental conventional patterns, mingled with the inevitable palm-leaf.—N. Y. Sun.

ST. KILDA.

A Community in Which the Most Primitive Manners Still Prevail.

The methods by which the inhabitants of St. Kilda were recently compelled to communicate with the mainland, sending the news of their needy condition in a little boat cut from a block of wood, has brought out many descriptions of the island. Hirt, as the natives call it, may be regarded as the Ultima Thule of the Hebrides. Though a part of North Britain, it is only in very clear weather, and then from a considerable height, that it can be sighted like a dim cloud in the waste of waters beyond. Sailors sometimes notice it in formless outline on the horizon. But its coast bears a bad reputation, and the cautious helmsman gives its skerries and wave-lashed cliffs as wide a berth as he conveniently can. When the skipper out of his reckoning hears through the fog a boom of breakers, and high above the roar of its waves the discordant scream of sea fowl, he instantly sheers from a locality so dangerous. For, romantic though St. Kilda may be for fair weather mariners, the Captain who is not desirous of having an uncomfortable interview with Mr. Rothery prefers to leave his curiosity ungratified.

Once ashore, at the only landing place, the visitor has difficulty in realizing the fact that he is still within the limits of the realm. The people are courteous, and though they possess the usual Celtic characteristics they are unlike the Highlanders whom he has left in Uist or Eigg, on Harris or Skye; and even to one familiar with Gaelic their dialect presents certain philological difficulties. The island, which is barely seven miles in circumference, is surrounded by beetling cliffs, attaining in some places a height of twelve hundred feet, and the moderately level ground fit for growing a patch or two of oats or potatoes, or capable of affording grazing for a few sheep, is extremely scanty. The huts, some nineteen in number, are almost prehistoric in structure, the locks being made of wood and fastened with a wooden key, though so honest are the people that even this precaution of civilization is unnecessary. The population does not number more than seventy or eighty and has been gradually decreasing since 1697, when it amounted to one hundred and eighty. The law is represented by a "catechist," who combines in his person the functions of minister, schoolmaster and magistrate, and who, though an admirable person according to his lights, rather puritanical in his ideas of what is good for his subjects. When Mr. Sands lived under his jurisdiction, the three greatest men in the world, were, in the opinion of the St. Kildans, Prince Bismarck, Mr. Gladstone and Dr. Begg, though it ought to be remarked that it was only the ecclesiastical side of their character that found favor in the eyes of the islanders. The inhabitants were at one time addicted to playing the jewsharp and to dancing, and used to greet the coming of the seafowls with a strange song, calling to mind the verses with which the Rhodian Greeks welcomed the returning swallow. All such carnal pleasures are now eschewed. To walk on Sunday is a sin; to speak above their breath an offense against the canon law; and, as the worthy minister is, or was, the only man in possession of a watch, or capable of speaking English, no one ventures to dispute his dicta. Formerly, the islanders used to dress in sheepskins and wear shoes made of the heads and necks of Solan geese. Nowadays they weave cloth out of the wool of their dwarf sheep, and manufacture "rullions" or moccasins out of their hides.

Fishing and fowling are almost their sole occupations. Men and women climb the cliffs like goats in search of the eggs of the sea fowls, on which they subsist during the winter, and even the dogs are trained to capture the puffins and gannets. The women work harder than the men, undertaking most of the labor which horses perform elsewhere, but the men make all the clothes, not only for themselves, but for the other sex also. Children are hard to rear, and the entire population is necessarily intermarried through and through. There are nearly twice as many women as men, and only six surnames in the whole island, an adjective being usually added for the better definition of the person addressed. Thus, for example, there is Callum Beag (Little Malcolm), or Donnell Og (Young Donald). Quarrels are unknown, in so small a community everybody being mortally afraid of offending his neighbors; and the direction of public affairs is discussed by a sort of island parliament which meets every morning in front of the cottages. By and by the St. Kildans will become extinct. A few have emigrated, though on the voyage to Australia they could only be kept in perfect health by an occasional meal of the rank eggs and dried puffins they carried with them. They are, moreover, greatly attached to the island and are anxious to return to it if a day or two absent in "Scotland." The owner of this lonely spot is a gentleman who, by one of those curious contrasts in which civilization delights was, until recently, Secretary of the Science and Art Department. Perhaps—who knows?—amid the perusal of the dreary minutes of "my lords" and the calculation of "payment by results" he may have sometimes heard the waves dashing on distant Dunvegan or the scream of the sea mews as they circled around his far-off lordship of St. Kilda.—London Standard.

—In 1851, when Louis Napoleon was President of France, some coins were struck with his head upon them. He examined them, said they were all right, and told the mintmaster to go ahead with them. A little later he noticed a stiff-looking lock of hair over his temple, such as we call a cow-lick, and ordered a new drill made. That was done, but in the meantime twenty-three of the pieces had gone into circulation, one of which is said to be in the possession of Queen Victoria. One thousand dollars apiece has been offered for these rare coins, without takers.

Father, Mother, and Three Sisters Dead.

Mr. David Claypool, formerly Sergeant-at-Arms of the New Jersey Senate, and now Notary Public at Cedarville, Cumberland Co., N. J., makes the following startling statement: "My father, mother, and three sisters all died with consumption, and my lungs were so weak I raised blood. Nobody thought I could live. My work (shipsmithing) was very straining on me with my weak constitution, and I was rapidly going to the grave. While in this condition I commenced using Mishler's Herb Bitters, and it saved my life. Because it was so difficult to get it in this little place, and I had improved so much, I stopped taking it for a time, and the result is that I have commenced going rapidly down hill again. Somehow, Mishler's Herb Bitters gives appetite and strengthens and builds me up as nothing else does, and I must have a dozen bottles at once. Use this communication as you please, and if any one wants to be convinced of its truth, let them write me and I will make affidavit to it, for I owe my life to Mishler's Herb Bitters."

The secret of the almost invariable relief and cure of consumption, dysentery, diarrhœa, dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver complaints, when Mishler's Herb Bitters is used, is that it contains simple, harmless, and yet powerful ingredients, that act on the blood, kidneys, and liver, and through them strengthens and invigorates the whole system. Purely vegetable in its composition; prepared by a regular physician; a standard medicinal preparation; endorsed by physicians and druggists. These are four strong points in favor of Mishler's Herb Bitters. Mishler's Herb Bitters is sold by all druggists. Price $1.00 per large bottle. 6 bottles for $5.00.

Ask your druggist for MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS. If he does not keep it, do not take anything else, but send a postal card to MISHLER HERB BITTERS CO., 525 Commerce Street, Philadelphia.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.
It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.
The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.
WHAT IT CURES.
All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.
It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.
Over 40 Years,
This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to long tried friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.
Prices 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

EXPLODING GLASSWARE.

How Chimneys and Tumblers Fly Into Fragments Without Apparent Cause.

"Spontaneous explosions of glassware?" said W. H. Roby, of the Boston and Sandwich Glass Company in reply to a query. "Oh, yes, I have often heard of such a thing. It occurs not infrequently in lamp chimneys, especially of the sort commonly known as the "unbreakable." These chimneys may be thrown or kicked about on the floor with impunity, and will seldom break by such usage. They have even been used as a hammer to drive nails with, and yet they will often explode without any warning, and apparently without cause. The other day a gentleman came in here on the same errand, to inquire concerning exploding chimneys. He said that a few evenings previous his wife was about lighting a large parlor lamp. The chimney, which was large and heavy, had been removed and was resting upon the table near by, when suddenly it exploded, with a sharp report, covering the table with fragments of glass.

"I have heard of an instance in which a chimney, after being cleaned, was placed in a saucer upon a pantry shelf. Not long after a strange crackling sound was heard in the pantry. Investigation showed that the saucer was filled with millions of minute particles of glass, which were still stirring and crackling. Evidently the chimney had spontaneously crumbled to fragments in this instance, instead of exploding, as in the case of the other. Such occurrences are not at all uncommon, though they can scarcely be said to be frequent. They are, perhaps, more common in lamp chimneys than in other wares. I have known a chimney attached to a lamp suspended over a dinner table to fly into fragments without apparent cause, spreading consternation among the guests and spoiling the dinner. A million minute particles of glass scattered over a dinner table is not conducive to a good appetite. But then, I have known other articles of glassware to explode, sometimes with a loud report, tumblers, goblets and wine glasses sometimes flying into fragments without the least warning. Such occurrences a hundred years ago were undoubtedly regarded as supernatural."

"What is the cause of such explosions?"

"They may be traced to a variety of causes. A lamp chimney, when heated, will sometimes break from unequal expansion. Carelessly made chimneys often vary in thickness, and thus the expansion by heat is unequal in different places; hence the breakage. But chimneys when not in use and other articles of glassware which explode suddenly, are improperly or imperfectly annealed.

"Now, here are these inkstands," continued Mr. Roby, taking from the table a large square inkstand of solid crystal, "they are liable to break directly across the center as even as though cut by a diamond. They are so thick that they are cooled unevenly in the annealing process, and the weakest point is through the center. One may last a lifetime and one may break in a night, and the janitor or office boy be blamed for his carelessness the next day."

Mr. Dougherty, an old, practical glass-maker, for many years in the employ of the New England Glass Works at Cambridge, said:

"It is not uncommon for glassware in various forms to explode without warning and often with a sharp report. I remember that as much as forty years ago it was not uncommon for people to rush to the works, as pale as ghosts, saying that a dozen tumblers upon a shelf had exploded, and they were afraid that it foretold a death or other calamity in the family. It was the old superstition, you see. But it was only imperfect annealing that caused it. The art was not understood so well in those days as now. There is one odd thing, that a tumbler or goblet which is badly annealed will explode if a spoon, fork or other hard substance is stirred about in it."

"Yes," interrupted a bystander; "I remember hearing of a gentleman who left a wine glass with a spoon in it on a sideboard while he left the room for a moment. When he returned the spoon was lying on the marble and the sideboard was covered with fragments of glass. As no one had been near it the gentleman was greatly mystified."

"That's it," said Mr. Dougherty. "The weight of the spoon in the wine glass caused it to explode. Why it is, I don't know, but it is so."

"What is the annealing process?" was asked.

"The articles of glass, after they are finished, are placed in an oven about seventy-five feet long, which is heated to about two hundred degrees at one end and is cold at the other. The glass is placed at the hot end, and when thoroughly heated is moved two feet away from the fire. In a few moments it is moved two feet farther away, and so on at intervals until it reaches the cold end. In this way it is gradually and evenly cooled. This is called annealing, and when this is properly done the glass is not so liable to break spontaneously."

"If this is the final process, much of your stock must be broken before it reaches the ovens?"

"Fully one-half is broken before it is ready for the market, and has to go into the pot and be melted over. We have to make two tumblers to get one to sell."

"How is the so-called 'unbreakable' glass annealed?"

"That is done by dipping into hot oil instead of using the ovens. The process has a tendency to toughen the glass, and for a time it is difficult to break. But after it has been in use for a time, some day, it suddenly explodes or falls to pieces apparently of its own weight. I suppose the element produced by the action of the oil becomes lost, and then the glass goes to pieces."—Boston Globe.

—Physicians have to pay fifty dollars for good skeletons and thirty dollars for common ones. The preparation of them is growing to be quite a business. The most difficult part of the process is to clean the bones without marring them. Medical college janitors pretty nearly monopolize the trade. MODERN ALCHEMY.

How Unsightly Dirt and Rock Are Converted Into Gold and Silver.

The ore, fresh from the mines of Montana, Colorado, Idaho or Utah, reaches the works in its native condition. The greater part of the mineral earth is as foreign to the appearance of the treasures it contains as can well be imagined. Look through the rough rock or ash-like dirt as you may, and the unpracticed eye can not detect a mineral trace. Yet it is a notorious fact that this ugly substance is richer than the clear quartz which exposes its free gold or virgin silver. The bonanza carbonate of Leadville, for instance, is a dried clay, which will crumble between the fingers, and was long overlooked by the pioneer miners of California Gulch, until some enterprising "fool" assayed the "worthless stuff."

The first step toward delivering the metals from their native disguises is taken in the smelting-house proper. A furnace cupola is filled with ore intermixed with broken rock, and operated upon by fires fanned to an almost incredible pitch of heat. When this mass becomes molten the metals, obeying the laws of gravity, fall to the bottom and are drawn off and molded into white leaden bars called crude bullion, and containing usually lead, copper, antimony, silver and gold. The molten refuse, the slag, is then removed, and when cooled, broken up and dumped along the river bank, as above stated. The bullion is first passed through the cleaning or softening furnaces, and the copper and antimony taken out. The remaining lead, silver and gold, go then into large kettles and melted. Zinc is thrown in, and with its affinity for those metals it takes up the silver and gold and floats to the top.

The lead is drawn out, and after passing through a refining furnace is cast into bars for commercial use. The zinc amalgam of silver and gold is skimmed off, and the little remaining lead sweated out. In the retorts the zinc is thrown off and the silver and gold taken to the cupel shops for the removal of impurities. The gold and silver is separated by reducing the silver to a solution in sulphuric acid, through which the gold falls free in granular form to the bottom, and is then remelted and cast into ingots. The silver is freed from its solution by precipitation and cast into bricks, and the process of producing the precious metals is completed.

Meanwhile the copper and antimony have been operated upon. The mass is melted, and the two metals separated by the forces of their relative specific gravity. The antimony is a white mineral, commonly known as Babbitt metal. After the copper is thoroughly worked for all the gold and silver it may have retained it is converted into the chemical form of a sulphate or blue vitriol, in which condition alone it is shipped from these markets.

This lengthy and intricate process requires the large number of buildings which constitute the smelter. All the refuse except the rough slag from the first furnaces is submitted to repeated tests to thouroughly extract the metals; and so much care is taken to save every precious particle that the flue dust and soot are collected periodically and smelted.—Omaha Bee.

Outcast London.

Much excitement has been made by reports recently published on the vile condition of the slums of London. In a cellar was found a family consisting of a man sick, with small-pox, his dying wife, three half-naked and dirty children, and one pig. In some parts there is one gin-mill to every hundred persons. What defilement! Yet corresponding impurities often defile the human blood. They can be cast out by Brown's Iron Bitters, the great strengthener and purifier. Mr. B. J. Strange, of Stark Lake, Florida, says: "Brown's Iron Bitters is the best blood purifier I ever tried. It gives all the satisfaction a man can want."

CATAARH—A NEW TREATMENT.

From the Monireal Star.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 200 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished he claims the Catarrh is practically cured and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The Application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.

NOBLE DANES.

The Characteristics of a Valuable and Precious Race of Dogs.

Just here, where the hurrying throng is the busiest, a modest little sign attracts the attention of the passer by. It represents an English mastiff lying down waiting for its master. Under this is the following:

DR. RAPPEPORT,
Physician and Surgeon for Dog Disease.

Inside the modest office sits a wide-jawed, gray-bearded, blue-eyed man, about forty years of age. From the pictures and trappings that are displayed, a visitor would naturally infer that the occupant was a dog doctor. A Globe reporter found such to be the case when he called there, one day last week, to find out about the nature of the so-called Russian bloodhound.

"There is no such thing as a Russian bloodhound," said the Doctor. "What is callsd the Siberian or Russian bloodhound is the same kind of a dog as the English bloodhound, only the British have the better kind of dogs. Like the Russian fox-terriers, their bloodhounds are mongrels, part pure blood and part curs. They frequently get good prices for them, however—all the way from one hundred to five hundred dollars—and it generally happens that the greatest mongrel brings the biggest price. I was born and brought up in Russia, and have practised in England, and know what I am talking about."

"Do you mean to say," asked the reporter, "that the Czar's dog and Bismarck's big dog are mongrels?"

"No, no, no," replied the excited Doctor, gesticulating wildly and falling into dialect in his anxiety; "I say no such thing. Ze dog of Bismarck, he no bloodhound, he much too big for any bloodhound, he Noble Dane."

"What kind of a dog is a Noble Dane? Describe it."

"He is about three and a half feet tall and long for his height. His hair is short and smooth and varies in color from white down to mouse color. His ears are not near so long as the English bloodhound, but his neck is thicker and stronger, being firmly placed upon a pair of mammoth shoulders that look capable of great power. He weighs from one hundred and twenty-five to two hundred and twenty-five pounds, usually exceeding two hundred, making him the largest dog in existence."

"How much is a Noble Dane worth?"

"How much is a man worth? How much will you take for your dearest friend? My dear sir, the Noble Dane is priceless. It takes the whole estates of a rich nobleman to buy one, and the biggest King on earth can not afford to purchase two. In fact, they can not be bought. They are kept in perfect palaces in the imperial kennels at St. Petersburg, and the Czar gives them to powerful Kings and Princes on whom he wishes to bestow marks of his special favor. Twenty years ago he gave one to the Sultan, and when that one died he gave him another. Bismarck's famous dog was also a present from the same source. The Chancellor thinks more of that dog than he does of any human being on earth. The dog follows him everywhere he goes, and has been present at more momentous discussions regarding national affairs than any living man except Bismarck himself.

"In some respects the Noble Dane is superior to all the breeds of bloodhounds or any other kind of dog. Most dogs can be made to like and follow other people by feeding them and treating them well. The Noble Dane will take to one person and follow him all his life, no matter how much he is abused and starved or how well other people use him. The Noble Dane can not be bought."—Boston Globe.

HE OBEYED ORDERS.

An Incident Illustrative of the Metropolitan Reporter's Check.

Each newspaper in New York, of course, had a big force at the Grant funeral. Well, it took so many men that some of comparatively little experience had to be given pretty important assignments.

Among these was a young man on the World, who had been in the newspaper business about a month, altogether. He was told to go to the Fifth Avenue Hotel in the morning and never lose sight of the Grant family till night.

Up he went, bright and early, and stayed till the procession was about to start. Then he was in a quandary. He never could keep the Grants in sight if he went on foot through the multitude. Besides, it was about six miles to the park.

A happy idea struck him. Along Twenty-third street was a long row of carriages to be used by the Grants and prominent people who were stopping at the hotel. So, very quietly, this young but enterprising journalist threw away his cigar, straightened his hat, and walked out. He stood a moment on the steps, and then motioned to the driver of the best looking carriage.

John drove up quickly, and the reporter got in.

"What number are you?" he asked.

The driver told him.

"Yes; that's right. Now, do you know where you come in?"

The driver did not.

"Well, you follow the Grant carriage that stands by the door now."

The driver supposed it was all right naturally, and as soon as the procession started he followed Colonel Fred Grant, Mrs. Sartoris and the others.

And that fellow rode in state, and alone, all the way to Riverside Park. Talk about nerve!—N. Y. Cor. Troy Times.

—A little school girl asked her teacher what all the folks meant when they spoke of "Mrs. Grundy." "Why, my dear," replied the teacher, "by 'Mrs. Grundy' they mean the world." A day or two afterward the same teacher asked the geography class to which this infantile bud of promise belonged what was meant by the term "zone." After some hesitation, the little one spoke up, with a deal of assurance and confidence, "I know, teacher; it's the belt around Mrs. Grundy's waist."—Exchange.

DIED.

LEBARON.—At Tecumseh, Mich., on Wednesday, Dec. 9th 1885, Mrs. Maria P. LeBaron, in the 78th year of her age.

In the Tecumseh HERALD of June 28th, 1884, may be found an obituary sketch of Hon. S. C. LeBaron. She who had been his loved companion for more than 60 years has now followed him to the "land of rest." Maria P. Tribou was born in Pomfret, Ver. Jan. 12th 1808. On the 3rd day of June 1832, she became the wife of Sirrel C. LeBaron. In the fall of that year she and her husband became permanent residents of what was then the small village of Tecumseh. They continued to be identified with its interests and ornaments of its society, until at length, in a ripe old age, the death of the wife following after no long interval the death of her husband, they have both been taken from us. Mrs. LeBaron was ill for several weeks and suffered much, but bore her sufferings with a very sweet spirit of patience and resignation. Her character was one which tempts the delineator of it to fall into a strain of unmingled eulogy. She was a devoted wife and mother, always the light of her household. "Her children rise up and call her blessed." There was always that about her presence and her manners which proved attractive to those who came in contact with her. But it was not merely those who knew her slightly that she pleased. Those who knew her best give her highest praise. Tears started unbidden from the eyes of many as they looked at her lifeless form on the day of her burial. It falls to the lot of few, living such a quiet and retiring life as she did, to be missed so much and to be so widely mourned. The church misses her presence and her prayers, and with her bereaved family, many, very many mingle their sympathies. The faults she may have had are so hidden behind her virtues that no one seems to have been conscious of them.

Two sons and a daughter survive to mourn the loss of a beloved mother: Delos and Tribou LeBaron, both of them residing at Toledo, and Inez, wife of Mr. Chas. F. Morley, of Tecumseh.

The only survivor of a family of 7 children of whom Mrs. LeBaron was one is now Mr. E. A. Tribou, of Tecumseh. W. H. B.

DEATH OF URI DECKER.

Uri Decker, one of the pioneer settlers of Lenawee County, died at his farm home in Adrian township, Thursday, Dec., 10, at 2:30 A. M., of heart disease, and was over 80 years of age.

He was born in Columbia county, N. Y., June, 25, 1805. Was married in 1828 to Miss Experience M. Baker, and they moved to Michigan in 1833, where he took up government land and they made themselves a home. Over half a century they have lived on that farm, and in fidelity and love walked together for 57 years. The wife and eight children survive him, all being present to receive his blessing, be comforted by his trust, and hope, and prayer as he breathed his last. One of his requests was this, that the four sons and two sons-in-law act as bearers on the day of the funeral. As we witnessed this scene, we thought of how appropriate for funeral discourse would the words of Holy writ be: "And his sons buried him." The names of the children are as follows: Mrs. Wm. Wood, Rome; J. B. Decker, Adrian; Sydney and E. N. Decker, Ionia; Mrs. John Turner, Cambridge; C. W. Decker, city; Mrs. L. M. Wood, Palmyra, and Mrs. G. W. Fleming, Rome.

He was an estimable man. In religious belief a Universalist nearly all his life, and near the moment of his departure, spoke to his loved ones of the goodness and love of God, and that he could say with the psalmist: "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me." No person in all that section was more revered, for he was as a father in Israel to all, and none who knew him and were acquainted with his last moments could call his life other than Christian, and truly say: "Universalism is good enough to live by, but not to die by."

The funeral was held with prayer at the house and sermon in the Wolf Creek Universalist church on Saturday, Dec. 12, at 12 o'clock, noon. The services were conducted by Rev. J. M. Getchell, of Tecumseh. The singing was under the leadership of a gentleman from Adrian, assisted by his daughter and son. Their closing hymn, "Nearer my God to Thee," was sung from the heart and was touched with the heavenly in spirit as an outbreathing of prayer, strength and consolation. Attandance was large, for he was loved by all. What an influence is a good, upright life. Cost. (Universalist please copy.)

WHITENACK BORDINE & CO.,

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

RIDGEWAY RACKET.

Looks like an open winter so far.

A subscription is being circulated to raise means to purchase the flags, &c., for the United States signal service. The pole will stand in front of Coryell & Lawton's hardware on West Chicago street. Ridgeway is bound to be up with the times.

D. Coryell built a fine hen house last week at his residence on North Church street.

When are they going to repair the windows of the church? I thought they raised money for that purpose some time ago," is the question asked by those out of the village.

Ada Potter, of Tecumseh, spent Saturday with her sister in-law, Mrs. Sena Potter.

W. E. Barrett returned home Saturday afternoon.

Martin Palmer put in an appearance Saturday night about 11 o'clock. Too late for the hen party, however.

Carrie Thornton, of Perrysburg, is visiting her sister, Mrs. B. F. Pocklington, at present.

Fred Fagan and Ed. Harrison returned Friday from their visit with friends at Union City.

Samuel Rappleye, of Philadelphia, arrived Tuesday and will spend the winter with his grandparents, Mr. & Mrs. Samuel Rappleye, if he likes it here.

Prof. E. A. Wilson, of Vassar, came home Saturday and will visit friends during his vacation.

Ella Jackson is among her friends and schoolmates and will give them a call during the holidays.

There seems to be quite an attraction here for the young men of Tecumseh of late. Chas. Bell and Will Sutfin spent Sunday evening with some of the ladies of the village.—Still there is more to follow.

G. P. Waring went to Adrian on business Monday.

Belle Barlow went to Adrian Saturday to visit college friends, and to take part in the musical part of the contest between the literary societies of the College, held Monday evening at the Plymouth church.

Ridgeway will continue to be at the front. She now publishes a paper called the Cottage Hall Comet, with a Moon, for the editor.

Will Clack closed the fall term of school in the Easlick Dist. last Friday.

Friday afternoon the young ladies of the village and vicinity enjoyed a very pleasant time at the home of Miss Ada Loree. It was a genuine hen party. Jumbo was present however and assisted in the afternoon's entertainment.

Wm. Andrews who has been sick for some time was in the village Monday on business.

If you want a good bargain call and see W. P. Cadmus, on West Chicago street, where you will find a full line of Woonsocket rubbers, felt boots and rubber shoes, as cheap as can be purchased anywhere. You will find Purdy at his bench, ready to meet you with a smile, and mend your soles, sew up your rips, with neatness and upon honor, and send you on your way rejoicing.

The program for Dec. 4th will be carried out at the Hall on New Year's night, with a few changes of improvments. There will, be no program printed for the occasion. Admission free.

For various reasons the entertainment for the Sunday school was changed and will be held Christmas night instead of Christmas eve as previously announced.

D. W. Clark and Mrs. David McNair, of Tecumseh, called on friends in this village Tuesday.

The public entertainment given at the Hall by the Literary Friday evening, was a success. Prof W. C. Sharp furnished some fine music. The solo, "Who will buy my roses red," sung by Flota Smith was very fine, also the duet "Yaw, dat is fine," sung by W. C. Sharp and Ida Arne was rendered with effect and feeling. The recitations by Fannie Schwab and Rose Easlick were of a fine selection and well rendered. In the dialogue, "The Flower of the Family," Mrs. Simpson acted at home and gave orders with a will. Obadiah Thomson made a wise choice in selecting Polly as the flower of the family. Mary, the servant girl, possessed her usual dignity.—The dialogue, "Two Ghosts in White," was quite pleasing. Mrs. Gusha being the leading character in the play performing her part with feeling dnd effect. Miss. Praxis showed her kind, gentle way with those intrusted to her care. Miss Sourtop wore her determined look as usual. The young ladies at the boarding school were somewhat annoying in their fun and amusements. Last, but not least, came —— with washtub, revolver, and butcher knife ready for any emergency. The paper read by Miss Moon was rather personal, spicy, and humorous, but harmless, as it was controlled by heavenly planets.

LAKE RIDGE LACONICS.

Susie Osgood, of New York, is visiting friends here.

The President's message on the tariff is considered protective, instead of "for revenue only."

A son of Geo. Allison, aged about 8 years, was quite severely hurt Sunday evening, by falling out of the back kitchen door, down about 8 feet, and striking on his face. Dr. Nelson was was called.

Frank McPherson is quite severely afflicted with rheumatism.

Isaac D. Miller, an old pioneer of this township died at the poor house Saturday morning, aged 85 years; his remains were brought to Lake Ridge Cemetery.

Mrs. S. Henry had about twenty chickens stolen Tuesday night. They roosted in the basement of the barn, and were taken out at the north-east corner, carried about eight rods north to where the team was hitched to the road fence, and their necks rung. They were tracked by the blood to Alf. Lewis' corners, and it is thought, thence west.

David Boyd, about 14 years old, son of David Boyd deceased, while trying to ornament a lead pencil with the fuse cap for blasting stumps, in digging out the dynamite with a knitting needle, and supposing that he had it all out, gave it a shake over the stove when it exploded, blowing off his thumb and first and second fingers. Dr. Morden reduced the fracture. Mrs. Boyd who was reading near the stove, was quite severely shocked. It will be a lesson to several boys of that school district who were carrying fuse caps in their pockets.

HOLLOWAY HAPPENINGS.

The verdict of the coroner's jury in the Babcock case was closed on Tuesday evening of last week and was as follows:

That, upon our oaths do we say that we find that Charles G. Babcock came to his death by colliding with train No. 52 going east on the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific railway, on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1885. And we further find that there was some carelessness on the part of the said Charles G. Babcock, and we also find that there was gross negligence on the part of the engineer and fireman in not ringing the bell and not whistling at the proper points while approaching the crossing, and further, we find that that train was running at too fast a speed for the safety of the public while crossing a public thoroughfare, where there is no flagman.

The Free Methodists are having a glorious revival of religion at Hudson. In a recent experience meeting one good brother announced that he had gone north and beaten a minister in a horse trade, but since this revival he had repented and been forgiven, and that he would sell the horse cheap for cash. Another man confessed that he had stolen some chickens, but since his conversion had returned the fowls. Still a third had stopped the use of tobacco.

A Michigan boy ate a bar of soap, drank a lot of soda water and went to bed to cure his cold. The doctor had a hard time to pull him through, but the boy now says the next time he catches a cold he will use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

INTERESTING NEWSPAPER STATISTICS.

Of the statistics of all the departments of the Census Bureau none is more valuable and interesting than that which collects the data of the press of our country.

There is no better way to judge of the success and prosperity of any section of country than to examine the newspapers published in that section: as they are successful and prosperous, so is the country and neighborhood in which they circulate.

As the reports of the Census Bureau are issued but once in ten years, it can be readily seen that if we were obliged to depend on them alone, we would lose much valuable information and time, and would only receive our information after it had been rendered almost useless by its age. Thanks to private enterprise and capital, however, we are able to keep ourselves posted from year to year on the data of the press throughout the country. Of these private enterprises none is more relied upon or of more value than that of Edwin Alden & Bro.'s American Newspaper Catalogue which is published each year by that pushing firm of Advertising Agents.

According to this catalogue just published there are in the United States and the British Provinces a total of 16,195 newspapers and periodicals, of which 15,368 are published in the United States and 737 in the British Provinces. They are divided as follows:

Dailies, 1,411; Semi-Weeklies, 188; Tri Weeklies, 64; Weeklies, 11,567; Sundays, 426; Semi-Monthlies, 356; Monthlies, 2,010; Bi-Monthlies, 40; Quarterlies, 141.

A comparison of last year's Catalogue with this shows an increase in the total number of papers in the United States and Canada of 1,303. This increase is shared by nearly all the states and territories, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, and Utah alone showing any falling off in the number.

New York leads the list with 284 new papers, Michigan follows with 183, Ohio with 122, Dakota Territory with 88, and Pennsylvania with 83. In comparison with the populations of the various States, we find the increase to be greatest in Florida, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Nebraska, Texas and the territories, particularly in Dakota.

All classes of newspapers and magazines are represented in this total increase of 1,303. In the large cities the number of new trade papers has been most marked, while in Dakota and the Northwest the number of new local papers is noticable.

The value of the "American Newspaper Catalogue" as the standard, recognized authority among all advertisers can not be questioned. It is found on the table of every Advertiser, in the Library of nearly every Newspaper Publisher, in all the Public Libraries, Reading Rooms of Hotels, etc., and is consulted in preference to any other work of the kind on account of the large, clear type used, and the readiness with which information may be obtained. Each year that this publication has been issued, it has been the aim to render the work more accurate and reliable in all its details, and modify and improve its arrangements in every way, that it may be of the highest value to advertiser and publisher.

It contains the names of over 16,000 newspapers.

It contains the name of every newspaper and magazine published in America.

It gives on one line plaee of publication, population, whether county-seat or not, name of paper, length of columns and number of pages, frequency of issue, class when established, circulation, and whether co-operative or not.

It gives the information in the simplest form practicable.

It is printed in large, clear type, and is handsomely bound.

It is a newspaper catalogue simply, not an encyclopedia or business directory.

The publishers congratulate themselves on being able to present to the advertising fraternity their Ninth Annual Catalogue, which they are confident will prove as invaluable in the future as in the past.

This is a very handsome bound book of some 1000 pages. Sent prepaid on receipt of $1.50. Address Edwin Alden & Bro., Cincinnati, O., and New York.

Why He Liked It So Much.

Chicago Herald: "Have I ever been to Yurrip?" exclaimed the middle-aged and bald headed passenger: "should say I had. Half a dozen times. Like it? Rather. 'Tain't so much Yurrip I care for as the ocean voyages. How I do love those ocean trips, though!" "Don't you get sea sick?" "Sea sick? I should say I did. Why, I just lie in my berth five days out of the eight and hope the infernal ship will sink in ten miles of water. There seems to be a whole slaughter house inside of me. I feel like a sick egg. But I enjoy it all the same, you bet. "Enjoy a voyage under such circumstances? How do you make that out?" "Well, you see, my wife she's always along with me. She gets sick, too—sicker'n I do. In fact, she gets so awful sick that she can't talk till after we've anchored on the other side, and if I were to try for a week I couldn't tell you what blessed days of relief they are for me."

The January number of the Magazine of American History will contain three notable articles in the Civil War Series, of which "The Operations Before Fort Donelson," by the distinguished military critic, Gen. "Baldy" Smith, will furnish abundant food for fresh thought. General Smith is a conscientious historian, and he gives a clearer and more truthful view of that much misunderstood affair than was ever before presented to the public by any writer in any publication.

An Eruption Caused by Malaria.

Mrs. B. Fox, of Cambridge, suffered from a skin disease for many months; the itching and burning was something terrible, great crusts formed on her limbs and body, and every night she suffered intensely with pain and a general burning of the entire body. Her physician said the whole difficulty was caused by Malaria, but all of the usual remedies did her no good. Mrs. Fox says, she took three bottles of Dr. Henion's Sure Cure for Malaria and it cured her. It has now been four months since discontinued the use of the Sure Cure, and she has had no return of the disease but remains perfectly well. Dr. Henion's Sure Cure for sale by all Druggists and only costs One Dollar a Bottle.—If you do not get along to suit you, write Dr. Henion at Rochester, N. J. who is a physician of real merit, and he will examine your case and and prescribe for you free of charge.

What Shall We Have for Dessert?

"What shall we have for desert?" is a question daily asked in thousands of homes by troubled housekeepers, as often calling forth only the same ever-repeated answer. It is this perpetually-recurring query that has suggested the publication of the "Household Receipts" book, as an attempt to furnish a ready answer of a more satisfactory nature. The volume is published with the hope that it may, by suggesting a pleasing variety of simple, palitable desserts, be the means of lifting a burden from many a housewife's heart, and increasing in some degree the general peace and comfort of many a household. The "Household Receipts" book, contains 72 pages of choice receipts, will be mailed to you on receipt of your address and five two cent stamps, to pay the postage. Joseph Burnett & Co., 27 Canal Street, Boston, Mass.

Demorest Magazine for January, 1886, is unusually bright and entertaining. Julian Hawthorne's story is completed, and a serial entitled "That Other Person, by Mrs. Alfred Heart, is commenced. Other good articles are "Victor Hugo," "The City of Skulls, and an "Orange Grove." "A plea for the Jig-saw and Jack-knife" will claim the attention of those who desire to beautify their homes inexpensively. The departments devoted to fashion, art, and household decoration are very full, and the pictorial illustrations are excellent. The frontis piece, "Naughty Boy," is a new method of photo gravure: and the admirers of Raphael will be pleased to see an engraving of his fine painting, "St. John in the Desert," which adorns this number.

Alonzo C. Hayden, of Coldwater, an inmate of the Soldier's home for the past six weeks, was reprimanded by Sergt. Frank Daniels for disorderly conduct and intoxication. He took offense, drew his revolver and shot Daniels in the hip. The wound is not serious. Hayden is in jail.

Tecumseh Herald

TECUMSEH, MICH., DEC. 24, 188

A GHOSTLY REVELATION.

One day a thoughtful man strolled through a churchyard's clustered graves,
And hunted for the tombs of hypocrites and knaves;
For in the virtues met his eyes on every polished stone,
And there described in limping rhyme were all the Virtues known.
No single fault, or blemished life, or good thing warped aside;
'Twas plain that all these were sample saints, no sinners there had died.

The sun was low, he sat down beneath a willow tree
To meditate how strange it was that such a thing should be.
When, looking up at once he saw the day had changed to night;
And over each stone there shone a gleam of phosphorescent light;
When, walking swift from stone to stone a fact so strange,
He found that over each text thereon had come a wondrous change.

The deacon's grave, which lot that day proclaimed a perfect lamb,
Was "sacred now to one who lived a hypo-
crit and sham.
While on a tablet shaft where praise seemed destined to endure,
Was graved "He paid his sinekes up by pinching of the poor."
His neighbor—o the head—one said—had "Died from soul confusion."
And near him one "whose perished young from vanity's delusion."

Another, where a pastor lay, said "he was wont to mock
And pride himself because he led the fashionable flock."
While over a merchant laid to rest mid universal moans,
He read, "Poor man! he pledged his soul for pelf and mortgaged bones."
Another, "Here lies Deacon Smith, who also died on earth;"
And "Parson Porksoul, who enjoyed good brandy from his birth."

So everywhere the reader strolled his soul was more dismayed,
Unsavory things on lofty tombs were everywhere arrayed
"Here lies a man who dodged his debts and often styly swore."
"Here rests a saint whose piety was worn hinside before."
"Here sleeps a sinner who for years passed for a churchman true"
"Here rests in peace one who, till death, no peace with neighbors knew."

"Here lies a girl who died of lace, thin shoes and corset pinching"
"Here sleeps a man who hugged his sins with selfishness unflinching."
"Here pause awhile and think of one who never loved his mother."
And "Here is one who captured wealth by fraud against his brother."
"Here sleeps a wretch who crawled through life led by the Demon's tether."
And "Here a soul whose principles were changeful as the weather."

One stone contained in long array a list of secret vices;
One told of death encountered in delirium
tremens' crises;
While some announced with simple truth:
"He died of over eating."
And many said "His vices was great, his virtues poor and fleeting."
So some of "Flash outlive faults," some from
"M. D.'s prescriptions."
And some from "Tempers too intense," and some from "Plain conniptions."

Of one it said, "His sins were bold, his piety most scaly"
Another: "He preached patience oft, at home was most contrary."
Another, "He would mock the truth with many a cynic question."
Another had "An acid soul, which turned to indigestion."
A politician died, it seemed, from "long constrained statistics."
One "Snapped the silver cord to reach beyond his true condition."

Recorded there were faulty traits of every kind and measure
They died of greed, congested rage, of poverty and pleasure
"A rush of envy to the heart," of "Anger in a blizzard,
"Affection to the soul," and "Structure of the gizzard."
"Obstruction of the pocketbook," "Construction sore of kindness"
"Concession of religious thought," and
"Envy turned to loneliness."

Along with each was graven lists of qualities redeeming
And these were numerous on graves of most unlikely seeming,
Where but a scanty stone bespoke some pauper form reposing,
The phosphorescence on long lists of good was brightly shining.
So on he strolled amid the graves, plunged deep in meditation,
And much he marvelled as he read each new and stranger creation.

Tired out at last, he laid him down and slept until the morning;
With woven bars of sunny gold was each white shaft adorning.
But when he read the graven words, the older ills were gleaming,
And half convinced, yet half in doubt, he thought he had been dreaming.
Yet, when he balanced up accounts, he laughed in strange derision,
And wondered whether graves would bear
the test of such a vision;
Nor does he make of tombstones flow a standard of precision.

THE TRADING RAT!

An Account of a Queer Resident of the Mountains.

These interesting rodents are dwellers in the Rocky Mountains and adjacent hills, and are known among us by various significant names, as mountain rat, timber rat and trade rat. The first of course, refers to their native home; the second to the sound of their gnawing, scarcely to be distinguished from the sawing of timber and the last to their peculiar system of barter or exchange, so curious a habit that it is doubtful if any other animal has ever been known to practice it while in a wild or untamed state.

These animals are much larger and stronger than the ordinary house rat—so much so that cats are apparently afraid of them, and can not be induced to attack them. They are pretty, well formed, have very bright black eyes and soft gray fur. Their tails are not rat-like, but more like a squirrel's, only less bushy, being covered with fur.

Such keen, intelligent-looking creatures are they that, but for instinctive dislike to the name of rat, we should be strongly tempted to tame them as attractive and teachable pets. Until they learn that they have an enemy in man, they are quite unsuspicious, and will allow any one to walk up to them.

One of these rats being caught in the house, attracted by his size, I measured him: body, eight inches long; tail, eight inches; around his body, under his fore-legs, seven inches; ears, an inch and a half, fur beautifully fine, grey, with a dark shade, nearly black, running lengthwise down his back. He was very plump and fat, but I omitted getting his weight.

They haunt houses and camps near the hills, but seldom, if at all, those a few miles away. The peculiar trading characteristics natural to this little merchant, its habit of exchanging goods without a "by your leave," wise ways, and queer tricks, seem far more like reason than instinct. A few incidents which came under my own observation will illustrate this characteristic. Some men, passing through the country, camped in a deserted cabin, and before wrapping themselves in their blankets for the night, they placed their bread for breakfast in a pan near the fire. On rising to their dismay, not a crumb of bread was left in the pan, but it was filled with, old scraps of leather, chips, bones, moldy beans, rags, etc. Searching, they found high up on a partly broken shelf, in an old tin can, their bread packed away with old bacon rinds, bones, rags and other trash.

In the house of one of my neighbors these mischiefs carried off a lot of Indian or corn meal, and in the meal box deposited a quantity of bird-shot, which, mixed with the remaining meal, caused the housekeeper great dissatisfaction. In the same house a trunk was accidentally left open one night; in the morning a quantity of rice, bits of dried fruit, and some oats were found mixed up with loose coral beads and other small trinkets: it was an exercise of patience to separate the articles, as may be readily imagined.

With these traders, exchange is no robbery, and distance small hindrance; they travel from their homes, and go from barn to house, from loft to cellar, and through living rooms (noiseless when acting as porters) with great speed and impartiality. A sheepherder, returning to his camp thirty miles away, brought home a fine new hat; placing the box on his table, he went away for the night. Returning, he found the box had been entered, the crown of the hat eaten entirely round, and the box then filled with wool, flannel rags, remains of food, wheat and dried fruits. There was a sudden forced abandonment of that unsurveyed "squatter's claim."

Some ranchmen were gone having for several days, camping away from home. After their return they soon learned that their quarters had not been unoccupied during their absence. A nest composed of wool and rags filled the flour sieve left upon a shelf; next beside the sieve stood the coffee box; in it had been left about a pound of good coffee; now the box was filled to the top, mixed with the coffee, moldy crusts, bones and rinds that had been scattered about the place. "When I threw it all out," said the man, who was telling me, "provoked as I was, I could not help noticing how prettily the nest was made up of knawings of an old blue army overcoat, red flannel shirt and many white rags, put together so nicely and made so soft within." This morning, going to the storehouse for a lamp-chimney, I found an ordinary glass chimney packed close with straw, grains of rice, oats, wheat, a few beans and chips.

The mischief these rats can do in a single night is almost incredible. One, getting into a lady's room, stripped her house plants of every leaf and blossom, and hid himself behind the wardrobe, where he was found next day, with a most singular accumulation of goods, among them many bits of paper, a quantity of raisins, a box of matches, some candle ends, gnawed postage stamps and a lot of odds and ends. Nothing seems to come amiss, and they are particularly fascinated by anything that glitters, often carrying off knives, spoons and watches and silver and hiding them effectually.

They are "good providders," and in the fall build their nests, and fill them with stores of eatables, the result of foraging expeditions for their families before winter is on them. Under a large cottonwood tree, on a side hill, partly underneath a fallen trunk, a party of us found a mountain rat's nest. It was built up nearly two feet in height; the top or roof covering it sloped on all sides, to shed rain or snow; tearing it to pieces, we found it was built closely of grass, moss, chips, bones and many leaves of the cactus (which grows plentifully among the rocks); how they could cut off and convey this thorny stuff, working it up with the other material, in the close covering, is hard to understand. Away down, running in almost under the log, so well built around, out of reach of any moisture or cold, a clever little bed of wool was found, made for the young rats; this wool, of which there was a quantity, must have been collected bit by bit from the weeds, through which the sheep passed, and from their corrals.

To reach this nest in the rat's house, there was quite a long circuitous passage, entrance close to the ground, on the south side—a little den or hole to crawl through. In a little heap outside, not yet carried in among their provisions, but lying close by, we found more than a quart of fine, fresh-looking potatoes, brought from our own garden, and it is an unsolved mystery how the potatoes were taken there, with not a scratch or mark upon them, or the skin bruised or broken. The garden was a hundred feet away, considerably lower down, and a stream of water, an irrigating ditch, to be crossed, to reach it. One person suggested that the rats might have rolled them all away and across some poles thrown over the stream.

Destroying this nest, a couple of rats darted up the standing tree, and there we were surprised to find another nest had been begun in the forks of the tree. We destroyed this nest also, but here comes in another mystery, a puzzling question. How could the rats climb that tree and carry up stores for the winter? This nest was probably twenty-five or thirty feet from the ground.

I asked a ranchman, a few days ago, who was talking about them, if he was afraid of them (I meant their bite). "No," he said, "and they are not afraid of me; they have waked me many a time sitting upon the floor of my cabin and rapping their tails like a dog."

I have already spoken of their great strength and celerity of movements. To an observer these traits are a never-failing surprise. If a light is steadily burning and all is quiet, they are easily watched, darting back and forth, carrying goods, each way—round trip, so to speak, and often long trips. I have known them to bring nails, bits of iron, screws and other things left about the sheds, quite a distance to the house, place them on shelves, boxes or kegs, just as they fancied, but all in some selected spot, carrying back from cellar and store-house dried prunes, apples, rice and all kinds of eatables. If working in the dark, the striking of a match, a slight noise or sudden light will cause them to vanish like a flash.

They seem, too, to have a fancy for certain colors, particularly bright red, and will soon make away with garments of this color, and attach them to their nests. There may be something attractive in the dye, but knowing their partiality for glittering, shining objects, I am inclined to think they have also an eye for color.

With all their curious and often annoying tricks, they are wonderfully ingenious and perserving, and certainly possess the attributes of a good business man in their energy, industry, foresight and a desire to make provision against a time of need.—Popular Science Monthly.

SHORT-HAIRED GIRLS.

Silly Young Women Who Have Their Tresses Clipped for Fashion's Sake.

Poets, artists and such impractical fellows have insisted that a woman's crowning glory is her tresses, particularly red, and the extent to which the switch and false puff trade once obtained gave color to their assumed knowledge; but it was reserved to the Chicago girls to knock skywards the prejudice of ages and with one snip of the shears depilate herself and confound the sticklers after precedent. The precusor of short hair was the "shingled bang," which, necessitating frequent and regular attention at the hands of the hair-dresser, accustomed the girls to tonsorial attention. Next the fashion of wearing one's own hair to the exclusion of some other woman's accustomed society to the contour of the cerebellum and made it difficult at ten paces to determine whether the fair creature wore her hair long or short when a hat covered he crown of the head. And so it came to pass that the sound of the shears was heard in the land and the raven, chestnut, blonde and golden tresses fell like chaff before the wind and womankind had a new craze to occupy itself with.

"We have all kinds," said Dollard, the hair-dresser. "Some have their bangs cut clear across, some slanting, some have them long and some short, but nearly all have them, all save the 'dudines'—the awfully English girls—who promenade with the slims who wear imported clothes. They are the girls who wear ugly tailor-made tweed suits, with tight fitting sleeves, swing an umbrella, sway the body at the waist, locomote in gentlemen's shoes and drag the hair back from the middle of the forehead and let it go frowsy over the temples. The American sort of girl goes a great deal on the hair-dresser and has her hair trimmed regularly. Some have it curled by us every other day. Those who wear those sweet little curls on their neck, just under the smoothed-up hair that is carried to the top of the head, have them trimmed. I can't tell you why women cut their hair short. Neither can they and you need not ask them. It's the correct thing and that settles it. The last few years' fashions in female hair-dressing have ruined the hair trade. Very few switches are worn now. Much hair is a disadvantage, and false frizzes are almost things of the past. Many ladies do not even carry off their locks after they have been cut. Some save them, with the idea of some day having them made up. Undoubtedly many women improve their hair by having it cut, because they give the young hair a chance to grow, relieve the scalp from undue heat and have more attention paid the head than customary. Women who are contracting bald spots don't take kindly to short hair, but, then, fewer women than men get bald, and those that do have the bulge on the men, for they can disguise it so neatly. Will the departure of false hair dyes and patent lotions are going. Hair restoratives, one and all, are nothing more not less than dyes, and people are learning to leave them alone. Yes, hair crop harvest is at its height, and it will boom, the hair trade when big coiffures come in. It takes about eleven minutes to clip off three feet locks, and half as many years to grow them."—Philadelphia Times.

COREAN CUSTOMS.

Female Headgear Whose Dimensions Must Be Seen to Be Appreciated.

A recent traveler (Mr. Carles) describes some things in Corea which had escaped notice. There is a great deficiency of women, though there is no evidence that female children are destroyed, but it is gravely affirmed that infant mortality is peculiarly prevalent among girls. These facts deserve careful examination. Safer ground is found in Mr. Carles' statement that Coreans wear the largest hats in the world. At Phyong Yang, on the west coast, the poor women wear baskets three and a half feet long, two feet and a half wide, and two and a half deep. It is said, with all gravity that these hats effectually cover the face. We should hope they would. Women of a better class wear a white cloak over their head. The men wear a somewhat smaller hat. It requires both hands to keep these hats in place. The hats are made of like stuff and plan with the covering of a common fishing-boat. The fishing-boat cover is a little larger than the feminine hat. It would seem that the European woman of fashion has never exhausted the possibilities in the direction of large hats. In Corea they vary a doctor of letters and monumentalize him in a striking way. They place over his last resting-place the trunk of a tree, painted like a barber's pole up to a height of some thirty feet. The top and branches are cut off, and in their place rises a slim, carved dragon, twenty feet long, with the head of an alligator.—Christian Union.

—In a sandstone quarry at Kingston, Ont., has been discovered a well-rounded pillar, about two feet in diameter, penetrating the solid rock for fifteen feet. It is of the same material as the main body of the rock, but the veins are circular, precisely like the growth of a tree, the veins in the rock being flat. Near at hand is a circular opening in the bluff, out of which another such pillar has fallen.—Toronto Mail.

OUR COINAGE.

The Free-and-Easy Old-Time Mints of the Republic.

The very earliest coin struck for America was a brass shilling, for the Burmuda or Sumner Islands, in 1612. On the obverse was a bow and the legend "Summer Island," with the value, XIId. On the reverse was a ship under sail firing a gun. In 1652 Massachusetts coined the Pine Tree shilling. John Hull was mint-master, and the Mint stood on his land in Boston. The first pieces struck were mere planchets, stamped on one side N. E. and on the other with the value, XIId, VId, IIId. October 19, 1652, the Pine Tree money was coined. On the obverse was a pine tree inclosed by a double ring, containing the legend: "Masathusetts in," and on the reverse a double ring and "New England, An. Dom.," with the date in figures and the denomination occupying the field within the inner circle. Ten years later a twopenny piece was added to the list. This coinage was discontinued in 1686, but strangely it all bears the date 1652 on the shillings, sixpences and thrippences, while all the twopennies are dated 1662.

Virginia in 1773 had a well-executed copper coinage.

In the reign of George I. a coinage was issued for America by Great Britain. The pieces were known as "Rosa Americanas," and were of a mixed metal, resembling brass.

In 1783, a silversmith in Annapolis, Md., began the manufacture of shillings, sixpences and threepenees. The shilling had on the obverse two clasped hands and the legend "I. Chalmers, Annapolis." The field on the reverse has in one part a serpent and in another two birds holding a branch in their beaks.

During the period of the Confederation, 1778-1787, the power to coin money was vested not only in the Federal Congress, but in the several States. Many of them took advantage of it to issue copper coins. In June, 1785, Vermont gave to Reuben Harmon the right to make copper money for that State for two years. He started a mint at Rupert, and made cents that bore an all-seeing eye and the legend: "Vermont ensium Respublica."

In 1785 Connecticut granted to Hopkins, Hillhouse and Goodrich the right to coin ten thousand pounds of copper cents, and on this appeared a female figure, with a staff and olive branch, which, modified, appeared on later silver coins after the adoption of the Constitution.

New Jersey granted the right to coin to Mould, Goodsby and Cox. The firm quarreled, and two of them started another mint, so that two were run, and between them produced £10,000 in copper cents. These coins bore a horse's head and a plow.

October 17, 1786, Massachusetts ordered the establishment of a mint to coin gold, silver and copper, and Joshua Witheral was authorized to provide the necessary facilities. No gold nor silver was issued, however. The copper cents and half cents produced bore the first image of the eagle grasping a bunch of arrows.

In 1874 Mr. Jefferson made a report to the Congress which fixed the decimal system, and provided for the issue by the Federal government of four coins, viz: A gold piece of $10 value, a silver dollar, a dime, or tenth of a dollar, silver, and a hundredth of a dollar in copper. The contract for copper coinage was let to Mr. Jarvis, to make three hundred tons of the same. This copper cent bore the words: "Mind Your Business," which gave it the name of the "Franklin Cent." These words were not authorized by law. The first deposit of gold bullion for coinage at the United States Mint was on February 12, 1795. It was made by Moses Brown, a Boston merchant, and amounted to $2,276.22.

The first gold coins made were 744 half-eagles, July 31, 1795. The first delivery of eagles was of 400 pieces, on the 22d of the following September. The first coinage of quarter eagles was delivered in 1796. The first deposit of silver bullion was July 18, 1794, made by the Bank of Maryland, and consisted of French coins, amounting to $80,715.05. The first silver coins were delivered October 15th of that year, consisting of 1,758 dollars. There was a small coinage of half-dimes. In 1796 the dime and quarter-dollar were added to the silver coinage. The half-dollar appeared in 1807.

The coinage of the silver dollar was suspended in 1804, and was not resumed until 1836. In 1851 the three cent piece was added to the coinage. This, with the various nickel coins, completes the list of coins issued by the Federal Mints. The shilling and six-and-a-quarter cent pieces were never coined by the United States. A great many experimental pieces have been issued that were not of the authorized coinage. The shillings and sixpences coined by the States were long in circulation, but we have not seen one current for more than thirty years.—Alta California.

WANTED TO HELP.

The Lively Interest a Farmer Took in a New Railroad.

The best test of a man's willingness to aid in a good cause is to ask him to contribute money toward its support. If he stands this severe test and contributes according to his means, the sincerity of his protestations may be accepted.

But one is often reminded of a farmer who, on being approached by the agent of a proposed railroad, exclaimed vociferously:

"Yes, I'm in favor of railroads first, last and all the time. Railroads are a civilizing influence; they cause the waste places to blossom as the rose. You can put me down as a man who will help build a railroad."

The agent was delighted. As the farmer was rich, the agent supposed that the farmer would take about fifty thousand dollars worth of stock, so he took out his books and asked:

"For how much stock shall I put you down?"

"Waal," said the farmer, "I suppose you can put me down for seventy-five cents, if it runs near my farm.—Youth's Companion.

THE LAMP.

Origin and Changes of the Popular Household Ornament.

Lamps, derived from the Latin lampus, has been defined, until within a few years, as a receptacle for oil with a wick for illumination; but the inventions of the past generation have made it impossible to distinguish between the lamp proper and any other artificial means of giving light. As used by the Egyptians, Greeks and Hebrews, lamps were simple flat vessels, round or oblong in shape, at one end of which was a small handle, at the other a nozzle, and with a larger opening in the center, into which the oil was poured. The oil commonly used was vegetable, but, according to Pliny, sometimes of liquid bitumen. These lamps, many of very elegant form and ornamented with fanciful designs, were hung by chains to bronze candelabra. Tarentum and Ægina were especially famed for making them of great excellence.

Among the Canadian French the same low, oval metallic vessels, furnished as in early days with a handle at one end and a nozzle at the other, may still be seen. Some are made to be carried in the hand, while others are suspended by chains in the middle of the room. The Hebrews kept their lamps burning all night, and this custom is still in vogue in Aleppo and Egypt. From the earliest times until within about a century the lamp remained much the same, consisting simply of oil and a wick in some kind of a vessel. A complete revolution in artificial light was caused by the invention by M. Ami Argand, in 1784, of a burner with a circular wick. The flame was thus supplied with an outer and inner current of air. Argand was also the inventor of the glass chimney, as applied to his and other lamps. The so-called astral lamps were provided with these circular wicks, the reservoir for the oil being arranged in the form of a hollow ring, enveloping the central stand that supported the burner. In consequence of the peculiar shape given to the ring the lamp casts no shadow at a little distance off. An ingenious piece of clock-work machinery was devised by Cárcel, in 1800 for pumping the oil from the reservoir at the foot of the lamp up to the burner, and thus supplying it always from the same point. This lamp, slightly improved by others, was, in many respects, the most perfect of these contrivances, but its great cost prevented its general adoption. It was, furthermore, so large and heavy, that it could be moved only with difficulty, and the very complicated nature of its mechanism required access to skilled workmen to keep it in repair. A modification of the Carcel lamp, known as the Diacon, was long popular in this country.

In 1787 Peter Keir made the great invention—since fully developed by Aronson—of raising the supply of oil by means of another fluid with specific gravity greater than oil. This fluid was generally a mixture of salt and water.

The "automaton" invented by Porter in 1804 was very ingenious. The lamp was suspended on an axis, counterbalanced by a weight, so that it hung level when full, but at an angle of forty-five degrees when empty, thus being fed evenly by the gradual ascent of the burners.

In 1822 Samuel Parker, Jr., made an important improvement, the fixing of French chimneys upon burners by means of metal support.

The difficulty of distinguishing between the countless inventions relative to lamps and those referring to general illumination does not appear great prior to 1865, when the production of petroleum greatly stimulated the study of practical methods of generating light.

It is remarkable that the invention of Hero of Alexandria, in which the oil was raised by water, involves the pressure principle, since developed in nearly a hundred forms. It is adapted to any kind of inflammable fluid, and while burning may be rolled on the ground, upset, or reversed for any time without danger. It is interesting to note that the most important recent inventions in lamps are chiefly American. A full description of them all would occupy volumes; but it is safe to say that no other household article has undergone so many and such marked changes in the past century as the lamp.—Boston Globe.

SEA SICKNESS.

Abraham Lincoln's Opinion of a Popular Remedy for Its Cure.

Though there are many remedies, so-called, for sea-sickness, yet medical science, we believe, refuses to put forth any of them either as preventives or as cures. Prominent among the remedies which keep their promise neither to the ear nor to the hope, are wine and spirits. An anecdote of President Lincoln, related in the Century, shows that he knew the uselessness of these remedies.

When he visited General Grant at City Point, in 1864, he was met on his arrival by the General and his staff. When asked how he was, the President replied:

"I am not feeling very well. I got pretty badly shaken up on the bay coming down, and am not altogether over it yet."

"Let me send for a bottle of champagne for you, Mr. President," said a staff-officer; "that is the best remedy I know of for sea-sickness."

"No, no, my young friend," replied the President; "I've seen many a man in my time sea-sick ashore from drinking that very article."

That was the last time any one screwed up sufficient courage to offer him wine.—Youth's Companion.

OUR CLUB LIST FOR 1886.

Fully recognizing the tendency of the times towards lower prices, we have decided to adopt a club system in lieu of premiums. Subscriptions for any newspaper or magazine published will be taken at reduced rates, but our regular special club list will be short and sweet.—Nearly every subscriber to the HERALD also takes the Detroit Free Press, the Detroit Tribune or the Michigan Farmer. We shall furnish these papers clubbed with the HERALD at the following rates:

Herald and Tribune	$2.00
Herald and Free Press	2.00
Herald and Mich. Farmer	2.00
Herald and any two	3.00
Herald and all three	4.00

Persons who wish the Household supplement in connection with the Farmer will pay twenty-five cents extra.

Twenty-five cents will pay for a trial trip of three months with the HERALD alone. New subscribers, paying at once, will receive the present month of December free.

A WORD ABOUT NEWSPAPERS.

The Tecumseh HERALD last week printed a twelve page paper, embracing a holiday and Clinton supplement. We have looked it over carefully, but fail to find a line in it regarding the president's message, or any congressional news. Perhaps Bro. Stacy is not aware that congress is in session, or that a message has been delivered.

The above clipping is taken from last week's Adrian Press. Perhaps editor Stearns intended it as a criticism. Whether that be so or not, it affords a good text from which to preach a short homily on the sphere and proper management of a local newspaper.

The first number of the HERALD was issued in the month of May, 1850. During the ten years succeeding that date, it is probably true that a majority of the HERALD subscribers took no other newspaper. They looked to their home paper for foreign news, President's messages, Congressional proceedings, and a general news summary from the four quarters of the globe. But times have changed since then. People now take their home paper for local news, and rely on some metropolitan sheet for weightier matters. What the custom may be among the patrons of the Press we know not, but we venture to say that there are not six subscribers to the HERALD in Lenawee County who do not take from one to half a dozen other newspapers. Both villagers and farmers who take the HERALD take some city paper such as the Free Press or Tribune of Detroit, World, Sun, or Tribune of New York, or some other sheet of like character, for political reading and general news.

This being the situation, what is the proper plan for a local newspaper to adopt? To duplicate the general news found in other papers, or to let the general news slide and give additional space to home matter? After ten years' experience in publishing a local newspaper, we have decided to adopt the latter course, and the fact that the HERALD'S subscription list is constantly growing is pretty convincing proof that our subscribers' views coincide with our own on this point. We think we are strictly within the truth in saying that nine out of ten men who have discontinued the HERALD during the past five years have done so on account of some political or outside matter that appeared in its columns, not from any dissatisfaction with the local management of the paper.

The editor of a political organ like the Press may feel under obligation to print the message and doings of Congress, but we are not troubled in that way. The HERALD is nobody's organ but the proprietor's, and our aim and desire is to publish a first class local newspaper. The longer we publish a newspaper the stronger is our belief in the correctness of our theory. In fact we design, with the beginning of the new year, to make improvements in this direction, to substitute more home and neighborhood news in place of the miscellaneous reading matter which now fills our inside pages, and we feel confident that the numerous patrons of the HERALD will approve of and appreciate the change.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19, 1885.

Washington has already assumed a holiday appearance. The stores and shop windows never presented more attractive displays and on the business streets crowds of promenaders and shoppers made a scene full of color and spirit. Christmas purchasers occupy the minds and take much of the time of a large portion of the community. Many people are wise enough to follow advice of the merchants in buying early thus avoiding the great rush and having at the same time the benefit of selection from complete assortments. This activity will go on and increase until it reaches the climax the night before Christmas.

Capitol Hill too has been made lively during the week by the peoples' Representatives, although the Senate has given itself to little else than a Temperance debate and the Presidential succession bill, which it passed, while the House has been confined to the seemingly dull subject of a new code of rules. Startling revelations were made regarding whisky in the Senate committee rooms however and in the House Mr. Randall the chairman of the powerful appropriations committee was sharply attacked because of his unwillingness to have his own wings clipped.

As I have probably mentioned before all the less fortunate members of Congress are more or less envious of the fifteen men who compose the Committee on Appropriations. All Congressmen are anxious to make appropriations and a large majority of them favor that feature of the new code of rules which distributes the Appropriation bills among different committees.

Mr. Randall holds that such a disposition of his bills would lead to unparalled corruption and extravagance, something which had never been charged upon his committee. But members talk about the prosperous growth of the country, and argue that the appropriations should keep pace with it. They also talk about individual honesty and capacity.—They say, "Why should fifteen men assume all the honesty and economy in the House?"

This discussion of the rules will most likely consume the entire week if not a longer time, and though the new code may not pass in its present shape, it will probably be adopted with amendments. Those who want to get on the several Appropriation committees will vote for it, those who favor some of the other propositions involved in it will vote for it, those who want to beat Mr. Randall will vote for it, and those who want some change and don't know just what it is will vote for it. This category includes a majority of the House.

During this discussion Mr. Randall had received some very hard personal thrusts regarding his official course and his management of the people's money. On more than one occasion he was tempted to lose his temper, than which there is nothing a statesman can so ill afford to be without.—In debate he mentioned that notwithstanding the fact that President Arthur had declared in his message against it, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the forty-seventh Congress had a large appropriation made. An excited Republican member sprang to his feet at this point, and declared that it was the most injudicious and uncalled for act of ex-president Arthur's administration.—"My four Republican colleagues and myself," said he, "voted for that appropriation, and we came back to the House." "Well," replied Mr. Randall, "I voted against it, and I believe I too, came back to this House."

In the Senate prohibition was sprung by the proposition to prohibit the sale, exhibition or use of liquors in the Capitol restaurants. It led to an animated and rather farcical discussion of temperance, in which Senators Cockrell, Vest, Ingalls, Frye, Maxey, Saulsbury, Manderson and Teller took part.

Senator Cockrell, of Missouri, made some grave charges of dissipation in committee rooms. He had also seen Senators so completely under the influence of whiskey in the discussions that for the sake of decency the Senate had adjourned. He volunteered to give names if Senators desired them, at which proposition there was laughter.

Senator Frye, of Maine, said no reform had ever made such strides as temperance. He had been in the Senate six years but had never seen two Senators in the condition indicated by Mr. Cockrell; he did not know that he had ever seen one unfit for business. Personally he wanted to see all liquors excluded from the Capitol, but temperance people could not get all the emperance they wanted, they had to take all they could get. The old rule prohibiting the sale of fermented liquors in the Capitol was adhered to.

The Public Herald for December is on our table. It is published by Lum Smith, at 706 Chestnut St., Philadelphia. The editor is still pursuing his good work of exposing frauds. Long may it wave.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT, DECEMBER 1, '85.

For this report returns have been received from 804 correspondents, representing 634 townships. Five hundred and thirty-nine of these returns are from 382 townships in the southern four tiers of counties.

The condition of wheat in the southern four tiers of counties is 94, and in the northern counties 100 representing vitality and growth of average years. One year ago the condition in the southern counties was 104, and in the northern counties 103. Clover seed will average about one and 66-hundredths bushels per acre in the State. The condition of live stock is estimated about one per cent below an average.

Reports have been received of the quantity of wheat marketed by farmers during the month of September at 325 elevators and mills. Of these, 263 are in the southern four tiers of counties, which is forty-six per cent of the whole number of elevators and mills in these counties. The total number of bushels reported marketed is 1,072,739, of which 222,352 bushels were marketed in the first or southern tier of counties; 329,285 bushels in the second tier; 198,456 bushels in the third tier; 211,014 bushels in the fourth tier; and 111,632 bushels in the counties north of the southern four tiers. At 31 elevators and mills, or ten per cent of the whole number from which reports have been received, there was no wheat marketed during the month.

The total number of bushels of wheat reported marketed in August, September, October, and November, is 7,748,870, which is 3,345,445 bushels more than reported marketed during the same months in 1884.

It will be noticed that while the number of reports received from elevators and mills is only six less than received for the November report, yet the quantity of wheat reported marketed in November is less than one-half the quantity of wheat reported marketed in October. The number of elevators and mills from which reports have been received for both months is 245. At these the quantity marketed in October was 1,733,305 bushels, and in November, 871,503 bushels, a decrease of fifty per cent.

The nature and causes of the potato rot, now so prevalent in this State, have been carefully investigated at the Botanical Laboratory of our State University by Prof. V. M. Spalding and Mr. Erwin F. Smith, and the latter gentleman has kindly furnished the following article for publication in this Report.

THE POTATO ROT.

The rot which has this season destroyed nearly one-third of the potato crop in Michigan, and a still larger per cent in New York and neighboring States is identical with that which caused the great famine in Ireland in 1847. Michigan annually raises about 9,000,000 bushels of potatoes, and though we are in no danger of starvation should the entire potato crop be destroyed for a series of years, the loss of even a third or a quarter of the crop bears heavily on the prosperity of the farming community. The importance, then, of the potato crop, and the probability of the return of the rot next year with increased destructiveness should the season be wet, makes it desirable to give the widest possible currency to sound knowledge of the nature of the disease and the measures which can be used to check its spread.

PREVENTIVE MEASURES.

1. From what has been said it follows that the parasite may often live over winter in the tops of decaying tubers left in the fields after harvest. Prudence would, therefore, dictate the complete removal and destruction of such refuse. It should be buried or burned. It should not be used for compost.

2. Store the harvested crop in dry cellars, and sort over several times, at short intervals, carefully removing from the bins every tuber which shows the least sign of decay. Remove, also, to a separate pile, those tubers which have been lying in contact with the diseased ones. The sorting will be facilitated and the decay hindered by storing the tubers in casks, barrels or small boxes. Potatoes buried in quantity in fields will be likely to rot in toto during the coming winter if, by chance, any infected tubers were buried with the sound ones.

3. Plant next season only tubers which are entirely sound, outside and inside. The black spots contain the fungus. Some tubers may appear sound on the surface and be diseased within. Determine the soundness of the tubers by cutting at planting time. To plant diseased potatoes will insure a continuation of the rot.

4. Even if direction No. 1 has been followed, more or less of the potato fungus will probably remain over winter in the fields ready to grow if there is an opportunity. Do not, therefore, plant in the same fields as last year, nor in adjoining ones, nor near fields planted by neighbors if some remote locality can be found.

5. Take advantage of the prevailing direction of the wind. Our summer and autumn winds are chiefly from points between S. and W. There is, therefore, a chance of escaping wind-blown spores by planting to the S. W. of other potato fields, or to the N. E. of woodlands or other large uncultivated tracts.

6. The growth of the parasite is favored by moisture and stopped by drouth. It is rapid in rainy weather and when there are heavy dews. Usually the rot is much worse upon clay land or other soils which retain moisture. Choose, therefore, a light and dry soil for planting.

It has been shown experimentally that, with only moderate watering, the summer spores will penetrate the soil to a depth of several inches, consequently "hilling up" will not protect. The probabilities are, also, that no substances can be dusted upon or otherwise applied to the growing plants with much benefit. If some varieties of the potato are less subject to the rot than others, a thing not improbable, the present state of our knowledge does not enable us to say positively which they are.

Bro. Samson, of the Blissfield Advance, is getting in earnest. He says: We want everybody that owes us to square up before the first of January. A call by the constable may be the result, if you don't.

CLINTON CHRONICLES.

Gertie and Kittie Millspaugh are passing the week pleasantly, with their cousins who dropped in upon them from Jackson. On Monday evening they provised a happy gathering of friends at their home and the hours were pleasantly passed with their guests, Fred and Ida Ostrander.

The public given by the C. H. S. L. S. at Town Hall, Friday evening last, was patronized by a large and appreciative audience, and the exercises were good and fully up to the standard maintained by the pupils of the High School in all their undertakings since the advent of its present management. Indeed the Clinton school is gaining a reputation abroad to which our citizens may look with pride and satisfaction. The society above refered to, is a feature not to be overlooked by those seeking advantages in this direction, and is increasing its membership by additions thereto, of earnest, thorough workers who enter upon their duties with a determination to succeed, and are nobly supported in their endeavors, by one of the very best of advisors, the present superintendent, I. B. Laflin.

We are glad to learn that Mrs. Broadbent, who has been reported on the sick list, is once more able to be about the house.

Mrs. M. Boomer, mother of Mrs. George Holmes and Mrs. E. D. Main, living west of this village, was taken suddenly ill with a chill of the congestive type, while visiting relatives at Parma, and at last accounts was very low.

Hiram Saxton, Jr. and Theron Fisk visited relatives and friends in Ann Arbor last week. They Sundayed in the city, because of a sick horse.

The Sunday-school of the Methodist Church are jubilant over the nice things Santa Claus has deposited upon the tree for their inspection and acceptance, this evening.

At the last meeting of the High School Literary Society, the following officers were elected to serve during the next term of school

James Eagan, President.
Ed. L. Parker, Vice President.
Minnie Martin, Secretary.
Thomas Noon, Treasurer.

Minn. Rose, son of ex-postmaster, Rose, who has been having such a serious time for many weeks, is finally able to smile upon the successful treatment given by Dr. Cameron, with hopes of a speedy recovery.

Peck's bad boy left town for other parts, Monday noon.

Frank M. Dean, a brother of Mrs. G. H. Miles, has been a fixture on the Local force for a few days.

Remember the Christmas tree at the Baptist Church this evening. All are invited to come in and enjoy a good time, and help to make it pleasant by their presence.

Biggins & Hendershot is the firm name of a new co-partnership in the blacksmith business, carried on in the old T. H. Biggings shop on Jackson street.

Reduced fair on all railroads, from this date until Jan. 2nd. See notices in another column,

There is a probability that the Clinton and Tecumseh boys may meet for that game of foot ball yet, notwithstanding unfavorable weather brought disappointment previously.

Clover hullers are very busy in these parts, and a considerable amount of the tiny seed is produced, but the market is rather dull, with prospects of a downward tendency in price.

The Choir at the Congregational Church is now provided with Organ, Solo Cornet and Baritone accompaniments and is highly complimented upon their improvement in this direction.

Tickets are in circulation for the dance at the Brooklyn rink to-morrow evening, for which the Clinton band furnish music.

An adjourned lawsuit, Holmes vs. Lancaster, took place at the office of justice Keyes, last Tuesday, and the court took the full time granted, in which to render a decision. We shall ascertain who wins next Saturday.

Chas. Adam, proprietor of the Sand Lake Hotel, who is making his home in Adrian during the winter months, was in town Tuesday, having come up to see about the lawsuit.

James Campbell and George Boardman came down from Franklin Tuesday to view the sights and shake hands with their friends.

A. M. Freeman, of Manchester, was in town Tuesday, conducting the lawsuit for the prosecution.

Kittie Abbott was the recipient of a pleasing visit with her cousin, Mat. Maharney, of Hudson, last week.

Clinton lodge, No. 175, F. & A. M. will hold a meeting at their hall next Saturday evening, for work in the first and second degrees.

Next Monday is the day for the annual masonic festival to take place, and arrangements are going forward for another good time generally, as all like gatherings have been in the past. The Clinton lodge has handled this annual festivity, until it has become a time looked forward to by anticipants as one of the most enjoyable occasions of the year.

D. St. John has come and gone so often since his first departure, we have hardly known whether to credit him to Lenawee or Hillsdale county, but from appearances at the old furniture rooms on Chicago street, we think it safe to credit him to Clinton for the present.

The new roller mill is turning out some flour that cannot fail to please.

Chicago street presented an unusual appearance of liveliness Tuesday, and we were almost persuaded that Saturday was not the busy day of the week, after all.

The weather to-day—Wednesday—has the appearance of a premature January thaw with a sprinkling of April showers.

Do not for a moment imagine that because of the great rush to supply the demand for Christmas, that our dealers are not able to supply you. Look over the advertisements in this supplement, and call in and see the endless variety of goods they have suitable for a New Year gift, or in fact, at any time inclination may tend that way.

Maggie Biggins, who has been attending school at Toledo, is spending the holidays with her parents and friends in this village.

Eugene Van DeMark went to Detroit Wednesday morning, to spend a day or two with his father who is in that city.

The friends of Hily Bond, who has been living at I. B. Laflin's and attending school the past term, will be sorry to learn of her intention to remain at home in Bridgewater, during the coming term.

Although the attendance at the chicken pie social at the Baptist Church on Tuesday evening, was not large, those who were present seemed to enjoy it to the full extent of their ability and each one declared it the occasion of the season. The writer was present to partake of one section of a chicken pie, and merely wishes to mention the fact that all who have attended like repasts, prepared by the ladies of that society, can agree with us when we state that it is hard to modify the english language in expressing the satisfaction to be derived therefrom.

The "Three Widows" presented by A. O. Miller and company, at Town Hall Tuesday evening was certainly deserving of a larger house than was given. The parts were well sustained throughout, and the lovers of comedy and a good, harty laugh, who were not present missed a treat that does not often occur in this village. The play was produced for the benefit of the Clinton Band, which fact of itself, should have insured a full house, but it seems to us that Clinton—unlike many other places—does not wish a Band at all, by their indisposition to aid the boys, who have put forth their best efforts to learn to play, that they may be able to furnish music at home when needed. They have been to considerable expense procuring music etc., and it seems but right that they should have met with a rousing response to this call for aid, for the entertainment was one of A. O. Miller's best and luckiest hits.

Mrs. Fred Bostedor is smiling upon her old neighbors and many friends of Clinton this week.

School is closed for the holiday vacation and we miss some familiar faces from our midst, who are at their homes awaiting the advent of the christmas pie.

The exercises and supper by the Congregational society to the Sunday-school and others, at Town Hall, last evening, was well attended and taking into consideration the events that have transpired within the past two weeks, it certainly was a great success, not an undeserving one however, as all present will acknowledge.

See Robert Reddick and liquidate at once, and save extra per centage.

"Patronize your home market." That is just what we say, and with two such good markets as Clinton possesses we don't see any call for a reminder even. Why just step in at the new market once and see the tempting exhibition there displayed.

James Bradner and daughter returned from their visit to the "forest city," Tuesday evening, and report a good time during their entire absence.

A Regular "D. B."

Not long ago a well-known newspaper man took day board at the Sherman House, says the Chicago Times. He was at home in the place, and was a privileged character. One day he sauntered behind the office counter into the regions that are supposed to be sacred to gentlemen who wear diamonds and address congressmen, governors, tourists, porters, newsboys and other statesmen by their first names, when his eye happened to catch sight of his own name on a slip with others over the bookkeeper's desk. He would not have given it a passing thought had not the letters "D. B." been attached. He "dew off the handle" on the instant, and demanded an interview with the proprietor. That august functionary was found, and to him the irate journalist addressed a few remarks. "Do I owe you anything?" he asked. "No, sir," was the prompt reply. "I have paid my bills all right so far as you know, haven't I?" "Certainly. I have no complaint to make."

"Then why do you permit your clerk to post me over his desk as a 'D. B.?'"

"I do not; there must be some mistake."

The journalist assured him that there was no mistake, and that he had seen the objectionable and significant letters with his own eyes. The more he thought of it the madder he got. The proprietor could not pacify him until he promised to have the matter investigated and the guilty man punished. It was found that the night clerk had perpetrated the outrage, and that evening the injured citizen took an early opportunity to take him to task. "What did you mean by putting 'D. B.' after my name?" inquired the newspaper man. "O, go away," he replied, thinking his interlocutor was "chaffing," as was his custom "don't bother me." "No, I won't go away, and I demand a civil answer to my question."

The clerk looked up and saw an angry man in front of him. Then his countenance was suddenly bisected by a grin, and he doubled up like a man with the colic. "You took day-board, didn't you?" he inquired, as soon as he regained his composure. "Yes, I did, and I have paid for all the day-board I have enjoyed." "So you have," was the soothing response, "but just come around here a minute, till I show you something. You see you are in good company. You are an associate of several millionaires and railroad magnates. They are each and every one designated the same way, 'D. B.' That is short for 'day-board.' Regular boarders are marked 'R. B.'"

The journalist spent a week's salary trying to bribe his audience with liquid nourishment to keep still, but like all good things the joke leaked.

How They Meet and Part.

A gentleman lately took down verbatim the conversation of two fashionable ladies during a morning call—viz: "How do you do, dear?" "Pretty well, thank you." (They kiss.) "How have you been this age?" Pretty well. How have you been?" "Very well, thank you." "Pleasant to-day." "Yes, very bright, but had a shower yesterday." "All your family quite well?" "Quite well, thanks. How is yours?" "Oh, very well thank you." "Have you seen Mary B. lately?" "No, but I have seen Susan C." "You don't say so! is she quite well?" "Yes, very well, I believe." (Rising.) "Must you go?" "Yes, indeed; I have seven calls to make." "Do call again soon." "Thank you; but you don't come near me once in age." "Oh, you shouldn't say so, dear; I'm sure I'm very good." "Good bye."—"Good bye, dear."—Exchange.

"Gale Forest gives the following pat reply to the above:

"Yes! and after writing that the gentleman discovered the strain upon his mental faculties had been so severe, he went out to "brace up." Just as he reached his destination, met a friend from out of town, when the following conversation was overheard and taken down by the writer, as an example for women, of men's "wit and wisdom." "Hellow! old fellow, how are you?" (They shake) "First rate, how are you?" "Tip-top!" "When dy'e get in?" "Just now." "Have something?" significantly.) "Well—yes, don't care-fi-do." (They step into a saloon, after cautiously looking around, to make sure no outsiders are about, to see they are breaking their pledge—pause—they emerge, innocently wiping their mouths, before putting into them their lighted cigars, and being primed," resumed:) "How's yer folks?" "All well; how's yours?" "All flourishing now; youngest boy had diphtheria, but all right now." "Crops good up your way?" "Well, yes, pretty fair." How do politics look?" "Bad—very bad—all democrats up our way; big democratic majority. (Takes out his watch.) "Thunder! ten minutes to 12,—must be off—got to see a man at 12." "Can't you come up to the house and take dinner?" "No, guess not to-day—got several pressing business engagements. Good bye." "Good bye." They again wring hands, and then rush away from each other as if fearing they might have to stand another treat.

Feathered Slaves.

No people are more ingenious than the Chinese in the minor arts of life. That they have succeeded in training birds to fish is a striking example of their ingenuity and patience. Instead of carrying nets, the fishermen provide themselves with a large number of cormorants which perch on the edge of the boats. It is a curious spectacle to see these creatures engaged in fishing, diving into the water and always coming up with a fish in their beaks. As the Chinese fear the vigorous appetites of their feathered servants, they fasten around their necks an iron ring, large enough to allow their breathing but too small to admit of the entrance of the fish they seize; to prevent their straying about in the water and wasting the time desired for their work, a cord is attached to the ring and to one claw of the cormorant by which he is pulled up when inclined to stay too long under water. When tired he is permitted to rest for a while; but if he abuse the indulgence and waste his time, a few strokes of the bamboo recalls him to duty, and the poor diver resumes his laborious occupation. In passing from one fishing ground to another, the cormorants perch side by side, so as not to disturb the equilibrium of the frail vessel.

"WAIT FOR ME."

Seaward runs the little stream.
Where the wagoner cools his team,
Where, between the banks of moss,
Stand the stepping stones to cross.
O'er them comes a little maid,
Laughing, not a bit afraid;
Mother, there upon the shore,
Crossed them safely just before
This the little lassie's plea—
Wait for me, wait for me!

Ah, so swift the waters run,
One false step, twere all undone;
Little heart begins to beat,
Fearing for the little feet.
Soon her fear will all be lost.
When the stepping stones are crossed;
Three more yet on which to stand—
Two more—one more—then on land!
'Tis the little lassie's plea—
Wait for me, wait for me!

Ah, for you, my laughing lass,
When the years have come to pass,
May one still be near to guide
While you cross Life's river wide.
When no helping hand is near,
None, if you should call, to hear,
Think, however far away,
Mother still knows all you say:
Even in Heaven heeds your plea—
Wait for me, wait for me!

—G. Clifton Bingham, in Chambers' Journal.

A CHARITY GIRL.

Mary Martin, the "Incorrigible," and Her Christmas Eve.

"She must be a good girl, she must be neat, and quick, and tidy; she must not use bad language, and I like to have them pretty, or reasonably pretty."

Such was the request made by the excellent Mrs. Shepard, as she sat, weary from walking, in the reception room at the Orphans' Home.

"I have heard you say that before," said Mrs. Metcalf, the good-natured matron, "and I have heard ten thousand other people say it. So I dare say you have heard my joke, that you had better go to some institution where they keep young angels."

Mrs. Shepard laughed as she had laughed at the same joke before, and, when she was a little rested, the nine girls at that moment under the roof were brought in.

But, to say the truth, they were not an attractive "lot," as Mrs. Metcalf, alas, would have classed them. She had done her best. The frocks were clean and the hair was prettily arranged. Mrs. Metcalf had changed all their names. There was not a Cynthia Ann nor a Bridget nor a Polly among them all. Every child was named Maud or Alice or Constance, or by some other name that might please a sated fancy. They had neat stockings and tidy, even jaunty little boots. Their hands were clean, and a good many of them had a little coquettish air, which intimated that neat clothes were doing them good, and that they were waking to the knowledge that it is the business of at least one sex to try and please, whatever may be said of the other. But, on the other hand, small-pox had done its worst with some. Bad beer and whisky, alas, had had their way, with others. With others there was a certain hang-dog air, which showed only too well how they had been kicked about by such relatives as they had, before they appeared in this "Home," which was so far happy that here nobody pretended to be a relation.

One by one the girls came into the parlor and talked with Mrs. Shepard, and one by one they went out, and talked about her. When the last child had gone, Mrs. Shepard said, rather wistfully, to the patient official, who had been displaying these goods as best she could:

"They look nicely, poor little things, but somehow, I do not fancy any of them. Where is the girl I saw on the fence, as I came in?"

"On the fence?"

This was Mrs. Metcalf's exclamation, and Mrs. Shepard knew that she had made a mistake—that to climb the fence was a crime.

"Well, do not take me up," she said. "I should not have said on the fence—by the fence, in the garden."

Mrs. Metcalf's brow cleared. "That was Mary Martin. She has only been with us two days."

"Will you call her in? I liked her face."

Mrs. Metcalf coughed. She even blushed. "Why—really—dear Mrs. Shepard—she—she—has not been well brought up. She came back from Ashby yesterday, and she had come back from Bernardston the week before. She is healthy, and good-natured, and willing, and strong; but—but—they tell me she lies, and steals, and swears sometimes, and—and—that she uses bad language."

"The truth is, she never remembers her father and mother. She never had any. She was brought up in a poor-house in Rhode Island, and they were so good to her that she wants to go back there. But of course she can't go back, because she is old enough to earn her living."

"Does she swear very badly?" asked poor Mrs. Shepard, who was afraid of compromising her church membership.

"To tell you the truth, I never heard her say anything worse than devil, but Mrs. Goss—she is the Bernardston lady—says she swears all the time."

But, as the reader knows, the woman who hesitates is lost. Mrs. Shepard had liked the pleasant smile of the girl, who was astride on the wall of the Home as she went in. She asked to have her sent for, and the result, which is all that the reader need care for, was that in the three p. m. train for Bedington Crossing Mrs. Shepard and Mary Martin went together.

"The trustees are very particular about their going to school," said Mrs. Metcalf, as she tied the girl's scarf round her neck and bade her goodby.

"Never fear," said Mrs. Shepard, "she shall go to school enough—whenever it's convenient," she added as a salve to her conscience, as she went down the steps.

Mrs. Metcalf heard the first part, and if she heard the second she never reported it to the trustees.

A nice time had Mrs. Shepard with Mary Martin through the next week. It was not "convenient" to send her to school; for the school was two miles away, and the snow in the road was scarcely broken, and the men-folks were hauling wood. The girl was accustoming herself to chop mince-meat, to feed hens, to skim milk, to work a rotary churn, to sprinkle and iron clothes, and to do ten thousand other things in that woman's work which is "never done"—from which duties she did not shrink. "She is awful spry," said Mrs. Shepard to her husband when he asked for a verdict. But as to the trick of language, the candid hearer had to acknowledge that her references to the enemy of souls were too frequent. As to veracity, there were occasions when it seemed as if she had been trained in some school of a very low sophistry, if, indeed, she had not been left without training in that poor house from which she graduated. Honesty in deed, however, was what Mrs. Shepherd clung to as the center of her life. When one day at dinner she cut through what was meant to be a mince pie, when the crust instantly flattened beneath the edge of the knife, when it appeared that there was no "mince" there, then it was revealed to Mrs. Shepard what was meant by Mrs. Metcalf and the lady from Bernardston, who had said that Mary Martin stole.

Fortunately for Mary Martin, she did not lie when charged with this "theft." She grinned and hardly said, even under pressure, that she would try not do it again.

As for Mr. Shepard, he only laughed. When consulted as to whether a good whipping would do Mary any good, he advised against the whipping. Mary was shut up in her own little room for three hours—until, indeed, the hens made such a row about her captivity, that, to quiet them her release was found necessary. Mrs. Shepard then gave her what, if she had kept a journal, she would have called a serious talk." If Mary had kept a journal, she would have called it a "good jawing." In fact, neither of them kept any journal. Mary relieved her feelings by giving the hens twice their allowance. After tea she was sent to bed at seven o'clock, by way of further punishment.

Poor Mrs. Shepard watched with tears nay, with prayers, all the next day for tokens of contrition. But such tokens were very few, if any. The girl did bring in Lucy's thimble, which Lucy had dropped in the wagon. She could, "just as well as not," have kept it, Mrs. Shepard said, and sold it to the first peddler. "But she didn't, she brought it in, just as pleased as anything." On the other hand, when Silas Pike, the hired man, came in, when Mrs. Shepard questioned him as to the language which Mary used in familiar conversation in the barn, he grinned from ear to ear. He could not remember much—clearly he did not wish to "go back" on the child. But he implied that there was frequent reference to a place of torment, as well as to the enemy of souls, as Mrs. Shepard had heard before, and so reticent was Silas, that she ceased in her examination from very fear of what it might elicit.

That evening she went to the Sacrament lecture with her husband—or tried to. But when they were passing Deacon Little's house, Miranda Little ran out to tell them that Parson Noyes had a sore throat, and that the lecture would be postponed. So they turned back, and were at home again in an hour from the time of starting. Mrs. Shepard was astonished to see a light in her own bed-room.

She ran upstairs to find Mary Martin, "prinking before the glass," as Mrs. Shepard told her husband, with her mistress's best bonnet on, the lace scarf John Shepard had sent her from Havana thrown lightly round her neck, and, to be short, as Mrs. Shepard's eyes descended from point to point, every scrap of elegance most dear to that lady was displayed on this huzzy's form.

"Mary Martin, what are you doing?"

So still had been Mrs. Shepard's step, and so eager Mary's pleasure, that she was wholly unconscious of the fatal return from meeting.

She turned amazed, forgot all proprieties, and cried:

"Good Lord! Is that you?" Theft and profanity conjoined.

"Mary Martin, I am ashamed of you! Take these things off, and go straight to bed."

And Mrs. Shepard spent the night awake, thinking of a punishment. The girl would have returned to the "Home" before light, but that neither Silas nor Mr. Shepard could give the necessary three hours to take her to the station. So far the stars in their courses worked for the poor child, if indeed it was desirable that she should stay where all that she did was wrong.

As for her, she went to sleep without anxiety, slept till morning, and came down stairs "as if for all the world nothing had happened."

Poor Mrs. Shepard had still devised no punishment. Imprisonment would be a part, if any she could devise; and, when poor Mary appeared, so unconscious and sunny, it was not in the good woman's heart to begin a new controversy. Thus far, as in a finite world often happens, the punishment did not fall upon the sinner. And Mary went to the chickens as before.

But, when dinner time came the storm-cloud broke. Mrs. Bangs and George Bangs had arrived at noon, the advance party of the whole Bangs family, who were to spend their Christmas here. Mrs. Shepard superintending, Lucy had set the table with her own hands. The best table-cloth was on and the best napkins, the best glass and the best china. Lucy had even cut her best flowers for the middle of the table, and all was complete excepting the serving of the actual dinner. The pickled walnuts, the celery, the currant and cranberry jelly were all in place.

To this table, fifteen minutes after her daughter had left it, Mrs. Shepard bore, with her own hands, the goose not from the oven. One instant was enough to show that some one had broken the beauty of both mounds of jelly—indeed consumed part of each, and in her haste—for of the sex of the maurauder there was no doubt—had dropped on the white table a quivering mass of the plunder.

"Mary Martin, what have you done?"

And Mrs. Shepard turned, expecting to see at least a tearful face, but there was no Mary Martin. That lady had left the hot potatoes in the kitchen and had taken refuge in the hay loft.

Nothing is more inconvenient than the holding a court-martial in the presence of visitors, or administering even the simplest punishment. But in this case this was necessary. No witnesses were heard. The culprit did not plead. No counsel were present. The judge bade Silas find Mary, take her to her bed room and lock her in. And Silas did so.

No! I do not think this punishment was as severe on Mary Martin as it was on Mrs. Shepard.

For Mrs. Shepard, I am well aware that it embittered all the afternoon. She had promised herself the pleasure of once more hanging a stocking from the ledge above the kitchen fire, and of filling it with apples and figs and raisins and certain candies, which for this very purpose she had ordered from Portsmouth. All this for one girl.

No stocking now!

She pretended she did not think of Mary. She did not once allude to her. Nor did her husband. Nor did Silas. Nor did either of her visitors, George Bangs and Mrs. Bangs.

All the same she did think of Mary hundreds of times, as the afternoon and evening passed.

They passed but slowly, let us confess, as is the way with afternoons and evenings when visitors have come who have been long invited, when visitor and visited have put on their company manners, and when they have not a great deal to say, and being usually busy people, have, in honor of this visit, nothing to do.

Mrs. Shepard was not sorry when, as the clock struck nine, Mrs. Bangs said that they rose very early, and that she was tired.

There was a chance for all of them to go to bed. And they went.

Yes; I am quite sure that Mary's punishment once more was more severe upon the punisher than upon the punished.

For Mary was a campaigner of far too much experience to be much disturbed by the confinement of a few hours, more or less. The dinner she missed she was sorry for. But, as the reader knows in part, she had discounted some of its possibilities, and the reader does not know, and need not know, how much farther she had gone in the same direction. She was to spend certain six hours in one place which she would otherwise have spent in another. This was, on the outside, all.

And her conscience!

Well, there you are too much for me.

Conscience she certainly had; and up to a certain point, she was undoubtedly sorry that she had wounded or pained Mrs. Shepard, whom she really liked, and for whose kindness she was really grateful. But this sorrow was mixed with a certain regret for the accident by which, as she supposed, she had been betrayed—the "gob," as she would have called it, on the table cloth. Mrs. Shepard's pride in the elegance of her jelly-mould was wholly beyond Mary's comprehension. As for a sense that she had taken what was not hers, this pained her but little. She looked on food much as a squirrel looks on nuts, with a vague notion of meum, perhaps, but only a very vague notion of tuum.

No, dear reader—of remorse, as you and I try to fancy remorse, as a gnawing fang or tooth which will never be satisfied—of that our poor Mary had virtually none.

She lay on her bed, comfortably covered with the bed quilt, and, raised by her elbow, she surveyed the passage of the afternoon on the farm. She was grimly pleased when she saw her mistress essay the feeding of the hens, which would naturally have devolved upon her. She was more pleased when she saw Silas fulfilling certain duties of wood-carrying and ash-bearing—which would have been her's were she not imprisoned. Darkness came and the child fell asleep. At seven o'clock her door was pushed open and a plate with a slice of bread and a mug of water were left upon the floor. Then with some ceremony the door was bolted. Mary was awake now; she had not undressed herself; she ate the bread, drank the water and looked out upon the night.

The moon rose nearly full. The snow, and the fall at the sawmill, and the ice of the pond beyond, flashed with the glory. Mary saw Silas go and come with his lantern, as he took his last turn at the barn, and she pondered how he could come back into the night. For her, her one wish, since the ice had made the week before, had been to possess herself of Silas' skates, which were hanging in the harness room, and to try them on the millpond. Of course Silas would now put them on as soon as he had watered the oxen.

But of course Silas did no such thing. He had been at work since before daybreak. He was glad enough to go to bed at eight o'clock. Moonlight or pitch darkness were all one to tired Silas.

Then absolute silence came. And Mary Martin, really for the first time felt that her imprisonment was serious.

To be hindered from washing the dishes, from feeding the hens, and from fetching the kindling was hardly a grievance.

But to be hindered from this possible hour of skating yonder—that was serious indeed.

But even Mary's invincible courage gave way at last. She found her head dropping for sleep, when, to her surprise, a bang down stairs announced that Mr. Shepard was shutting up for the night. This was the slam of the front door, refractory about locking.

Could it be possible that they were going to bed so early?

What luck. And Silas' skates were in the harness room.

Yes. She could see the best room windows from her prison. She could see Mrs. Bangs take off her front hair and put on her queer old-fashioned night-cap. She could not see her mistress' room. But she could see the column of light from its window on the snow and the sycamores. And at last both lights were extinguished. For the other windows, Mary was careless. For Silas, she knew the stupid creature had been asleep an hour.

If he had not been stupid he would be skating on that ice now.

It can hardly be said that Mary had had any plans for escape. She had stayed in her room because, on the whole, this seemed advisable. As Mr. Mill would say, it was more useful that she should stay. But now it no longer appeared useful to her. She put on her thick shoes and all her other walking gear, and opened the window.

There were full twelve feet between the floor of her room and the ground. Even Mary did not dare to "hang off," as she had expected to do.

A little annoyed, she looked round the room, not so much for a means of descent as for the most convenient, sure that civilization would supply something.

After this hesitation she promptly ran her little iron bedstead to the window, tied to the top rail the corner of a sheet, and in a minute had swung herself down, hand under hand, by grasping the folds, and dropped lightly upon the snow.

In another minute she was in the harness house, and in a third minute she was buckling Silas' rather long skates upon the stout boots which Mrs. Shepard had provided for the winter.

"Silas must get me a better pair," said the girl aloud, and then swung off to that delight, almost like that of flying, of a quick push up the pond, directly toward the face of her only companion, the good-natured moon.

No Lily—no Emma, kindest of the readers of these lines—I say with distress that no touch, even the slightest, of remorse embittered the flight. It was clear, sheer Aryan delight in the open air—shall I say, in the world of God? The confinement of eight hours had made it perhaps, the more delicious.

The poor-house, which to this child was heaven and home, stood by a great pond. Three or four villainous pairs of skates, or half pairs, were a part of the equipment known to the youngsters, and concealed with vows and solemnities from year to year. Whatever favors that home had to give Mary had shared; so she could skate easily and well.

And while she should have been abject in sin, she was triumphant in freedom.

Nor had she any stop-watch to trouble her, Araminta; nor bracelet on her wrist, which should prick her at the hour of ten or eleven. Nor had she passed her word to any fairy godmother that she would return at eleven and three quarters.

There are disadvantages in not having fairy godmothers. And certainly this poor child had none; nor had she ever heard of a girl that had. But there are certain advantages as well. To Mary the advantage was that, as no one had told her that she might go out, no one had told her when she must come home.

Like Red-jacket, she had all the time there was. And she used it with his freedom.

She came home precisely when she was so tired that it was no longer a pleasure to skate. That is, she chose her time, as a gull chooses his time to rest upon the sea.

She took off her skates, carried them to the carriage house, and walked slowly across to the "ell" of the farm house, where her sheet still waved in the wind.

With that general survey of the premises, to which all savages are trained, the wild creature scanned the whole establishment.

Her quick eye caught a cloud of smoke rising outside the kitchen chimney from the shingles of the roof.

She screamed with all her might: "Silas! Silas, Miss Shepard!" And, without waiting for an answer, she dashed into the harness room, threw down her skates, and brought out the short ladder which lay there. It taxed her full strength. But she was not made of very frail timber, and she was equal to the burden.

It was not so easy to get it up. But the girl was handy, and after two failures, she saw it well in place,—alas, not quite reaching the eaves.

She did not falter an instant; she filled at the cattle trough a tin pail and a meal bucket, carried one up and set it in the gutter, and then the other. She then swung herself upon the roof, still screaming "Silas!" and "Miss Shepard!" but with no reply.

She husbanded her water. The smoke about stifled her. But there was no flame. She spattered with her hand the contents of each vessel over the shingles, and these were so hot that steam rose instead of smoke. She threw both pail and bucket to the ground, and slid down the ladder. This time she carried up the tin pail, and returned for Silas' axe.

One skillful blow opened a little hole, through which a torrent of flame spurted. But the girl was ready for it, and a torrent of water quenched it. Another cloud of steam, and she stepped to her ladder to descend for more supplies.

Alas! her weight came strong upon the gutter. Who shall say why—the whole of it gave way. The ladder fell—Mary fell—the gutter fell upon her—the ladder fell upon her.

She felt no pain. But she screamed, as before: "Silas! Silas!—Miss Shepard! Miss Shepard.

And when she tried to pull herself out from the wreck, she could not! What had happened? He foot was all tangled in the rounds. She could only paw with her arms in the snow.

"Silas! Silas! Miss Shepard!" No answer.

The brave girl raised herself on her elbow. She made a snowball from the snow her water slops had softened. She fired it skillfully through Miss Shepard's window.

"Miss Shepard!" for the last time—"Miss Shepard."

This time—and very quickly—Mr. Shepard appeared.

"Who's there?"

"I'm here—Mary Martin. The house is a-fire, and I can't put it out. I've got the ladder round my legs, and I can't stand."

Mr. Shepard made scant toilet. Mr. Bangs made as little. Silas made none.

In sixty seconds poor Mary was relieved. George Bangs ran up the ladder and pronounced that her work had been thoroughly done. Nothing but steam ascended now. And, as he cleared the wreck, a few handfuls of snow were enough to extinguish the embers he found in the roof below.

As tenderly as if she were a baby, Mr. Shepard carried Mary up to his wife's room.

It was only too clear that her leg had been broken in the fall.

But she shed never a tear. And when Silas came in with the glad news that there was no danger, she only said: "Mr. Fillebrown said when the roof was a-fire we must not waste our water."

Silas was fitted out in the cutter to bring Dr. Woodward to set the broken leg.

As for Mary, she fell asleep, really feeling but little pain.

When she awoke there hung over Mrs. Shepard's chimney-piece a long red stocking, crowded full.

The girl lay quietly enough as Dr. Woodward fastened on his splints. And when he said to her, good-naturedly: "We will not keep you in bed very long," she said, very prettily: "I'm glad I was not shut up before the fire came."

"Doctor, would it hurt her to have her Christmas presents?"

"Hurt her! No, indeed, I should say she had earned them."

"Do you think it was Santa Claus's pipe which set fire to the shingles?"

"Sally," said Mr. Shepard, as he cut off a slice of the turkey's heart to send up-stairs to Mary's dinner, "that girl is awful spry."

"She is, indeed," said Mrs. Bangs. "Do you think that perhaps she learned how to use her hands and feet in the same place where she learned to swear?"

"May be," said George Bangs.

"Well," said Mrs. Shepard, "we can't have everything. I told Mrs. Metcalf I did not expect an angel."

"I don't know as angels know how to handle axes, though they can go up and down ladders."—Edward E. Hale, in Boston Transcript.

A boy came home from school much excited, and told his father that the teacher said all human beings were descended from apes, which made the old man so mad that he replied angily: "That may be the case with you, but it ain't with me, I can tell you that, now."

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Two entertaining Christmas stories are found on the supplement pages this week.

The Odd Fellows public installation has been fixed for Tuesday evening, Jan. 5th. 1886.

Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Cowley, of Dundee, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Brown this week.

The Postoffice will be closed from one o'clock P. M., during the balance of the day, on Christmas.

Wm. Smith, of Franklin, has moved into the village and occupies Mrs. Webster's house on Union street.

A. D. Lawrence started for New Orleans Tuesday, where he will remain about a month. His wife has been there some time.

Tecumseh No. 69, F. & A. M., will hold a special next Monday evening, Dec. 28, for third degree work. A full attendance is desired.

Mrs. H. A. Hurd, of Ann Arbor, arrived in town Tuesday and will remain during the holiday season with her sister Mrs. Harry Lee.

Lewis Priest of Onsted was in town yesterday shaking hands with his old friends. He is still pegging away at Onsted and must be making money, for he has his hands full.

Mrs. M. Adele Hazlett of Addison was in town yesterday and will remain a day or two. Several of our citizens who had not previously met her, had the pleasure of forming Mrs. Hazlett's acquaintance and they will cordially extend an invitation to her to call again.

"The Three Widows" was presented at the opera house last evening to a small audience. The play is a laughable comedy, in which some clever bits of acting are introduced by Mr. & Mrs. Miller, and also, some fine music by the whole family. The play seemed to take with the audience well.

The Tecumseh Lodge, No. 69, F. & A. M., have decided to hold a festival on Thursday evening, Dec. 31, at their lodge room. A committee consisting of Abner Wilson. O. Q. Jones, J. R. Hialey, John J. Orr and John F. Wilson have the arrangements in progress. It is to be free to master masons and families and other friends whom they may invite. The committee have also appointed the following to act as committees in their respective localities: Franklin—B. Hurry and T. M. Camburn; Ridgeway—John VanVleet and Wm. H. Arner; Britton—Samuel Underwood and John Britton; North Tecumseh—John Gillespie and F. V. Horton. These committees will canvas their respective localities.

Last Tuesday a lady of this village decided to order an article of merchandize from Detroit for Christmas, and to insure prompt delivery she attached a specially delivery stamp to the letter. It went to Toledo on the four o'clock P. M. train, and thence to Detroit on a late train. At four o'clock the next morning, the friend to whom the letter was sent was routed out of bed to receive a message from a family relative in Tecumseh. He was considerably alarmed at first thinking some awful accident must have happened, but the reading of the letter solved the mystery and he concluded to wait until business hours before filling the order. If that Christmas gift failed to reach its destination in season, it was not the fault of the special delivery system.

MACON MUSIC.

We predict an open winter. The "short hair craze" has struck the town.

Geo. V. Osgood, Town Treasurer, was in the village last Monday and succeeded in raking in a goodly amount of spoils from the reluctant tax payers of this vicinity.

There was a unanimous vote last Sunday for the continuance of the Sunday School throughout the winter.

The discourse by Rev. Mr. Pierce at the M. E. church last Sabbath was deserving of special attention. He urged upon his hearers the necessity of providing an abundance of good literature in their homes.

The Rev. Mr. Dutton is spending the holiday vacation at his old home at Holland, Mich.

The donation given at the house of Mrs. Sarah Morgan, for the benefit of Rev. Mr. Dennis, was pronounced a success, socially and financially; about thirty-five dollars were donated.

A Christmas concert will be given by the Sunday-school Friday evening, at the M. E. Church.

Rice Hendershot, is slowly recovering from the effects of his injuries of several weeks ago.

Mrs. Isaac Mills is suffering from blood poison, the result of a cut received on her hand from a rusty tin.

ONSTED ODDS.

Clarence Aten, of Napoleon, is spending a few days at his father's.

We understand Lyman Baker has a writing school in Dist. No. 6

A Mr. Aten, of Deerfield, is in this vicinity selling S. G. Aten's crop of Bohemian oats.

Hines & Son have their meat market in full blast and keep on hand a good supply of beef, pork, sausage, mince-meat, etc.

William Onsted has four men cutting stove wood in his woods west of the village. Looks as if Uncle Will was going to run a wood yard next season.

Fred Snow and family arrived home Monday evening after a wedding trip of nearly four weeks. Glad to see them back again.

O. L. Short's people had to walk home from church last Sabbath. Cause.—Horses did too much kicking during service.

Goods have commenced to arrive for the new drug store. The store will probably not be opened until after New Years.

F. A. Parson commenced his writing school at this place last Thursday evening, with twenty pupils. He is a good penman and understands teaching the subject.

Preparations are being made for a good time at Grange Hall, Thursday evening. There will be a Christmas tree, free for all who wish to use it. Refreshments will be served, to those who wish, at twenty cents each.

Mrs. E. C. Spalding starts Thursday, for Lyons, Michigan, where she will spend Christmas with her mother.

Henry Howes has lost a shepherd dog, black with yellow legs and white ring around his neck. When he went away he had a strap around his neck. Any one knowing of such a dog would confer a favor on Mr. Howes by letting him know.

M. P. Wemple started Wednesday morning for Cleveland, Ohio, to spend the holidays with his parents. He will also visit friends in New York before returning.

Changes of a Century

The nineteenth century has witnessed many and very great discoveries and changes:

In 1809 Fulton took out his first patent for the invention of a steamboat.

The first steamships which mad regular trips across the Atlantic ocean were the Sirius and Great Western in 1830.

The first public application to practical use of gas for illumination was made in 1802.

In 1813 the streets of London were for the first time lighted with gas.

In 1813 there was built in Waltham, Mass., a mill, believed to have been the first in the world which combined all the requirements for making finished cloth from the raw cotton.

In 1790 there were only twenty-five post-offices in the whole country, and up to 1337 the rate of postage was 25 cents for a letter sent over 400 miles.

In 1807 wooden clocks began to be made by machinery. This ushered in the era of cheap clocks.

About the year 1833 the first railroad of any considerable length in the United States was constructed.

In 1840 the first experiments in photography were made by Daguerre.

About 1840 the first express business was established.

The anthracite coal business may be said to have begun in 1820.

In 1836 the patent for the invention of matches was granted.

Steel pens were introduced for use in 1803.

The first successful trial of a reaper took place in 1833.

In 1846 Elias Howe obtained a patent for his first sewing machine.

Observe the Birthdays.

Let the birthday of each member of the family be always remembered when it comes. Let there be something a little out of the ordinary routine in the arrangement of the table; cookies fashioned as Johnny likes them best; one of Frank's favorite plum puddings, or Julia's special liking, a loaf of ginger cake; or a wonderful lemon pie, such as only mamma can make.

Then there must be presents. Sometimes people may think they cannot be afforded; but reflect. The little one needs shoes, dresses, aprons and many other things. Purchase one or more for the birthday. It will seem just as much present to the recipients as though they were not obliged to have it.

Next come school-books and story-books, a set of furs or a pair of skates, (should the birthday occur in the winter,) a pretty little dinner-basket, or, if the parents can afford it, a little gold band for one of the white fingers, a necklace, a watch with a shining chain, or the pony that has been wished for so long.

Encourage the little ones in giving to each other, and also remember father and mother's birthday; believe me, it will be bread cast on the waters; the days will only be a few ere some returns, and there will be a never-failing supply of pleasure as long as you and your children live.

A hotel in Boston built of stone and brick 96 and 69 feet frontage with basement and seven stories above the sidewalk, was moved nearly 100 feet in order to make a change in the street. One side was supported by eight granite columns twelve feet high, the whole building weighing 5,000 tons beside the furniture. The occupants of the stores, and the hotel were not disturbed in the removal.

Winter Evenings on the Farm.

I remember to have read somewhere how some Italian artist gathered up all the bits of broken glass cast aside in building a cathedral, and how from these pieces, trimmed, arranged and set in order, he constructed one of the most beautiful windows found in Italy. What others had cast aside as useless, he took up and from it wrought out the beautiful, and the useful.

Boys and girls on the farm, as everywhere else, let run to waste many bits of time, spare moments, hours, evenings which if they would but turn to good use, might be made to serve the noblest purpose. But the trouble is to get at it, to have some plan of working over these spare hours. How can the evenings be turned to use, and the best use? Of course one can doze them away sitting before the fire, can gossip, play checkers, and so on, but this is not the best use, nor the best way to spend long evenings. An occasional evening spent in this way may be good, but to thus let all these passing spare hours slip by is to waste life. And at the end of ten years of spare hours what have we to show?

Let me suggest a simple plan for utilizing evenings; and let me suggest it out of my own experience, for I do no not know what our experience is good for if it is not to help others. It often comes too late, to help us. And now, the fact that you are on a farm, is a great advantage for using your evenings. I know this from experience both of farm life and city life. In the city there is something to break in on your plans all the time. In the country your evenings are comparatively free, at least an hour or two for each evening, and you can set aside this time if you plan before hand to do so. We can do it in the city, but it is more easily done in the country.

I know now what objections you begin to offer: "I am too tired, too sleepy, have too much else to do," and all this. Yes, but all these obstacles fade out of sight if we only take hold of the work with a purpose. For those who do not care to make the most and best of life, these suggestions of mine will have little value. But here and there possibly they may find a young man or woman to whom they may be helpful. If so, I have my reward, in endeavoring to do for others what I would that some one had done for me when I was a boy on the farm struggling for ways and means toward gaining an education.

The problem is, how to get time? And the only answer is, "take it." Take time; that is the only way you will ever have time for anything. Lay your plan, write it out and solemnly sign your name to it, if it will thus make it more binding, to spend at least an hour every evening in reading some good book. You will have interruptions, but persist in your plan, and soon other things will yield and you can pass from one hour's reading to two. And you can hardly imagine how much good may come to you from these few hours spent over a good book. They will follow you all the days of your life. You will look back to them in after years with sweet reflections and pleasant memories. No one of you who may read this is likely to find greater difficulties in working this plan than I did as a boy. I remember well how my first interest was awakened in history, an interest which has never left me, because commenced early in life and against great obstacles. Yes, the very difficulties I met with added zest to the task, and I have lived long enough now to see that these very hindrances were to me blessings in disguise. They gave me then and have continued all these years to give me a sense of victory over difficulties and, you notice in your own experience every difficulty mastered gives you strength and nerve, and tone for still greater difficulties. Stop not, then, for these little obstacles; rise above them, and in the mastery find hope and courage for future struggles.

I was at work on a farm by the month, and for a man who was unhappy if a boy in the house was sleeping after four o'clock in the morning, or came in from his chores before seven in the evening. And yet, having signed the solemn compact with myself to read history one hour each evening, I did it, though it was a terrible thorn in the flesh for the head of the family to see the tallow candle wasting away for such foolish business as reading. He would often upbraid me with "What y' goin' to do with yer larnin', when y' git it?" But on I pressed with my plan, and I have come now to thank God, not only for the obstacles overcome, but for a sense of strength and courage, that has helped me in many another struggle of life. And it is this sense of strength from victories won which I would bring to bear upon every young man who may be wrestling with the same or similar difficulties.

THE GIANTS' CAUSEWAY.—The Giants Causeway is in the County Antrim, on the northeast coast of Ireland, between Benmore Head and Port Rush. For some seven or eight miles along that coast there are cliffs of basalt, many of which are made up in great part of rude vertical columns, which alternate with layers or amorphous beds of the same class of rocks; and ranges of these in places reach the height of 400 or 500 feet. When these are viewed in front from the sea they suggest rude resemblances to architectural forms. The name of Giants' Causeway is often applied to the whole coast range, although it is properly applicable to but a small portion of it. It is a platform of basalt, composed of closely arranged columns, ranging from 15 to 36 feet in height, and it extends from a steep cliff down into the sea, till it is lost below low-water mark. Its length exposed at low-water is about 600 feet, and it is divided into three portions called the Little, Middle, and Large or Grand Causeway.

The story is told of an old hunter in Michigan who lost his way in the woods a number of times while the country was new. At length he secured a pocket compass and its use was explained to him by a friend. But shortly afterward he lost his way again and lay out as usual. When found he was asked why he did not travel by the compass. He did not dare' he said. He wanted to go north, and he "tried to make the thing point north, but it wasn't no use, 'twould shake, shake, shake round and point southeast every time.

The Curfew Bell.

It will be remembered that the curfew is commonly said to have been introduced into England by William the Conqueror. By that monarch it was ordained, under severe penalties, that when the curfew bell rang at 8 o'clock in the evening all lights and fires should be extinguished. There are those who hold that this was merely the enforcing of an existing and very common police regulation to that effect. The absolute prohibition of lights after the ringing of the curfew bell was abolished by Henry I. in the year 1100, but the practice of tolling a bell at a fixed hour in the evening was continued, and this, which is still extant in some places, is a survival of the curfew of medieval times. At first the common hour was 7 o'clock, then it was gradually advanced to 8, and in some places to 9 oclock; indeed, in Scotland, 10 o'clock was not an unusual hour. The curfew was a regulation most useful in those early days, when it was the custom to place the fire in a hole in the middle of the floor under an opening in the roof, to allow the escape of the smoke. When the family retired for the night, the fire was extinguished by covering it up; hence the term couvrefeu, or curfew. The regulation was also serviceable in obliging the people to keep in their houses, and thus preventing night brawls in the streets. It is believed that there is no historical authority for the popular tradition that the severity exhibited by the Conqueror in enforcing obedience to the curfew was more particularly designed to prevent the English from assembling in secret to plan schemes of rebellion against their Norman lords.

After the Sunday Dinner.

After the Sunday dinner, what? Well it all depends. A person whose brain is wearied with intellectual work during the week, or whose nervous system is exposed to the strain of business or professional life, ought to sleep within an hour or so after his Sunday dinner, if he can. It is surprising how much like a seven-day clock the brain will work if the habit of a Sunday nap be once formed. Nature will take advantage of it as regularly and gratefully as she does of the nightly sleep, and do her best to make up lost time. People on the other hand, whose week of toil is chiefly physical, may well give their minds activity while their bodies are resting. Two sermons and three or four hours of solid reading are a real rest to some on Sunday, while to others such a course amounts to a positive Sabbath-breaking. Sunday is a day of rest, not a day of work, religious or otherwise. It is a day of repose, not for exhaustion. But what the dogmatists on one side and the illiberal liberals on the other are apt to overlook is the fact that all men do not rest alike any more than they labor alike, and what may help one may kill another.

An English writer says that the middle class Englishman, as a rule, does not buy books, except a few classics and professional treatises, but waits for his chance at the book club or circulating library. There are instances where authors are asked to lend their own copies by men of ten times their income. Wine and china may be bought, but books must be hired for, says the writer, the English are educated to the point of reading, but not to paying for books.

HE KNOWS.

"'Tis just as true
That what you do
Old Santa Claus
He knows; because
He knew about
My running out
To slide, that night.
It was not right.
Mamma said No; but I forgot,
And in the morning—oh! guess what!
My stockings were as thin and straight
As when I hung them by the grate.

"I looked inside—
And, how I cried!—
I found a whip,
And on a slip
Of paper, this:
'My little Miss
You should obey
Mamma alway:
But if you're tempted yet again,
I truly hope you will refrain
Or pause, my little maid—oh! pause,
And think upon Old Santa Claus.'

"And then—'P. S.
My little Bess,
Now put your hand
Behind the stand,'
And when I did
I found there, hid,
My nicest pair
Of stockings, where
He'd filled them full. Oh! dear! Such fun!
All knots and bobs and overrun
With every kind of lovely thing.
I was so glad I had to sing.

"And in the toe
I found, you know,
Another note
Old Santa wrote;
The very best
You ever guessed,
I read and read.
Hear what it said:
'All this is for my little friend
Who minds Mamma, and does no end
Of kind and pleasant deeds;
Does not forget, but always heeds.'

"Now, don't you see
That it must be
Quite as I say?
And, any way,
I think we should
Be very good
Not just because
Old Santa Claus
Knows all the things we ever do,
And gives us pretty presents, too,
But 'coz it's right, I do believe
And so does my big brother, Steve."

BY WAY OF THE REGISTER.

How Santa Claus Found His Way into the Hillscombe Parlor.

What is Christmas without Santa Claus? It looked very much as if Jack and Effie Hillscombe were soon to find out what such a Christmas would be; for it was already Christmas Eve, and the house where the two children lived was filled with the usual good cheer, and all the bustle of preparing for the great event.

Papa Hillscombe sat in the big arm-chair putting on his slippers, and doing his best to imagine himself before the great log-fire he had known so well as a boy; for there were no grates in the Hillscombe house. Jack and Effie lived in a city where, at the time of my story, very few families had open fire-places in their houses; and little Effie had asked her papa, as she kissed him good-night: "Why, papa, how is Santa Claus goin' to det in when there is no fire-place?" This question really puzzled Papa Hillscombe, but he told the children that Santa Claus would find his way in, and that it would be all right in the morning.

But after the children had gone to bed a queer look came over their papa's good-natured face, and it was plainly to be seen that he was thinking of little Effie's question.

It happened, too, that the children were not satisfied with the answer he had given them; and while papa was locking up the house for the night, and attending to the furnace, they were still exchanging opinions on this weighty subject from their little cots.

Suddenly Jack sat bolt upright. He had an idea! And in another moment he had toppled out of bed and made his way on tip-toe to Effie's cot.

A whispered consultation followed, and in a few minutes later both little cots were deserted, and two tiny white figures were creeping noiselessly down the staircase.

All the doors were locked and all the windows closed, and papa was just shutting the iron door of the great furnace in the cellar, when he was startled by voices which seemed to come from the furnace itself. For a moment he amused himself with the fancy that Santa Claus was really making his way in by the furnace; then he thought he might have left a door unlocked.

The thoughts of Santa Claus or other less welcome visitors were, however, soon forgotten when he heard the sound of children's voices, and found that it was Jack and Effie who were talking.

Papa opened the furnace door again and listened.

They were evidently talking near the register, for what they said was plainly heard through the furnace-pipe by Papa Hillscombe. Jack was saying:

"O Effie! how can Santa Claus ever bwing my big sled through the wegister?"

"Or my doll's house?" said Effie.

There was a pause, then Jack exclaimed, triumphantly: "I know! let's take the top off."

"But," said Effie, "we're not bid enough."

"Oh! you're only a dirl; I can do it."

Then followed quite a struggle between Jack and the "wegister," but it was only after the "dirl" had come to his aid that Jack was able to lift the iron plate; and then papa heard her say, in a solemn tone: "Do you fink, Jack, he could det a doll's house through dat?"

"Oh, Santa Claus can do anything!" was Jack's comforting reply.

The two little people were on their knees, peering intently down the dark opening, when suddenly they were startled by a voice, which seemed to come up through the hole in the floor. The voice said:

"It's time little children were in bed! Santa Claus can't bring his presents till everybody is fast asleep!"

The children could not tell the voice, as it came up through the pipe, and with a cry of "He's tumming! Santa Claus is tumming!" two little figures in white scampered up-stairs and back to their cots.

The next morning (as bright a Christmas Day as ever dawned) found two little figures, not in white this time, standing over a pile of pretty presents heaped up around the register; among which might be seen a brightly-painted sleigh with "Effie and Jack," in big gold letters, on the side, and a wonderful three-story doll's house; and Jack was exclaiming in triumph: "Didn't I tell you Santa Claus could do anything!"

So Santa Claus came into the Hillscombe parlor, after all, and it was Effie and Jack who settled for themselves the difficult question of how he was to get in.—St. Nicholas.

A GENUINE SPIDER STORY.

How This Curious Insect Folds up Its Web.

There must be some insect lovers among the Tribune, 'Young Folks,' and I want to tell them of a curious fact about spiders.

Some days since, while sitting on the porch enjoying the early morning, I noticed two beautiful spider webs among the vines. I have been fond of watching spiders ever since I was a very little girl, incited thereto by my father having taken me into the garden and shown me a large, brilliantly colored fellow that had made his web in a currant bush, and desiring me not to meddle with it. I have been interested in them, and bees and ants as well, ever since, and have watched them for a great many minutes at a time.

While looking, all at once I saw one of the spiders run from the center of the web drawing two threads together as he went; he unfastened the end and went back rolling up the thread; then he took the next two threads extending from the center, once doubling part of the web as I have seen the sails of a ship furled; this continued until the whole web was folded into a tiny packet, when he took it between his forelegs and hid himself under a leaf. Then I turned my attention to the other, and in a short time this performance was repeated, and he too went to his repose.

As much as I have watched these insects I never saw anything of this kind before, nor have I ever read of such a thing. Several times during the morning I saw the spiders each under his chosen leaf and the next morning there were two webs as before. This time I couldn't watch the folding, but after breakfast I came out to look for them and they were both gone. The third morning there were two webs, and I saw one folded and after a time returned and found the other gone. This has been repeated nearly if not every day since until to-day, when there were no more webs to be seen. I have not seen them folded every day, but I have seen them spread and returning after a time found no trace of them. There is no one to disturb them and the work has been done by the curious little owner itself.—N. Y. Tribune.

MOSQUITOES.

How a Chicago Ananias Silenced His Competitors.

Jimson, the champion fish-story teller of the North Side; Pinney, the champion snake-story teller of the South Side, and a few others of lesser note, were assembled one evening last week, when the spirit moved Jimson to speak.

"I have heard a good deal about New Jersey mosquitoes," he said, musingly, "but I never took much stock in the stories until this summer."

"What changed your opinion?" inquired a quiet little fellow in the back of the crowd.

"Well, I was down in the southern part of New Jersey visiting an old farmer. One night we heard a terrible bellowing, and the old man took his gun and we sallied out to the cow-pasture; but we were too late."

"Too late?" remarked one of the crowd inquiringly.

"Yes, too late. One of those blasted mosquitoes had stuck his beak clean through a cow and pinned her to a tree. I was awfully sorry. One of the most valuable cows, you know."

There was a moment's silence, during which the crowd looked at Jimson in admiration. Then the quiet little fellow remarked:

"Of course it killed the tree too?"

"Oh, yes; split it right in two."

"I thought likely."

Then there was another pause, and Pinney asked:

"Did you ever see Barber & Jones' boiler factory in the northern part of the State?"

"No," responded Jimson.

"I thought not," returned Pinney. "They have a pretty large mosquito there that they keep for business purposes."

"What for?" queried one.

"He sticks his beak through the copper plates, and then they rivet them."

"Is that so?"

"Yes, indeed; but they've lost him. One day they riveted his beak into a large boiler, and he flew away with the boiler."

There was a look of awe on the faces of all beholders as Pinney finished. Several rose and stole away to some quiet nook where they could give vent to their emotions in tears.

"Down in Pennsylvania," said the quiet little man in his quiet, unassuming way, "I once saw a mosquito of considerable size. He was placed on an immense raised platform about three hundred feet high, and had been trained to use his beak to drill the oil wells."

One man groaned audibly.

"But what was he on the platform for?" inquired Pinney.

"His beak was too long to be used on the ground. Why, one time he made a slip, and the blamed thing went clear through to China."

"Oh, come, now, that's too much," exclaimed several in unison.

"Fact, I assure you. And that wasn't the worst of it. It clinched on the other side, and the darned mosquito flew away with the world."

There was a sound as of some one falling, and Pinney was carried out senseless. When the crowd returned, Jimson had died from mortification.—The Rambler.

A CORRECTION.

EDITOR HERALD:

We were quite surprised to see a letter from us in "real live" print, being our first unlooked for effort in that direction. However we acknowledge the same—excepting the statement—"until the moon had trailed her silver 'mouth' across the heavens."

This struck us as being somewhat new and unique, as the word we used was silver "mantle."

Nevertheless we do not blame ye editor in the least that the moon could have so much mouth,' but presume the "Devil" was at the bottom of it.

But as we would like to keep up the reputation of our Southern moon,—you will please correct the mistake, and will confer a favor upon the moon, as also upon

FARMERS' SOCIAL CLUB

The sixth year of the Farmers' Social Club began very auspiciously, as was seven, last Friday night at R. B. Gillespie's. The rooms were literally packed with a happy croud of old and young.

It being the annual meeting for the election of officers there was no discussion, but a good program was well performed, and we can see a great improvement in this respect since the beginning of the club.

The reading by Minnie Reefor and Ione Henderson was very fine and deserved the attention given it. The young people of the school, on the Second amused the audience with their dialogue, and it is no flattery to say, they did well.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in electing I. H. Schreder, President; R. B. Gillespie, Vice President; Mrs. F. C. Fector, Secretary and Treasurer.

The next regular meeting occurring New Year's night, it is postponed until Friday evening, Jan. 15th, when the club will meet at I. H. Schreder's with the following program:

Music—Choir.
Song—George Henderson.
Recitation—Kitt Griswold.
Music—Grant Schreder and Henry Fox.
Essay—Emma Schreder.
Song—Lovisa Schreder.
Music—Choir.
Essay—Anna Everhart.
Music—Grant and Henry.
Select Reading—Fred Hendershot.
Question—Resolved that our taxes are becoming burdensome. What is the remedy? Opened by J. W. Benedict.

The people generally are complaining of the heavy and grevious burden of taxes, and we cordially invite all interested to be present at our next meeting; we also invite the Supervisors of the surrounding towns, and especially the Supervisors of Raisin, Tecumseh and Clinton.

Somebody left a switch misplaced in the Lake Shore yards last evening, and when the Detroit train came in, the engine, baggage car and one coach went off the track. The American Agriculturist states editorially that there are decided signs of returning prosperity among the farmers in all parts of the country, and cites as an illustration of this fact, that those who deal in farm implements are patronizing the advertising columns now more than at any time in past years. ARREST OF A HORSE THIEF.

TOLEDO, December 18.—A sensational arrest of an alleged horse thief occurred about midnight this morning, near Lambertville, Mich. The particulars are as follows: On the night of December 13, a fine horse, carriage and harness, were taken from Stephen Scofield, at Tecumseh, Lenawee county. The thief was traced to this city by Detective Stevens, of Adrian, and from here to a house near Lambertville. Last night Detective Stevens, of Adrian, and McMahon, of this city, went to the house where the thief, Thomas Mosher, was stopping. There it was learned that Mosher had gone to a Baptist donation party. Stevens went to the party but Mosher was not there. In the meantime Detective McMahon had been scouring the roads for the thief. He at last came upon three teams and recognized one of them as the stolen property; clutched the horse by the bridle and ordered the driver to halt. There were two men in the carriage. Instead of halting they whipped up the horses and escaped. All three of the teams then drove to a neighboring house about a quarter of a mile distant and alarmed the inmates, saying they had been attacked by a highwayman. Mosher was the loudest in his declarations. Seven or eight men were soon collected, armed with shotguns, revolvers, axes and pitch-forks, and were about to start for the scene of the attack as Stevens descended on the party from an opposite direction. He heard the plans, stepped in with two revolvers and ordered Mosher to throw up his hands and the crowd to throw dawn their arms. Taken by surprise they all surrendered. Had it not been for Stevens's timely arrival in all probability McMahon would have been killed. The thief and the stolen property were taken back to Adrian at noon.—Detroit Tribune.

The above account is substantially correct except Detective Stevens hails from Tecumseh instead of Adrian. Mosher had his examination last Saturday before Justice Burridge and was bound over for trial at the next term of the Circuit Court.

ROAD AND PATH.

Have Persons a Legal Right to use Bicycles upon the Highway?

What is a carriage? Webster says, "A carriage is a vehicle, especially one for pleasure or for passengers;" he also defines vehicle as that in which anything is or may be carried; a conveyance. Therefore according to the definition the bicycle is considered as a carriage. "It is a vehicle which has enabled its rider to cover unaided a distance of one thousand four hundred and four miles in six days, with which hundreds and thousands of travelers have made excursions and tours through every part of Great Britain and the continent of Europe, and Southern Africa and India and Australia and the West Indies, which is in use to the number of many thousands in the United States, and which every observant and intelligent citizen has seen in use upon nearly all our city streets and country roads from Bangor to San Francisco and from Detroit to Tallahassee, is certainly entitled to be called a pleasure carriage without question," and as such they have been held in every court and judicial department where the question has come up for decision. If it is a carriage it is entitled to its place upon the highways and has as much right as any carriage propelled by horses.

"So that as of an old and recognized class of vehicles by prescriptive right, and also as a vehicle recognized by judicial and quasi-judicial decisions, the bicycle and its riders have a clear right on the public streets: but even if it were a novelty, and neither it nor anything of its class from which it is in details a divergence, had been used in this country prior to the summer of 1877, it would still be entitled to the use of the public streets."

Said Caton, C. J., in a leading case in the Supreme court of Illinois: "A street is made for the passage of persons and property, and the law cannot define what exclusive means of transportation and passage shall be used. To say that a new mode of passage shall be banished from the streets, no matter how much the general good may require it, simply because streets were not so used in the days of Blackstone, would hardly comport with the advancement and enlightenment of the present age."—Moses v. Pittsburg, etc., R. R. co., 21 Ill. 522.

Mr. Justice Cooley, of Michigan, in his standard work, has found and expressed the law to be: "When land is taken or dedicated for a town street, it is unquestionably appropriated for all the ordinary purposes of a town street; not merely the purposes to which such streets were formerly applied, but those demanded by new improvements and new wants."—Cooley Const. Limit, (4th Ed.) 694.

"One other point may be noticed in passing which has perhaps been allowed too much force in some quarters heretofore, and that is the alleged dangerous and unwelcome aspect of bicycling to the horse-using portion of the public. Commissioners undoubtedly have a right, under their authority to regulate, to prevent pedestrians from carrying strange illuminations or nitro-glycerine cans or bombs on the foot ways, because they are not necessary to the use of the footways and are unreasonably dangerous. But they have no right to prohibit the carrying of umbrellas, canes, crutches, cork legs, or personal deformities on the foot-ways, although they were objectionable to some, and umbrellas frighten timid or untrained horses, because they are necessary to the full and free use of the foot ways.

So they might prohibit the covering a carriage with fantistic shapes and colors and hanging its wheels all over with bells, because that is something more than simply a carriage, and is not necessary to the full and free use of the driveways, and is unreasonably dangerous.

Now the bicycle is no such contrivance. It has by the prejudiced, the thoughtless, or the ignorant, been sometimes called dangerous. But it is simply a carriage (reduced to the lowest possible terms) and nothing else; it has nothing unnecessary to travel, no dangerous additions to the vehicle proper. Ridden at a rate not greater than 6 miles an hour, it is capable of complete control—deviation from its course, immediate stopping, etc.—and is not as dangerous as other vehicles, for there can be no runaway or disastrous collision. It is said that horses are frightened by it. The fact is they are not, any more than they are at umbrellas. But if they sometimes are, it is to be remembered that the highest courts have decided that the drivers of horses have no more right in streets or carriage-ways than those using other common modes of conveyance, and that the mere frightening of horses is neither actionable as a tort nor complainable as a nuisance, nor an obstruction which city officers or public boards are accountable for.

To sum up, however, upon the law as I find it, and the logic of the discussion as closely as I can apply it, my opinion is, in brief, that the drive-ways of parks are public streets for the purpose of travel at least; that all persons have a right to use the public streets with their own common carriages; and, therefore, that all persons have an equal right to use the drive ways of parks with their own common pleasure carriages; that bicycles are within that class; that the bicycle is a common pleasure carriage, and that, therefore, the bicyclers have an equal right to use the driveways of parks with their bicycles. And further, that town or city or county governments or officers have no authority to exclude or to regulate so far as practically to exclude bicyclers from the public streets."

BILIOUSNESS.
Bilious symptoms invariably arise from indigestion, such as furred tongue, vomiting of bile, giddiness, sick headache, irregular bowels. The liver secretes the bile and acts like a filter or sieve, to cleanse impurities of the blood. By irregularity in its action or suspensions of its functions, the bile is liable to overflow into the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, yellow eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling and many other distressing symptoms. Biliousness may be properly termed an affection of the liver, and can be thoroughly cured by the grand regulator of the liver and biliary organs, BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS. Act upon the stomach, bowels and liver, making healthy bile and pure blood, and opens the culverts and sluiceways for the outlet of disease. Sold everywhere and guaranteed to cure.

A LONDON TRICK.

How an American Judge Narrowly Escaped Robbery in the Strand.

The reputation of London confidence men and sharpers is well known. They have an excellent field for their work. London is so vast that it is difficult to find them even if the detectives are promptly upon their track, and they change their quarters frequently. Then the number of visitors to this great Babylon is so large that victims are found without much difficulty. As many of these are transient visitors, if the bunco men, as they would be called in America; I do not know what corresponding term is used here—make a good "haul," they leave the city or lie in hiding until they feel sure that their victims have gone. Then they can not be identified, if arrested, and of course will escape prosecution.

An American gentleman whom I met the other day told me of his narrow escape from being robbed by what I am told is an "old London trick." He is a criminal judge in one of your southern States; and one would suppose that such an official would be on his guard against tricks of all kinds. He has been in London many times before his present visit, and thought he was pretty familiar with the city and its ways. Let me relate his experience in his own words.

"I have been living," he said, "in a private hotel in one of the streets leading from the Strand to the Thames, not far from Temple Bar. It is a convenient place to reach and I found it comfortable and convenient in every way. I have been in the habit of going to my lodgings at all hours of the day and night. I was on my way thither through the Strand about one o'clock one morning, and had almost reached the street in which my hotel is situated when I saw a woman not far in front of me apparently stumble and fall to the sidewalk. She was alone. She cried out as if hurt, and I hastened my steps and ran to her assistance. I helped her get up, but she complained of great pain in her ankle, and could hardly stand. She began to cry bitterly, and said she didn't see how she was to get home. I asked her where she lived; she named the street, which I knew was more than a mile away. I told her that she would have to take a cab, and that I would call one. Still crying and complaining that she was severely hurt, she said she could not take a cab, as she had no money to pay for it. My sympathies were aroused, and I said that I would give her enough to pay her cab-fare. I put my hand in my pocket and pulled out some silver coins. At the same time, I stepped toward a gas-lamp in order to pick out the right amount.

"Quick as a flash of lightning the woman seized my wrist, and some of the coins went rattling down to the pavement. At this moment three other women appeared. I had seen nothing of them before. They seized me by the arms and around the waist. I instantly comprehended the situation. I was the victim of a confidence game, and was being robbed—or would be in a moment unless I made a vigorous resistance. I had my umbrella in my hand. I struggled violently with the four women, and at length managed to break away from them. I started on a run at full speed for my hotel, only a few rods away. All the women were in hot pursuit. You know all those streets running from the Strand down to the river descend pretty rapidly, and as I was going down I got under such a headway that I could not stop when I reached my house. I stopped just below it, however, and tried to turn, when the women seized me again. They pounded and kicked me viciously, but did not get anything out of my pockets. I used my hands and feet and umbrella as best I could, but I am afraid they would have been more than a match for me.

"By good fortune, however, while the struggle was going on in front of my hotel, the door suddenly opened and the landlord appeared in it. I told him I needed help and he came out. The women then set up on him, and taking advantage of the opportunity, I broke away from them and ran at full speed into the hotel. I found that my umbrella was pretty badly used up, and my arms and shins and body were sore for several days. Since then I have carried a stout cane whenever I am out late at night. I never asked the landlord how he came out of the fight. I was too glad to get away myself to bother about him; but I fancy he suffered little damage. I only lost a few shillings."

"Why did you not make an outcry and alarm the police?" I inquired.

"Ah," was the answer, "that was the very thing that I was careful not to do. Don't you see, they were four to one, and if a policeman had come, the chances were that they would accuse me of assault and I would be locked up for the night. Or, if my story had been believed, they would have spent the night in the police station a matter of no consequence to a woman of that class—and it the matter had gone further, I should have gone to the police court to prosecute them. I did not care for publicity in that way. Oh, no. I didn't want the police to have any hand in the matter so far as I was concerned. You may think I was stupid to be taken in by such a trick. I have been told since that it is a trick very commonly practiced in London, but I had never heard of it before. I am sure that it would readily impose on any one who was ignorant of it.—London Cor. N. Y. Tribune.

—It is generally supposed that the North Arctic Zone is extending, and proof is assumed in the increase of ice on the eastern shores of Greenland, and in the fact that barley, which was successfully grown in Iceland from its first settlement in 870 down to the middle of the fifteenth century, is no longer cultivated there. The Icelandic Government has, however, lately attempted to grow barley in the island on a considerable scale and the results are very favorable. Norwegian barley from Altenjord, the extreme north of the barley-growing zone, was planted and fit for cutting in eighty days. The decline in barley cultivation in Iceland is really due to the fact that cattle breeding pays better.

TYPHOID FEVER.

Causes of Its Existence and Methods of Dissemination.

The causation of typhoid or enteric fever is involved in great obscurity. Some of the best authorities believe it may originate de novo; in other words, as the great exponent of this theory, Dr Murchison, states it: "The poison of enteric fever is contained in the emanations from certain forms of putrefying organic matter," and "is often generated by fecal fermentation." Other authorities equally good, hold that the appearance of typhoid fever cases necessarily presupposes the existence of a case which stands to the later ones in the relation of cause to effect, and that, if this case is not discovered, it is simply because the evidence is obscure, or the investigator inexperienced. Unfortunately the identification of the typhoid germ has not yet been satisfactorily determined, and until it is we can hardly expect the mystery now surrounding the production of the disease to be cleared away. In regard to the means by which the fever spreads, there is more unanimity of opinion. The water of wells which has become impure from the leaking of vaults and cesspools has been shown over and over again to have caused typhoid epidemics. Notable instances of this have occurred in our country, as in Syracuse in 1876, and the more recent epidemic at Plymouth, Pa.

Milk has also many times been the medium through which the typhoid poison has been disseminated. Impure water has been used to wash out the milk cans, if, indeed, it has not served other purposes, and the milk has thus become infected. A striking example of this medium of contagion was the outbreak of typhoid at Marylebone, London. Within a few weeks one hundred and twenty-three families were attacked. Mr. Radcliffe traced the cause of this to milk which came from a particular farm on which "water used for dairy purposes contained excremental matters from a patient suffering from enteric fever immediately before and at the time of the outbreak." Epidemics occurring at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Bristol and Dublin have also been traced to milk. These facts should stir up all health officials to the vital importance of the most rigid scrutiny of the milk supplied to the people under their charge, and should lead our judges to inflict the severest penalties upon those detected in the adulteration of this most essential food. That this disease may be contracted by those who nurse the sick is possible, but if this ever occurs it is extremely rare. The discharges from the intestines are believed to contain the infective material; and in the present state of our knowledge, to bury these discharges in the ground or to cast them into the sewer without previous disinfection, must be looked upon as criminal. It is not difficult to understand that the infective material of such undisinfected discharges may cling to the interior of drain tiles and sewers, and through defective plumbing find admission to the dwelling and sleeping rooms of the well. This is doubtless the explanation of the origin of those cases which are ascribed to sewer gas.

Typhoid fever is eminently a disease of the autumn, and its greater prevalence at this season of the year is attributed by some to the decay of vegetation; others have found its prevalence to depend upon the rise and fall of the ground water. Just how far these conditions affect the prevalence of the fever is a matter of conjecture, and as they are entirely beyond our control we must in our endeavor toward prevention and restriction pay strict attention to cleanliness in all its forms, and especially to the thorough disinfection of discharges from patients. For this purpose the committee on disinfectants of the American Public Health Association recommend solutions of chloride of lime, of chlorinated soda, or of bi-chloride of mercury.

In our cities the typhoid patients are largely recruited from the ranks of those of ample means, who during the summer spend their time in the country, and often at the most fashionable watering places. It is notorious that these resorts are, as a rule, unsanitary in their appointments. The crowding of human beings in such places, with the consequent accumulation of human waste, would, it would seem, help to account for the large representation of typhoid fever victims in the ranks of their patrons. A study of typhoid cases with reference to this point would be interesting and doubtless instructive.—Science.

How to Prevent Rusting of Plows.

A plowman says there are several easy ways to prevent rusting of plows and cultivators and to keep the teeth bright. One is to give them a coat of thick limewash as soon as they are brought in from the field. Another is to dissolve an ounce of resin in four ounces of linseed oil, and while hot mix this with a quart of kerosene and stir well. This is laid on the smooth iron with a paint brush. Another way is to dissolve an ounce of camphor in some turpentine and add to this four ounces of lard and one ounce of pulverized black lead or stove polish and mix well. This may be rubbed on with a rag. To remove rust from tools or plows nothing is better than a mixture of half a pint of oil of vitriol poured slowly into a quart of water, and apply this to the rusted metal. Wash off with water.—Cincinnati Times.

—A singular accident occurred to Mrs. Wallace, daughter of Mr. John L. Carncross, a few days ago. During the summer she resided at Ardmore, where the lady and her daughter were afflicted with the whooping cough. They returned to the city. Recently Mrs. Wallace was seized with a severe coughing fit, during which she fractured a limb.—Philadelphia Record.

—A Nevada lady recently took unfair advantage of her husband's indulgence in a bath to elope with another man. The bereaved one expressed the conviction that she had been waiting for the opportunity for months.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Father, Mother, and Three Sisters Dead.

Mr. David Claypool, formerly Sergeant-at-Arms of the New Jersey Senate, and now Notary Public at Cedarville, Cumberland Co., N. J., makes the following startling statement: "My father, mother, and three sisters all died with consumption, and my lungs were so weak I raised blood. Nobody thought I could live. My work (ship-smithing) was very straining on me with my weak constitution, and I was rapidly going to the grave. While in this condition I commenced using Mishler's Herb Bitters, and it saved my life. Because it was so difficult to get it in this little place, and I had improved so much, I stopped taking it for a time, and the result is that I have commenced going rapidly down hill again. Somehow, Mishler's Herb Bitters gives appetite and strengthens and builds me up as nothing else does, and I must have a dozen bottles at once. Use this communication as you please, and if any one wants to be convinced of its truth, let them write me and I will make affidavit to it, for I owe my life to Mishler's Herb Bitters."

The secret of the almost invariable relief and cure of consumption, dysentery, diarrhœa, dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver complaints, when Mishler's Herb Bitters is used, is that it contains simple, harmless, and yet powerful ingredients, that act on the blood, kidneys, and liver, and through them strengthens and invigorates the whole system. Purely vegetable in its composition; prepared by a regular physician; a standard medicinal preparation; endorsed by physicians and druggists. These are four strong points in favor of Mishler's Herb Bitters. Mishler's Herb Bitters is sold by all druggists. Price $1.00 per large bottle. 6 bottles for $5.00.

Ask your druggist for MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS. If he does not keep it, do not take anything else, but send a postal card to MISHLER HERB BITTERS CO., 505 Commerce Street, Philadelphia.

LEVI ISENSTEIN.

A Sad Encounter, Showing That Even the Wisest of Us May Get Left.

Levi Isenstein is a genial gentleman who keeps a clothing store on South Clark Street. He is a man of diversified talents, and in addition to his extensive clothing trade he is always pleased to see any needy persons who have any jewelry they would like to leave with him for safe keeping, in consideration of a small amount of cash.

Mr. Isenstein is also a wit and a philosopher. The first record we have of any of his sayings is the remark he made after witnessing a performance of "Richelieu." Being a man of business he is not in the habit of squandering his money on theater tickets, but on this occasion, he had been presented with a couple of complimentary tickets by one of his customers, so he took his son Jacob and went. On his way home he thus delivered himself:

"Shaky, my poy, dese show-actors don'd know noding. Don'd you pelief dem, Shaky. Ven der shentleman in der play say der vas no such vord as fail, den he make himself foolish, und don'd you forgot it. Shust hear your fader spoke, Shaky. Der piggest vord in der language vas fail, und der smaller der per-shent to der greditors der pigger de vord. Shust don'd forgot dot, Shaky, und ven your old fader vas der ground under, und you found you can fail for ten cents on der tollar, don'd vait till ter-morrer ter do it."

The next time Mr. Isenstein displayed his wisdom he was riding on the cars, with his two sons Jacob and Isaac. The conductor attempted to collect full fare for Jacob, and this brought out a remonstrance.

"Dose tvins on der udder side pays shust halef, aint it?"

"Yes," responded the conductor.

"Und dey vas den years old each. Ish dot so?"

"I guess so."

"Vell, den you took von whole fare for tventy years. Isaac, he vas tree und Shaky he vas sebenteen. 'Dot's tventy, aint it? Vell, den I pays you one whole fare. Py shiminy! you feller you don't sheat me—nod if I don'd forgot myselluf."

It was not very often that Mr. Isenstein forgot himself, but once in awhile he did. One morning he found a counterfeit dollar in his pocket. He was completely broken up—a dollar, a counterfeit dollar. He could not understand it.

"Py shiminy," he muttered, "I vonder if I aint got some sense at all." Then to his son: "Shaky, run quick to Mr. Mosenbaum's over, un puy tventy five-cent segars."

In five minutes Jacob returned with the cigars, and Mr. Isenstein went gayly about his work. The dollar was passed.

That afternoon Mr. Isenstein was rummaging in the cash drawer, and he ran across the same dollar again.

"Shaky, Shaky, come here quick!" he cried. "Don'd you got some sense! Vere'd dot tollar come from?"

"Mr. Mosenbaum come der street ofer, und bought a pair of suspender-braces."

"Vel, took it back und puy me twenty more segars. So hellup me Moses, purty soon I got so many segars, I haf to give von away or I make myselluf sick."

Jacob returned shortly, and said:

"Mr. Mosenbaum vont took der tollar."

Mr. Isenstein grasped the money, and rushed across the street.

"Py shiminy! Vy don'd you took dot tollar?" he exclaimed.

"Do you think I make myselluf a foolish. Dot tollar vas counterfeit."

"Vell, you dot tollar back took. My poy Shaky took dot tollar from you."

"Ish dot so? Do you tink I make myselluf a fool pecause Shaky do. Vell, I don'd guess I do dot."

"Py shiminy, so hellup Isaac, you took dot tollar back, or I make it so warm for you as never vas. You shust bear me spoke."

"Vell, Levi Isenstein, shust you let me toot a vile. You took dot tollar und put it in you car, und go mit it to de dooce, und if you don'd go purty quick I kick you owet of my shtore."

Then for about five minutes the air was filled with dust and bad English, while Isenstein and Mosenbaum rolled over on the floor and pulled each other's hair. Then Mrs. Mosenbaum came down stairs and took a hand in, and Jacob came across the street to help his father. When the smoke of battle cleared away Isenstein lay in the gutter moaning the loss of his dollar, and Mosenbaum lay under his counter bewailing the damage to his store.

Isenstein has gone into a decline, brought about by his inability to get rid of the dollar. It is thought he will recover.—The Rambler.

A Royal Autograph.

The Governor is in receipt of the autograph signature of his Imperial Majesty, the Emperor of Japan. The signature bears a striking resemblance to the hieroglyphics of a Chinese tea box, only it is written upon the finest silk, gorgeously illuminated with gold upon a cardinal red background of fine silk. Three truly Japan cranes are pictured, each making a flight through space to cast a glance upon the imperial signature written among the stars and shrouded in fleecy golden clouds. The card is of very durable material, and is wrapped in creamy rice paper almost as filmy as a gossamer's web. The whole is encased in a box of spotless white wood, upon the cover of which is the engraved signature of his Imperial Majesty, the Emperor of Japan, made at Tokio, July 13, 1885. The autograph was secured by our Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary at the Japanese court, John A. Bingham, and is a contribution to the Aldrich collection now in the State Library, where it will be on exhibition.—Des Moines Leader.

A SHOT TOWER.

How the Shot Is Sorted Into Sizes for the Familiar Canvas Bags.

Shot is formed by pouring a melted piece of alloy or lead through a colander or sieve at the top of a high tower. In falling to the base of the tower the particles of semi-fluid lead assume the globular form. They fall into a vessel of water placed to receive them, before reaching which they become so nearly solid that their globular form is retained when they strike the surface of the yielding element. An arsenical preparation forms the alloy, which makes the lead more ductile, softer and better fitted to take the spherical form. The soft and pure American lead requires less arsenic than the hard and brittle foreign varieties. Too much arsenic causes the drops to assume the lenticular form, and too little causes them to elongate, to flatten on one side and hollow in the middle as they cool. The higher the tower the larger the shot that may be dropped in it. I had an opportunity at Chicago of inspecting the whole process of making shot. Also at the same time I saw how sheet lead and lead pipes are manufactured, and the no less interesting processes in the manufacture of linseed oil.

The lofty tower, as high and almost as massive as Bunker Hill monument, must have attracted the attention of nearly every one who has visited the city. From its summit the best view of the city is to be obtained. It is one of the tallest towers erected for this purpose in the world. There is one in Europe 240 feet high. Some of the perpendicular bluffs in the Upper Mississippi in the vicinity of the lead mines of Iowa and Wisconsin are used in the place of towers, the melted lead being dropped over the precipices.

The shot are of greater dimensions than the holes of the colander through which they pass. Mr. Blatchford dipped out a handful from the cistern for our inspection. There was quite a variety of sizes, and many of the drops had assumed irregular forms. The first thing done with the shot is to dry them, and then the perfectly spherical ones are selected by a very ingenious contrivance, as simple as it is ingenious. A series of inclined planes is so arranged, one below another, with gaps between, that when the shot is poured upon the top one, the perfectly spherical ones of all sizes bound forward merrily in straight lines, skipping the gaps unerringly, and flying off neither to the right hand nor the left. Any one who has tried to roll an imperfect ball in a ten-pin alley knows what an irresistible attraction the sides of the alley have for the poor ball. It will not keep upon the straight highway cast up for it, but must needs roll into the ditch, a melancholy instance of the "depravity of inanimate things." So the imperfect shot scatter out at the sides of these planes. And even if they chance, by a miracle of grace, to keep in the center, they drop into the cunning pitfalls over which their perfect brethren nimbly skip in safety. The nearly perfect ones sometimes escape several of their gaps, but are all caught before they reach the bottom, and self-convicted, are unceremoniously returned to the melting pot. The perfect ones of all sizes run into a revolving barrel, where with a little pulverized graphite, or plumbago, they roll about for a while, and acquire the brilliant polish which is their finishing touch.

It only needs now to assort the sizes and to pack them in the little canvas bags familiar to all sportsmen. They are sorted in revolving cylinders slightly inclined, perforated with holes, which increase in size toward the lower end. Each size drops out as soon as it comes to a set of holes large enough to allow the shot to pass. The arrangement for weighing and bagging them is very ingenious. Receptacles numbered from one to twelve, according to the size of the shot, under the revolving cylinders, conduct the little death-dealing missiles through tunnels into the canvas bags. As soon as a bag has received its twenty-five pounds its weight shuts a valve, and no more can come till the bag is removed and another put in its place. One man tends the whole row, with needle and thread sewing up the bags, which are then ready for the market. All the work of the tower, except that which is done by machinery, is performed by three men.—Philadelphia Call.

DANGEROUS MONKEYS.

They Amuse Themselves by Wrecking Railway Trains.

Between a place called Niddivunda and Herebully there is a large tope which is well known to be infested with a lot of monkeys. Having no other mode of occupying their dull hours, they are bent upon trying to destroy the Tumker Line. It would appear that these animals, about fifty or sixty, form themselves into two batches; they range themselves systematically, one-half on one rail and the other half on the other. They begin by first removing the earth from the sides of the rails. Then they arrive at the difficulty of nuts and bolts, which, though they examing them very minutely, they can not get over.

On the approach of the up or down train they wait until the engine is within a few yards, when, with the utmost coolness, they simply jump on one side till the train has passed, and then resume their work. A remarkable instance occurred on one of these occasions. As the engine was approaching the monkeys made their usual jumps, with the exception of one, who persisted in remaining on the line, the engine by this time being very near. Five or six monkeys, seeing the danger one of their number was in, made a sudden rush and dragged him off, some laying hold of him by the tail, others by the legs; anyhow, they saved him. They are now styled the Niddivunda gangmen by the guards and drivers.—Madras Mail.

—"It's through no fault of mine," complained a tired-looking young man, "that I came into the world. But I am here, and the world owes me a living." "Yes," was the reply, "the world owes you a living, but you haven't energy and spunk enough to collect it."—New York Sun.

Don't Eat in a Hurry.

CATAARH—A NEW TREATMENT.

From the Montreal Star.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 2000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished he claims the Catarrh is practically cured and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The Application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.

A Rare Talent.

The faculty of drawing out of persons with whom one is conversing the best there is in them—brighter things even than they suppose themselves capable of—is the rare gift with which Nature has endowed some women. George Eliot was a most charming person in conversation, though she was a women of few words, because of her intuitive insight into the thoughts of others. A few words would put her in possession, not of what they said, but of what they would have said, and she would so improve upon it that ordinary people went away charmed with her who had made them for once at least feel themselves to be wise. Long afterward, perhaps, she would call to their remembrance the wise or witty things which they could hardly believe themselves to have said, and which they assuredly never would have said but for her quickening influence.

The entertainment given by the Sunday School at the church Christmas night was a grand success. There was a very large attendance.

The ladies of the village and vicinity surprised Rev. and Mrs. Clack with a fine reflexible Oxford complete Bible and $20.75. To Mrs. Clack they gave a fine silver cake basket. The presentation remarks were made by Mrs. Williams, who in a few well chosen words expressed the feeling of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Clack. Mrs. Curtis received a toilet set from her class. SPRINGVILLE SNUFF.

Mrs. T. H. Mosher has returned home from a business visit in Ohio.

Charles Stephenson returned home from Adrian, where he has been attending college, to spend the holidays, but is confined to his bed with mumps. Sorry for you, Charles.

J. H. Smith and family took turkey with their parents, at this place, Christmas.

The shooting match last week Wednesday passed off without any serious results. One or two jaws being slightly dislocated was all.

The rink will be opened after this week on Friday evenings as usual.

The dance at the Springville hotel might have been a grand success had all the gentlemen present brought lady partners. We wish to say that we admire the judgment of what few ladies were present in refusing to dance with only those gentlemen that brought ladies. Perhaps tkey will learn the proper way to attend a party.

Knapp's Sextette band, of Tecumseh, will aid the Springville band to discourse music at Brooklyn New Year's night.

We clip the following from the Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, Evening News. It may be of interest to some as the same relates to Will. A. Whitney formerly of this place:

The wedding Christmas Eve., of Mr. William Whitney, of Ottumwa, and Miss Nannie Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Johnson, was one of the most pleasant wedding events that has taken place in our city for a long time. Relatives and friends of the contracting parties to the number of one hundred or more were present to witness the ceremonies and extend congratulations. The supper was simply a grand feast of all the delicacies that was ever heard of which was greatly relished by all. Many valuable and handsome presents were given, among the number being a large and beautiful crayon likeness of the fair bride, presented her by the artist, Ernest Rotzien, of Ottumwa.

All present declare it one of the most enjoyable and pleasant weddings that they have ever attended, and the occasion will never be erased from the memory of the guests.

Miss Nannie kindly remembered the News office by sending in a bountiful supply of her wedding cake, and samples of others, gotten up for the occasion. May the wedded life of Mr and Mrs. Whitney be long and without a wave of trouble, is the wish of the News family.

Between his cares at the "Do Drop" and his sales of the Champion weather strip, Joe is busy now-a-days. The cold wave which he assured his victims was coming, must have become demoralized in view of the resistance which the patent weather strip is prepared to offer, and laid off at some primitive town in the north-west, upon whose virgin soil no agent of the patent weather strip hath put his foot.

Miss Helen Travis is home from school at North Adams.

Dr. A. G. Oven, assistant Prof. in the University, spent Christmas at home.

Miss Lila Fincham of Petoskey, who is attending the school of music at AnnArbor, passed the holidays with the family of Isaac Pennington.

TIPTON TOPICS.

The glad holiday season which makes so much of joy and happiness to all, received its usual welcome here. The evening for the Sunday School Cantata, which had been so long looked forward to, was as pleasant as could be desired, with the exception of rough roads. The M. E. church was crowded at an early hour, and the exercises were opened by an anthem followed by the Cantata "Santa Claus' Mistake" or, "A Bundle of Sticks." The parts were well executed and the children did admirably. Much credit and many thanks are due to Mr. Elmer Wilson who had the entire charge of this entertainment.

Christmas day brought many family gatherings; some of which were held at the homes of Mr. Eugene Camburn, Chas. Kemp, J. B. Kemp, Mr. Harrison and Mr. J. Smith.

Clinton's Rash Venture.

The enterprising little village of Clinton took its life in its hands last week and gave a baby show. That is why it is firmly fixed in the belief just now that one baby show is a crowd. Clinton doubtless meant well, but the pitcher which goes often to the beer keg is pretty certain to slop over at last. When all the pretiy babies in the world are confined to one little village, it is hard to keep still about it, of course, but discretion is more than four-fifths of valor, when somebody else's baby chips in the other fraction. The man who goes into a baby show in the enjoyment of health and vigor, climbs upon a chair and acts as judge will come forth a total wreck. Night and day he will hear a voice singing bass in the wilderness, because he pinned the blue ribbon on the devoted breast of the wrong baby. The man who can umpire a baby show and escape the wrath to come does not live in Michigan—much less in Clinton village. When the wrong baby that didn't get a prize grows up to manhood and muscle-hood, the plot will thicken at both ends for the poor, grief stricken judge.—"Unpremeditated," in Eve. Journal.

Tecumseh Herald

TECUMSEH, MICH., DEC. 31, 1885.

THE OLD YEAR TO THE NEW.

With hands full of gifts and cheeks like a rose,
  There you wait
  At my gate
  While my winter wind blows!

And you laugh as you stand there a laugh full of scorn,
  At the sight
  Of the blight
  Of the gray hairs forlorn.

And the stories he tells of the months that have sped:—
  "What I—I,"
  You cry,
  "When my twelve months have fled,

To bend and to totter, to sigh and to shake,
  And like you
  There to rue
  The vows that I break?

"Not I, oh, not I," you scornfully say;
  "I shall stand
  Where you stand,
  As blithe as to day.

When one after one, my twelve months have sped,
  Not a fear,
  Not a tear,
  Shall I murmur or shed."

So, my youngster, you laugh, as you stand there untried,
  As you wait
  At my gate
  In your ignorant pride.

So I boasted and laughed when I stood in your place,
  But to-day,
  Ah, to-day,
  At the end of my race,

I count up the gifts that I sold for a song,
  In that time
  Of my prime,
  When lusty and strong.

My plans were so easy, my promises rife,
  And pleasure,
  The measure
  And limit of life.

But my easy-laid plans, not so easily sped,
  And alas,
  And alas,
  Ere the twelve months had fled,

I found what my fine boasted wisdom was worth,
  And that haste
  Had made waste
  On my kingdom of earth.

But what use for me here to counsel and pray,
  When you heed
  Not indeed
  A word that I say,

When impatient you wait for my gate to unclose,
  With that air,
  Debonair,
  And that cheek like a rose!

Well, wait, enter in—The gates are flung wide,
  There or here,
  God is near,
  Whatsoever befide

BHUGWAN'S REVENGE

The Weird Way in Which He Spent His New Year's Eve.

Six years ago a company of old bachelor Anglo-Indian friends had just finished their New Year's Day dinner, and were sitting out on the broad veranda sipping black coffee and smoking the powerful Trichinapoly cheroots of the country. The bungalow was situated in Kirkee cantonments, near Poona, in a pretty position overlooking the Morta-Moolah, that glided with unruffled tranquillity as it reflected the shining stars that glorified the clear blue heavens. The conversation turned upon reminiscences of the past, some amusing, some instructive, and some very sad. The Colonel recalled the sanguinary days of the terrible mutiny of 1857, and graphically told of his excitement and sufferings as he lay with the gallant little Ghoorkhas upon the ridge upon which the rebel fire from the brown walls of Delhi was murderously concentrated morning, noon and night. The Assistant Collector told of extraordinary crimes he had tracked down in the Southern Mahratta country. The wealthy representative of a great cotton firm in Bombay humorously related how he had won his pretty bride one season on the Nilgherries, merely by being lucky enough to drive out of her way a poor pariah dog which in the half darkness of the evening she had imagined, and still believed, to be a panther. Suddenly the Judge, who had been very quiet as he sat watching the curling smoke that rose from his cheroot and floated down into the garden among the oleanders and the roses, asked us if we had ever heard of the narrow escape he had made precisely that day three years ago.

"Tell us the story, Judge," we cried in chorus, and while the white-clothed servants were bringing in the "pegs" (Anglice, brandy and soda), which were the almost invariable corollaries of an Anglo-Indian dinner, the Judge half sat up in his long bamboo chair, and told the tale of Bhugwan's perfidy.

"It so happens," he said, "that a case was brought before me in my cutcherry or court-house in Peepulgoum, about a mile from the Taptee River, which involved intricate peculiarities of Hindoo family law. I will not weary you with the details, but only give you the facts that bear directly upon my adventure. One of the suitors in the case was a tall, sullen-faced Soratee, who claimed the family jewels that were in dispute. He employed the best vakeels in the district to plead his case, and he tried to bribe me through my servants by sending me curious ivory boxes of silver-inlaid work and a daily present of a large tray full of fruit and flowers. Bhugwan Bhugwandass was the man's name. He thrust himself in my way whenever he could get an opportunity to do so. If I went out for my morning ride I was sure to see him emerging from the jungle on the roadside and salaam me almost to the dust. If I moved about the court-house I was sure to see him eyeing me with his deep black eyes from the corner of the varanda. If I had a badminton party in my compound before dinner it was ten to one that I would see his sinister face peering over the cactus hedge. Finally I decided the case against Bhugwan and awarded the property in dispute to his cousin, whom I afterward found to be regarded by Bhugwan with implacable hatred. Not far from my bungalow there was a stone tank covered with a light bamboo roof," and, of course, the sides were perfectly open. I used to bathe in that tank every morning before the heat of the sun grew intolerable, and many a pleasant swim I had in it. About a week after the decision of the case I noticed that Bhugwan was frequently in my compound chatting and smoking hubble-bubbles with the servants who dwelt in the outhouses. Whenever he saw me he salaamed obsequiously, and in a short time I thought nothing of his visits to my servants. One morning—a New Year's morning, it was—I set out for my usual bath in the tank. The air was cool and fresh, the splendidly attired birds flashed their colors in the light around me, and everything looked so peculiarly bright and beautiful that morning that I strode over the grass with a springy step, swinging my towel and whistling an old-fashioned English air as I went. I stripped in a trice, and was just about to take a plunge, when my eye fell upon a bheestie's mussuck lying just upon the edge of the tank. You know, of course, what a mussuck is—the goat-skin in which the water-carriers carry their water from place to place. Well, I felt so full of bounding animal spirits that I picked up the mussuck, inflated it to the best of my ability till I grew red in the face, and then flung it as far as I could into the tranquil pool of water. I wanted to see how it would bob about and how long it would take to collapse and sink. But it had scarcely splashed upon the surface of the water before there was a sudden rush like an arrow, the momentary appearance of a great hideous mouth full of sharp white teeth—I can see them now as distinctly as I do the smoke of that cheroot—and the instantaneous disappearance of the mussuck. I almost fainted at the sight. I knew what it all meant. I knew that by a Providential impulse I had saved myself from a horrible death, for had I touched the water first instead of that bheestie's mussuck it would have been I that would have been dragged to the bottom by that terrible alligator. I hurried home as fast as I could, scarcely taking time to dress myself on the way, and all I could do when I reached the bungalow was to tell the butler to fetch me a glass of brandy at once. When I recovered from my paralytic state I began to wonder how it was possible that that alligator had got into the tank. I knew that muggurs or alligators were numerous both in the Taptee and the Nerbudda, but the Taptee was at least three miles from the tank. I tried hard to unravel the mystery, but in vain. One day, however, Rama, my dressing boy, commenced gossiping to me, and giving me all the "gup" of the neighborhood. He told me that a fakir had seen Bhugwan very early on New Year's morning down at the Taptee, standing on the bank whistling in a peculiar low key, and that something of a tremendous size had crept out of the river and crawled away after him, he keeping up the same low whistle all the time. Everybody, said Rama, innocently, was wondering what Bhugwan was doing, and whether he were not an enchanter. Like lightning the truth dashed upon me. I knew that in India there were men who could charm alligators as well as snakes. I recalled Bhugwan's frequent visit to my servants, doubtless to learn my daily habits. I knew also the treachery and unforgiveness of the Hindoo character. Considering all these things coolly and, so to speak, judicially, I came to the conclusion that Bhugwan had charmed the alligator from the river into the tank, and that he had meant by this means to avenge himself on me for refusing his suit. I began to collect evidence. One day I met Bhugwan on the road, and although he salaamed with his usual affectation of humility, I could see spreading upon his features a most cynical and diabolical scowl. I felt convinced after this that he was my foiled assassin. Evidence grew apace. I found that Bhugwan had not slept in his house on New Year's Eve, and had exhibited an unusual nervous desire for gup or news throughout all New Year's Day; but my case was complete when the bheestie to whom the mussuck that saved me belonged came forward and told his story. He said that on that terrible morning he was about to fill the goat-skin with water at the tank when in the dim, gray dawn he saw Bhugwan approach cautiously with a long black beast at his heels. Thinking that he had seen a veritable shaitan or demon, he dropped the mussuck and ran away without being seen by Bhugwan, who was too busy with his whistling and his ferocious companion to notice him. When he returned afterward for his mussuck and found it gone he became more and more convinced that he had actually seen a devil. He would have spoken of the matter sooner, but he knew Bhugwan was a bad man, and so he was afraid to speak. To make a long story short, gentleman, Bhugwan was tried, convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for life for attempted murder."

"Did your friend the bheestie Judge?" asked the Colonel.

"You may be sure I paid him for the loss of his mussuck," replied the Judge, quietly.—Peter O'Neil.

A WARNING VISION.

The New Year's Night of a Conscience-Stricken and Unhappy Man.

An old man stood in the New Year's night at the window and gazed with a look of restless despair upon the immutable, ever-blooming heaven, and out over the still, pure, white earth, whereupon there was no one so joyless and sleepless as he. For his grave stood near to him. It was covered only with the snow of age, not with the green of youth; and he brought with him thither out of his whole rich life nothing but errors and sins and sickness—a ruined body, a desolated soul, a breast full of poison, an old age full of remorse. The fair days of his youth wandered about him now like ghosts, and they bore him back again to that clear morning when his father first placed him at the cross-road of life, the right hand leading by the sunny ways of virtue into a wide, peaceful land, full of light and of harvests; the left, down into the moleways of vice toward a black cavern, full of down-dropping poison, full of darting serpents and dark, sultry lamps. Ah! the serpents hung about his breast, and the poison-drops upon his tongue, and he knew now where he was.

Knowing not what he did, and with unspeakable grief, he cried out to Heaven: "Give me my youth once more! Oh father, place me once more upon the cross-road, that I may choose otherwise!"

But his father and his youth were long gone. He saw wandering lights dancing on the marshes and dying out upon God's Acre, and he said: "These are my sinful days!" He saw a star fly out from the heaven, to glimmer in its fall, and to be extinguished on the earth. "That is I," said his bleeding heart, and the serpent teeth of remorse gnawed again into his wounds.

His burning fancy showed him creeping night-wanderers upon the roof, and the windmill threw up its arms threatening to crush him, and a mask left behind in the dead-house assumed by degrees his own features. Suddenly, in the midst of this tumult, music for the New Year floated down from the tower, like distant church songs. He was deeply moved. He looked around the horizon and over the wide earth, and thought of his youthful friends, who now, happier and better than he, were teachers for the world, fathers of happy children, and favored men, and he said: "Oh, I also could be happy, dear parents, had I fulfilled your New Year's wishes and instructions."

In the feverish memories of his youth, it seemed to him that the mask, with his features, raised itself up in the dead-house; finally, through the superstition which discerns spirits and the future on New Year's night, it became a living youth, in the position of the beautiful boy of the Capitol pulling out a thorn, and his formerly blooming face dance weird and bitter before him.

He could look no more; he covered his eyes, hot tears streamed down upon the snow; again he softly sighed, hopeless and unconscious: "Come again, O youth, come again!"

And it came again; for on that New Year's night he had only dreamed thus fearfully. He was still a youth; yet his errors had been no dream. But he thanked God that he, still young, might turn aside from the foul ways of vice, and could follow the sunny path which leads to the fair land of harvests. Turn aside with him, O youth, if thou standest upon his wandering way! This rightful dream will in future be thy judge; but if thou shouldst one day call out, full of grief: "Come again, O beautiful youth!" so shall it never return again.—Wit, Wisdom and Philosophy of Richter.

A Sad Case Indeed.

"Sammy," said the old gentleman, his face glowing with benevolence and good humor, "Sammy, my boy, who is this Ap Oplexy who has such a taking way among our elderly people? From his name I should say he was a Welshman, eh?"

"Father," replied the young man, "are you giving me Taffy? Well, that's better than the prints of wales."

"Welsh said! Welsh said!" cried the old gentleman, turning quite purple in his enjoyment of the boy's readiness in paronomasia; and then the old gentleman laughed and choked and choked and laughed for half an hour.

It is a sad commentary upon human nature when a man almost within sight of the tomb can find pleasure in so vile a thing as a pun, and such a pun!—Boston Transcript.

Ringworm Humor and Salt-Rheum.

RAYNHAM, MASS., Aug. 12, 1878.

C. I. HOOD & Co.: Gentlemen— * * * * I have had ringworm humor and salt-rheum so badly that my body was covered with raw sores; so, also, my head and face. I have had any number of doctors in the last seven years, and none of them could cure me. One day my mother was in the city of Taunton, and found one of your cook books, and in reading it I found many people testifying to cures from the use of your Sarsaparilla and Olive Ointment. I felt forced to try it, although I had seen many things advertised that never did me any good. I have now taken two small bottles and one large one of Sarsaparilla, and used three boxes of Ointment. I now call myself cured. Nothing can be seen of the humor but the dim outlines of the sores. I shall take two more bottles, and then the cure will be complete.

I am gratefully yours,
EDGAR F. WHITMAN.

Biliousness, Sick Headache.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gents—Please send me by express two bottles HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA and a few Cook Books for distribution. Your preparation has worked wonders in the case of my wife, who has been troubled with sick headache and biliousness for years. She only took one-half teaspoonful at a dose, and has not been so well for five years as now. She found that within a week after taking it she felt very much better, and is now entirely free from those severe headaches. She has not taken any of any account since last spring, and what little she had is lent to do some others some good, and we must have it in the house.

Yours truly,

ALASKAN CREMATION.

An Interesting, Though Somewhat Startling, Ceremony.

We found the house of mourning a few doors further on, and heard the sound of the beating staff of the mourners as they kept time to their mournful singing. We opened the door and entered. The room had been put in order for the occasion and hung with draperies, the end opposite the door, where the dead man was set up, being hung with the American flag. About fifty Indians, men, women and children, were seated around in the space between the fire and the counter or platform that runs all around the room, clad in their best blankets and preserving a solemn decorum. The covers had been taken from the four gaily painted pillars or talem posts that stood at the corners of the central square in the room. The dead Indian, set up on the floor as if alive, was covered with a blanket, except his head, which wore a crown, and near by stood his mask and some other fixtures. His face was painted with red, and there was nothing ghastly or deathlike in its look. We remained for some time, and were kindly treated. I was told that the singing, shaking of rattles and beating of long sticks on the floor continues all night, and that when the time comes for cremating the body is usually taken out through the opening in the roof—never through the front door—and carried to the funeral pile. Although we were in attendance next morning at ten o'clock we were too late to see the initial proceedings, for we met the mourners with their long sticks returning from the fire, and when we reached it, beyond the ranche on the beach, the body was nearly consumed. A pile of wood, large sticks four or five feet long, had been laid up, corn-cob-house-wise, and a smaller pile put inside, on which the body, wrapped in its blanket, was laid. Logs were then added, above the body, crossing others at the corners and lighted. A very great heat was thus produced, and a few Indians in attendance used long poles to keep the burning sticks in place; some women were seated in the grass not far away. There was no odor, and complete decorum and decency so far as behavior was concerned. Still, I believe, some combat the cremating custom, which I think worthy of perpetuation. After the body is burnt, the ashes are gathered and put in a box or trunk, and deposited with the personal possessions in the tomb, which is erected over a spot in their cemetery, and consists of a small, square wooden house, the four sides of the roof running up to a peak; these toy houses, six to eight feet high, are gaily painted and present a really picturesque appearance. I tried one day to make my way through an old part of the cemetery, but I found myself in a regular jungle of bushes and undergrowth, and could make no headway. The old dead houses were falling into decay, and everything inside them had been stolen or had perished, and grass and weeds grew up inside almost to the house roofs. The canoes of the dead, that had been hauled up by the houses, had also rotted; ravens croaked on all sides—it was almost dismal and funereal.—Sitka (Alaska) Cor. American Register.

Composition of Platinoid.

The new alloy, known as "platinoid," is essentially nickel silver, with the addition of from one to two per cent. of tungsten. The color is white like silver, and the alloy retains a polish untarnished by exposure to the air for a long time. It is found, also, that it has a high degree of electrical resistance, with a small amount of variation in degree with changes of temperature; qualities which, it is claimed by electricians, render the alloy peculiarly suitable for the construction of galvanometers and resistance coils.—N. Y. Independent.

—The improved kind of explosive known as cocoa powder is said to possess such superior value for many purposes that it has been introduced into the famous Krupp factory, in Germany. It is asserted that, with equal pressure, this substance gives greater velocity to a ball than can be attained with ordinary powder, while its smoke is found to be less dense and to clear off more quickly.

—Towns are booming on Puget Sound. A letter received by a prominent real-estate dealer in Seattle from a friend now at Port Moody states that the whole peninsula bordering on Coal Harbor will be laid out in twenty-five foot town lots. The erection of Government works contemplated there will be at once entered upon. Vancouver, Granville and Port Moody are swarming with people.

FASHION NOTES.

Street Wraps, Furs, Bonnets and Trimmings for the Season.

Hoods are street wraps are popular in Paris just now.

Bonnet strings are correctly worn two and one-half or three inches wide.

Fur shoulder capes are to be worn, but probably are not so fashionable as last winter.

In bonnets where velvet and fur are combined the fur must match the color of the velvet.

Bonnets of velvet, with fur or seal plush or astrakhan plush brims, are being brought out for midwinter wear.

For morning out-of-door wear, on all sorts of occasions, woolen frocks of English make and appearance take precedence of all others.

Bonnet strings should be only five-eighths or three-quarters of a yard long, and tied in a bow under the chin or a little on one side.

Little girls wear a great deal of brown and red this season, but no matter what the color of their frocks, their stockings, to be correct, must be black.

Tam O'Shanter caps for little girls are trimmed with a jabot of cloth, velvet, or ribbon placed erect on the band and crown of the hat, directly in front. A small steel, silver or jet ornament adds to the dressy effect.

The most popular midwinter wrap for ladies bids fair to be the ulster, newmarket or overcoat of seal or seal plush, cut to resemble a man's overcoat, but with no effort to make it look masculine or strong minded.

Sealskin, more worn than ever, is only enhanced in popular favor by the number of seal plush wraps, which imitate it to perfection, but, of course, lack the warmth and lightness combined in sealskin, and which insures its lasting popularity.

The variety in trimming materials, inexpensive, but effective and tasteful when well chosen, is due to the pluck and enterprise of American manufacturers, who have, by the beauty and excellence of their productions in millinery stuffs, kept back the price of the foreign goods.

English homespuns, Irish friezes and blarney cloths, kerseys, and Scotch cheviots are used almost to the exclusion of all other woolen stuffs for street utility and informal visiting suits, and with such suits a jacket of the same or of some heavy cloaking cloth is the proper wrap. If the weather is very cold a fur stole and muff may be worn over the jacket and a chamois body underneath.

Fine feather bands composed of ostrich filaments for the centers, and sea gulls, eagle neck or cock's hackle feathers curled for the outer edges, trim many handsome carriage wraps of Roman crapaud cloth, drap de fantasie, velvet broche embroidered with tinsel and silk, and cachemire du Thibet of changeable colors, and sometimes those wonderful French fabrics in changeable effects, broche with fine cashmere beads.

Fancy muffs of fur, velvet, plush, broche, silk, and satin in combination, and trimmed with lace, beads, morifs, pendants, ribbon, feathers, and tinsel embroidery, come in all sorts of odd and artistic forms, resembling reticules, pouches, fans, annonaires, Oriental capes, medallions, lozenges, and moons, full, ribbous, and crescent. They are, as a rule, suspended around the neck with fancy ribbons that match the colors and materials of the muff.—N. Y. Sun.

ORIGIN OF FASHIONS.

Noted Women Who Are Responsible for Popular Follies.

Mme. de Pompadour once had an ugly pimple on her chin. She was vexed, and at last pasted a piece of black plaster over the offending spot. Result: All the ladies in the court appeared the following week with pieces of plaster on their faces. A fashion was established and it was kept up for a long time. The same lady, as I suppose you all know, was exceedingly diminutive in stature. To remedy this defect she invented high-heeled boots. They were unknown before her time. Result: The ladies of the court took to high-heeled boots and another fashion had its birth. Marie Antoinette had enormous quantities of hair. She didn't know what to do with it. She was waiting for a barber one day, with the intention of being shorn, and had piled up her hair in a careless manner when she suddenly found that this style of head-dress set off her small features to advantage. Result: Monstrously high coiffures came into fashion and were worn for a long time. Anne of Austria had exquisitely formed arms. Result: Short sleeves came into fashion. The Princess of Wales is the unfortunate possessor of a limp. No, sir; not a little amble, but an ugly, unprepossessing limp. Would you believe it? Some time ago a large number of ladies had one heel of their shoes made lower than the other. Result: The "Alexandrian limp" became the height of the fashion. The "Grecian bend" was another result of this unfortunate defect. Well this same noble lady has some slight deformity of the neck which prevents her wearing dresses cut low. Result: The fashion, which still rages among English ladies, for bodices reaching almost to the ears, a fashion which is much ridiculed among the Parisians.—Boston Journal of Commerce.

From Poetry to Buckwheat.

It was one of those delightful September mornings that strayed over into November. The light autumnal haze of Indian summer was sleeping on the hill tops, only to be invigorated with the colors of the rising sun. Rosalind McGush, aroused by the matin song that arose from the poultry-yard, parted the curtains and looked forth upon the scene. "What a gorgeous morning! O, why should I be chained to this humdrum sphere? I will seize my pen and pour forth melodious verse in honor of this day of the gods."

"Rosy!" came a sharp call from the foot of the stairs. "Come down and fry the buckwheats right away!"

And from thoughts poetic to deeds domestic Rosalind descended.—Chicago Tribune.

ODD BLUNDERS.

Some of the Costly Mistakes Made in Large Cities.

Mistakes are expensive sometimes. A New Yorker had a lot seventy-five feet wide, intending to build four houses of equal fronts on it, and one of the middle ones first. He employed a firm of surveyors to locate the house, and they located it so that the remaining space one side was only ten feet wide. The mistake was not discovered until the house was done, the proprietor having no time, probably, for such trifles. Then he sued the surveyors for damages, but they won a verdict on the ground that their plan was accepted and paid for as satisfactory although it located the corner stone nine feet farther in one direction than was intended. This mistake was rather more serious than that played upon a resident in a brown-stone front in Forty-seventh street, who returned from business one night to find the entire stoop of his house in ruins, the heavy stone work having been pulled to the ground. His wife said a man had come with orders to demolish, and had done so. Although she did not know enough to demand a halt for explanation, she did observe the name on the wagons. The indignant citizen took measures to prosecute, when it was found that the employer of the men had ordered them to go to the same number in Forty-eighth street instead of Forty-seventh. He had learned of the mistake and had contracted to have the wrong stoop rebuilt, and he was surprised to learn that the work had not been done. These incidents of metropolitan life show that mistakes are there regarded with very little concern, those responsible not taking the trouble to apologize or even explain. The same amount of pains spent in doing a job well that is spent in getting the job to do would pay.—Christian at Work.

NO HELP WANTED.

How a Merchant Got Rid of a Troublesome Candidate for Employment.

A young man who said he had left the farm to strike a job in the city, and who added that if he could only secure a place somewhere he felt certain of laying the foundations of a fortune, importuned a business house on Jefferson avenue until the chief clerk finally played a joke to get rid of him. He gave him the street and number of the County Jail and advised him to call and ask for the place of the last man sent to Jackson.

Half an hour later the young man pulled the Sheriff's bell and said to that official:

"I am in search of a situation. I am twenty-two years old, never sick a day and——"

"I have nothing for you," replied the Sheriff.

"I'll work mighty cheap. I can bring you twenty testimonials that I don't swear, drink, chew or gamble. If you'll——"

"Sorry, but I have no vacancies."

"Didn't a man leave here for Jackson a few days ago?" asked the young man.

"Oh, yes—half a dozen of them."

"Then give me one of their places. I'll work the first month for my board and clothes."

"They didn't even get that much," said the Sheriff, as he began to tumble to the racket.

"Well, I've got to make a beginning, and I'll furnish my own clothes."

"I should like to aid you, but really I have no vacancies at present."

"Oh, come, now—give me a show."

"Can't do it."

"Can't eh! All right for you. I'll find one somewhere, and don't you forget it, and the day'll come when I'll make you power'ul sorry that you gave me the cold shoulder on a cold day!"—Detroit Free Press.

PATERNAL REPROOF.

A Persecuted Little Girl Who Was, Nevertheless, Mistress of the Situation.

"Papa, what makes the rain come down?" said a very small girl to her parent as they stood, father, mother and child, waiting under the shelter of a grocery sign till the car should come along.

"Don't bother me," said the father.

"Really, Maria, that child is getting to be a perfect nuisance. She is always asking absurd questions."

"I think she's real cunning," said the mother.

"That's the way you spoil her. You encourage her to be cunning and she makes the most ridiculous ass of herself all the time."

"Well, she's going to be very clever."

"I don't believe she'll know her way home when she grows up."

"It's time that car was coming along," said the wife, quietly.

"I suppose there's some blamed jam down the street. I don't see any in sight yet, and we've been here twenty minutes."

"Pa," said the small child, "I don't see any car track on this street."

It was so. They were on Tyler street and they were waiting for the Turk street car. The mother hummed the "Nanon" waltz all the way home, but the old man was very mad and the child was quite unconsciously mistress of the situation.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—A woman in the northern part of Vermont is telling of the way she fooled the inspecting Dr. Kay, of Newport, on one of the recent Montreal trains. She had determined not to be vaccinated on the train, and so sewed a button under the sleeve of the dress near where the arm is usually scraped. The inspector came along and ordered her to bare her arm. "But it isn't necessary, sir; you can feel the scab," she said. He planted his hand on the button, the woman gave a scream of pretended pain, and Dr. Kay moved along.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

A COMFORTING REFLECTION.

There would be profound and widespread alarm throughout the country at the action of the House in establishing loose rules to facilitate loose and profligate legislation, but for one fact that assures the nation of honest and economical government.

It is a comforting reflection among intelligent and upright citizens of all parties that Grover Cleveland is President of the United States, and they have abiding faith that there will be a safe, steady and resolute Executive hand to halt the now clearly forshadowed extravagance of Congress.

It is not only possible but probable that the majority of the House will make a shameful record for the Democracy that is fairly responsible for the action of the body. True, it will not be done by a solid Democratic vote, but by Republican profligates filling the gaps made by honest and courageous Democrats. The result will be the same, however, as to Democratic responsibility for the record of the House; but while a Democratic House may make its record a reproach to the country, the President who is faithful to honest government, as Grover Cleveland must be, will be more honored and more strongly entrenched in popular affection, by saving both party and country from imbeciles and jobbers. It is a comforting reflection.—Phil. Times.

APPROVED BY ALL.

Never has a presidential message been received by the press and public men of an opposite party with anything like the favor shown that of President Cleveland. It was a matter of course that the Democratic party would be pleased with the utterances of their first chief magistrate in twenty-four years. He trod on many of their old bourbon bunions remorselessly, but very few of them betrayed themselves by wincing. We have now had time to hear from all sections of the union, and with hardly a dissenting voice the press and people commend Cleveland's first message.—The San Francisco Argonaut, the organ of the best Republican sentiment on the Pacific coast, says that it is "altogether the most dignified and able state paper that has emanated from the executive mansion since the presidency of Abraham Lincoln."—What pleases Mr. Frank Pixley most in the message is the manly and resolute tone of its utterances. "It is refreshing," says he, "in a state paper of this importance to observe no grandiloquence, no boasting jingoism, no demagogy, no toadying to the voting class, no effort to conciliate the king-makers and party bosses of the Democracy, no pipe-laying for his own succession. It demonstrates that he (the president) possesses enough of brains, courage, and conscience to carry the nation through the term for which he has been chosen to administer its affairs."—Chicago News.

We call attention to the prospectus in another column of the Philadelphia Times. A new departure will take place with the new year and the paper will be improved in every department. There is no better family weekly published in this country at present than the Philadelphia Times.

CLINTON OR TECUMSEH—WHICH?

That Clinton needs and should support a local newspaper is a fact well known and acknowledged by every public spirited citizen. And that THE LOCAL is the ONLY paper published in the interests of Clinton, is another well known fact. Also that THE LOCAL is a thorn in the side of the Tecumseh papers is a fact, although perhaps not quite so well known as the first named.

A paper published in Tecumseh does Clinton no good whatever. The patronage given to Tecumseh newspapers stops in Tecumseh. The support bestowed upon like institution in Clinton stays in Clinton. Tecumseh newspapers help draw trade away from Clinton. A newspaper published here aids, so far as possible, to keep trade in Clinton. Since the establishment of THE LOCAL the publishers of the Tecumseh papers have been more than ever zealous in their endeavors to hold their patronage, which rightfully belongs to a Clinton paper. These publishers have gone even farther than courtesy in business competition admits, and used all sorts of schemes to divide the business here so that The Local will have to go, and leave Clinton without a newspaper again, and dependent upon Tecumseh as heretofore.

We are creditably informed that in soliciting job work here, newspaper men have stated that the work could not be done in Clinton, but would have to go to Manchester, and it might as well be done in Tecumseh as there. We would respectfully ask our fair-minded citizens not to believe any such talk. We have a good office here, and, with very few exceptions, have done all the work brought to us, and have never been obliged to borrow type at either of the offices at Tecumseh. Yet, there has been cases where jobs have been taken by Tecumseh printers, and at least a part of the type borrowed at Manchester to do them with. And perhaps we are not so highly educated as some of our brother editors, and cannot write our ideas in so polished a manner as they, yet we shall endeavor to put our matter in plain words, so that "he who runs may read." With the undivided support of the people of Clinton, a newspaper here will be a fairly paying property, and then we can enlarge our office and extend our business to be credit to any town.

The above article is taken from last week's Clinton Local. One cannot peruse it without coming to the conclusion that the editor has got up on his ear; in fact, to extend the saying somewhat, he has "climbed up" on both ears. We are glad to see these signs of improvement on the part of the Local. They indicate prosperity. Clinton deserves a good local newspaper, that's true, and the business men of Clinton should sustain it. As soon as it becomes prosperous, it can move out, and settle down in Tecumseh or Manchester, still claiming its Clinton patronage. Again if the Local shall wax strong and grow, it can rake in many Tecumseh 'ads. The Tecumseh merchants are enterprising men. They know where to advertise. They believe in printer's ink. Their liberal use of the columns of the HERALD shows that fact. And when the Clinton merchants advertise as an act of business rather than an act of local patriotism, they also send their ads to the HERALD. Money spent for advertising in the HERALD is always a good investment.

"That the Local is a thorn in the side of the Tecumseh papers is a fact." Why, bless your good soul, Bro. Miles, you never were more mistaken. The Local is no thorn in our side. The HERALD'S Clinton list is growing every week, and we attribute it chiefly to the competition afforded by the Local. The Local—with its Manchester pages, Tecumseh advertisements and all—reaches our sanctum each week by due course of mail and drops into the waste paper basket as easily and naturally as a slice of baked apple into a bowl of mush and milk.

"A paper published in Tecumseh does Clinton no good whatever." As well might we say that a paper published in Detroit does Tecumseh no good whatever. In one sense it does not. In another it does. If Tecumseh could support as good a paper as Detroit supports, it would be a business detriment to us not to have such a paper. But if Tecumseh sustains a paper commensurate with its size and importance, the fact that Detroit supports a better paper is no damage to this town—and Tecumseh people will consult their own best interests, by giving Detroit papers a liberal patronage. Likewise Clinton men will find it to their interest to support Tecumseh papers. We believe we state an undeniable fact in making the assertion that the business of Clinton was larger five or six years ago, when they depended wholly upon the Tecumseh HERALD for their local newspaper facilities, than it is to-day. Surely the Tecumseh papers didn't injure Clinton then.

"These publishers have gone even farther than courtesy in business competition admits, and used all sorts of schemes to divide the business here." Easy, neighbor, easy. What schemes have we used? Be more explicit. The world in general and Northern Lenawee County in particular desire more light on this subject—and as the limited circulation of the Local will hardly meet the emergency, we offer Bro. Miles the columns of the HERALD to enable him to elucidate. These are "schemes" the HERALD has used. We have transmitted sample copies to Clinton residents; we have solicited subscriptions and advertising in Clinton. But is it not true that Bro. Miles has trespassed on our clover patch also, by soliciting subscriptions and advertising in Tecumseh. The young man should remember that this is a big world, a very big world, and there is plenty of room in it for a great many newspapers like the Local. This is a free country. If the Clinton or Adrian publishers wish to canvass Tecumseh for subscribers we know of no method to stop them, and we shall meet this competition in a business way by soliciting subscriptions in Clinton and Adrian.

"Jobs have been taken by Tecumseh printers, and at least a part of the type borrowed at Manchester to do them with." Now this is the most unkindest cut of all. The HERALD borrowing type! We would respectfully inform our young Christian friend that the cases in the HERALD office could furnish the type for ten papers like the Local and still have type enough left to start another Tecumseh News.

In conclusion we beg to inform our Clinton friends that the Clinton department of the HERALD will be better and fuller during 1886 than ever before. It will give Clinton readers a full assortment of local items and will also furnish more Tecumseh and County matter than can be gathered from any other source. At the club rates we offer, it is the cheapest local newspaper in Southern Michigan. Now is the time to subscribe.

TECUMSEH AND FRANKLIN FARMER'S CLUB.

The Tecumseh and Franklin Farmer's Club met Dec. 16th, at Andrew Wilson's, Jr. The evening was all that could be asked for, and the attendance was good. The President called the meeting to order, and after the usual miscellaneous business the literary program as arranged for the meeting was carried out, after which the question, "How can poultry raising be made profitable" was taken up and discussed, but the discussion was more to the effect, "Does poultry pay."

Mrs. H. Wilson opened the question with a well written essay in which she described the comfortable house and good living that madam biddy should have if we would expect any eggs in cold weather. And that the house should be kept clean; found that early chickens payed the best. Received 37 doz. eggs in the months of Oct. and Nov. and sold them for $7,40.

W. J. Waldron commenced Jan. 1st. 1885 with 40 hens valued at $20; has sold 301 doz. eggs for $38,90, and chickens $6,50. Has 80 hens on hand valued at $40: his feed cost him $19,00, which leaves a profit of $46,20 besides the eggs and chickens used. He fed mostly oats, and preferred it to corn. Has a warm hen house and the hens laid all winter. Has a white cochin hen that has laid since first of April three sittings of eggs, raised two lots of chickens and is laying now. Thot as a rule farmers kept too many hens, that 40 hens were enough

Mr. S. Munger thought that both turkeys and chickens could be raised with profit. Sold 8 turkeys for $11.40. Spoke of one of his neighbors that sold 70 turkeys for $90, while eight large hogs did not quite bring $100, and found that the turkeys paid the best.

President Hurry said that his hens always laid 10c eggs, (per doz) and that hens would not lay in cold weather without warm quarters. Found that the hens that stayed in the sheep yards layed more eggs than those in the hen house, the sheep having the warmest house.

Mr. H. Wilson read a piece entitled, "do mongrels pay," to the effect that blood would tell. He also said that a warm clean hen house was the keynote to success in poultry raising, as you could not feed a hen in a snowbank and expect her to lay eggs; recommends feeding three times a day and change the feed each time; feed corn the last thing at night; thought wheat was the best feed where eggs was the object. Did not believe in feeding all they would eat; that farmers did not pay attention enough to their poultry; that we should not expect them to pay without some labor.

Walter Osborn said that poultry raising had not paid with him; had the cholera for four or five years and after getting rid of that some good friend stole 140 of his best chickens; thought that if he had been permited to do the marketing he might have found it more profitable.

Mr. H. Hoag thought that the compition in the market was good for the farmers. Believed it a good plan to put the feed where the hens would have to scratch for it, as among straw or leaves on the hen house floor. Has sold $20 worth of eggs and chickens, eaten 20 chickens and has 108 on hand; had 25 hens to start with.

George Swarts thought that poultry paid as well as any thing on the farm. Since the 1st of March has sold $39,07 worth of eggs, and $37,11 of chickens. His feed cost him $25, leaving a profit of $51,18, or about $1,00 per hen. Had 60 hens last spring and 70 now. He thought wheat the cheapest feed and that it would bring $1,50 per bush. if fed to the hens and that corn was too fatening if feed alone.

In answer to the question "how to get rid of hen lice," Mrs. W. S. Osborn recommended sulphur. Messrs. Munger and Waldron used insect powder. H. Wilson thought if the hen house was kept clean you would not be troubled with hen lice.

Charles Mathews said that you could freeze them out. H. Hoag had used tar and kerosene. W. S. Osborn said that they would swim in kerosene.

It was the opinion of most of the club that to raise poultry with profit they must be given a good, clean, warm, well lighted and ventilated house, with plenty of feed including scraps from the table, meat, cabbage, broken bone, etc., that they should have drink as well as feed, and also that any good hen would lay eggs if taken care of.

A good program was arranged for the next meeting, Dec. 30.

REPORTER.

READING THE WEATHER SIGNALS.

As there is some misunderstanding in regard to the signification of the weather signals, we give below the meaning of each signal. The firm of Satterthwaite Bros. & Boyd who have charge of displaying the signals, have issued a neat card printed in colors which gives the meaning of each signal. Every family should procure one of these cards and keep it for reference:

Black square on red flag means—Approaching storm.

Blue square—Cold wave approaching.

Red sun—Higher temperature.
Red moon—Lower temperature.
Red star—Stationary temperature.
Blue sun—General rain or snow.
Blue moon—Clear or fair weather.
Blue star—Local rain or snow.

To interpret the signals properly they should be read from the top downward. Thus a blue star with red star underneath means that local rain or snow may be expected with stationary temperature. A blue moon with a red moon underneath means clear or fair weather followed by lower temperature. The signals displayed each morning are a very correct guide to the weather for that day.

CLINTON CHRONICLES.

Edward Halladay and family, of Norvell, came down to attend the family reunion at Mrs. M. Stanclift's, on Christmas day.

Stephen Stear, a brother-in-law of Mrs. Taylor Starr, died at Morenci the first of the week and was buried yesterday.

Ed. Conlin, a nephew of Mrs. Abbott, of Florence, N. J., came out to spend a few days with his relatives, and will return soon after Jan. 1.

Web. Love, of Franklin, was chatting with his numerous friends in the village last Saturday.

A. W. Spafford bid his friends adieu, Monday, and departed for brighter prospective fields, in quest of labor.

Mrs. Sam'l Larzelere, continues very low with, we understand, very little hopes of her recovery.

Deputy Sheriff Aten was in town Wednesday, but we heard of no new discoveries at Podunk.

Miss Ada Potter came up to visit her Clinton friends yesterday.

J. B. Hause & Bro., with their families, went up to Jackson, to attend the golden wedding of their parents, which takes place to-day.

From all accounts, the Clinton Band boys had a Christmas jollification, on their trip to Brooklyn, that completely captured their good feelings prompted them to put their best smile foremost and they received therefor, not only the compensation to be awarded for services, but were highly complimented on their good productions both for skating and the dance. We understand there was quite a matinee at the Teachout House after the dance, in which the boys all took an active part, and some of them not altogether to their liking for when they wished to look after the perpetrators of the joke they found that not only the bedclothes had been carried off but they were also minus of wearing apparel. Cold water shower baths are not the most acceptable addendum under the circumstances; at least, Tommy says so and we have no desire to dispute him.

The market is rather dull for dressed pork, the springy weather not warranting activity. The live stock market is also quiet, with very little choice stock offered.

St. John's Church celebrated Christmas eve with exercises by the members and Sunday-school scholars and distribution of presents from a tree laden with treasures.

Maggie Blosser, Alta Sheldon, Edie Kapp, Lulu Greene and Gracie Morey were down from Manchester yesterday, enjoying a days visit with their music teacher, Miss Ella Smith. A parlor concert was given in the evening, but as we had no "bid," we are unable to give the program.

Hattie Platt, of Deerfield, surprised her friends here, last evening, by dropping in suddenly upon them after a disappointed effort to return with her from the noon train. Her many friends will be glad to learn that she is to remain with her aunt, Mrs. Broadbent, for several weeks.

The photographer done quite a lively business at the M. E. Church last evening, as might have been expected when it was ascertained that a good square meal could be had and picture taken for 10 cents.

Cynthia Monaghan, of Franklin, attended the social at the methodist church, last evening.

The Baptist Sunday-school enjoyed their Christmas receiving tokens under the foliage of a beautiful evergreen in their church.

There is some talk of Uncle Tom's Cabin alighting in our midst.

Brad. had been away from home. Upon his return some one whispered to him and he went down to the house instanter! And now Brad smiles as he congratulates that other Mr. Swift. They were twins.

The M. E. society enjoyed the following program of exercises at their church last Thursday evening:

Song by the Choir.
Prayer by Rev. W. P. Wastell;
Recitation by Ethel Hinds.
Recitation by Maud Swift.
Song, by the Choir.
Remarks, by the Pastor.
Recitation, Maime Wilson.
Recitation. by Lulu Stanclift.
Song, by the Choir.
Recitation, by Addie Ellis and Minnie Pierce.
Distribution of presents to the number of 500.

After the presents were distributed from the tree, Mr. & Mrs. Bell Mills were made the recipients of a beautiful silver set, as a token in commendation of their aid to the choir. Rev. W. P. Wastell made some appropriate remarks.

Doxology.
Benediction.

We are sorry to learn of the continued sickness of Ezra DePuy, with but feeble hopes that he may be seen among his old associates again in the village, and his merry laughter ringing in the joyous gatherings of social intercourse. We are really in hopes the foundation for fears of this kind may be overcome.

Willis VanTuyl, cashier of the bank, visited Detroit the first of the week, and it was really amusing to see Ed. fill the vacancy in his absence. We presume it was almost punishment to him, at least he looked it.

Dr. Alvord and daughter, Grace, have been making their old neighbors happy with their presence. The doctor was a practitioner in this village for many years and his old friends were glad to meet him again. He was the guest of David Woodward while here. Miss Grace went to Adrian and called on her old acquaintances there, Monday, and the pressure of business at home, called the doctor back to duty, causing him to make his departure Monday morning.

Chas. Keyes of Grand Rapids, was at his fathers, postmaster Keyes' for a holiday vacation.

Dr. Burchard and family, Dan. Davis and family and Frank McClure and family, were participants in a merry Christmas time, at Mrs. Glimps', in Bridgewater, and report having had one of the very best of times.

L. F. Wheeler was in town Saturday; we understand he was making arrangements to favor our citizens with an entertainment in the near future.

Chas. Johnston and wife, of Detroit, are spending holiday week with their parents and relatives, L. H. Johnston and wife and F. M. Muir and family.

Mont. Hendershot, of the Tecumseh News force, came home accompanied by wife and little one, to celebrate Christmas with the old folks.

John Hause, of the firm of Hause Bros., who has been making an extensive tour in the far west, on business concerning the production of extract of apple, returned just in time to partake of the merry Christmas as it flitted around town, to greet the many who had provised for its reception at home.

The second of the series of club dances took place at town hall on the night of Christmas, and was participated in by a large crowd of dancers and spectators who had turned out to witness the merry time and listen to the music, which by the way was the poorest excuse for Christmas party—which should have excelled—that we have listened to for a long time, and we judge, from what we overheard, many departed very much chagrined that their enjoyment did not meet their expectations, and after putting their best behavior foremost to bear and forbear, they were finally relieved by the announcement, that they would be allowed the privilege of paying 15 cents for each and every quadrille passed through to the enlivening strains produced by that quartette after 12 o'clock, which released many from a determination to have their moneys worth, and they returned at once to "little beds" to forget what had happened, and await the arrival of Ollie Hunt's band on the 8th ult, when it is expected there will be a general good time in every sense of the word.

Alice Mills, who is attending school in Chelsea, came to her home in Bridgewater, to solve the question. "how much is to be left of Turkey after the holdays are over?" She returns prepared to take a prominent position in the "front rank" of the geography class.

There was a fair attendance at the Missionary concert at the Baptist church last Sunday evening, and the exercises were enjoyed by all present. The net receipts from the mite-boxes which were gathered in—being hardly half of those given out—and the contribution of the evening was $7 10 and is to be divided equally between the home missions and foreign missions.

The young people of Tecumseh, will give a social at Seth Sheldon's in what has been termed for many years, Newburgh, about equally distant from Tecumseh and this village, next Tuesday evening, January 5th. All who wish to enjoy a good time at a union gathering, are invited to be present and join with them in an evening of pleasure and profit.

H. P. Lamb and wife of Manchester, Mrs. E. Lindsley and daughter, and George Lindsley and family, of Saline and Paul Snauble and family, of Ann Arbor, spent Christmas with John Bush and family of this place.

Origin of Popular Phrases.

VAMOSE.—A Mexican phrase—an adaptation of the Spanish verb vamos, meaning literally, "let us go."

TAFFY.—This word, which is now used as a vulgar synonym of flattery, is by no means of recent origin, as many suppose, but was really coined 200 years ago, and has been in use in London fully that period.

BOSS.—This term, which is extensively used in the United States and England to designate the person placed as overseer of workmen and working women, is an improvement on the Dutch word baas, meaning employer.

BOGUS.—An Anglicism—the vulgate for "Borghese," the name of a forger who "operated" somewhat extensively across the water about thirty-five years ago. He passed false tokens and counterfeit bills to the amount of many thousand dollars, and hence the term "bogus" is applied to whatever is false and fraudulent.

A DELUSION, A MOCKERY AND A SNARE.—The fact that this familiar saying has about it a certain Biblical ring, has sometimes led to its being quoted as from one or other of the Hebrew prophets; the words are, in fact, an extract from the judgment of Lord Denman, of the English house of lords, on the appeal of Daniel O'Connell to that body from the verdict rendered at his trial.

RED TAPE.—An English expression, originated by Carlyle and made popular by Dickens. It was designed to represent the ceremonious delays and official formalities characteristic of the British governmental routine. It is similarly used in this country to ridicule the tardiness with which everything is effected by the formalism of governmet officials. The expression arises from the fact that government officers generally tie up their bundles of paper with red tape.

CANTEEN.—This is, perhaps, the only word in our language which, originally passed into a foreign tongue, and was afterward taken back in a modified form. As originally spoken by the Saxon, it was simply a tin can; but the Gaul, as is his wont, placing the noun before the adjective, and pronouncing the letter i as e, brought it out as cantin, pronounced canteen. Adopting a thousand other French terms, the obtuse Englishman took back his own original word in a new shape, without any inquiries on the subject, and hence we now say canteen instead of tin-can.

TO THE MANOR BORN.—This phrase, strictly construed, has perhaps a meaning. It is a form of expression that defines the privilege or position of an heir on whom is entailed some landed estate, the manor of a wealthy or noble family. But has it any authority to be used, as we frequently see it, as a technical or proverbial saying? Probably not. It is not a phrase known in law to define the legal status; and it is not a question of proverbial significance from any of our classic writers. It is apparently a perverted reading of the following passage in Shakespeare:

Horatio—Is it a custom?
Hamlet—Aye, marry is't;
But to my mind—though I am a native here,
And to the manor born—it is a custom
More honored in the breach than the observance. —Hamlet, Act 1, Scene 4.

OLD HARRY—The popular attributes of the evil one are a human form with horns, tail and cloven foot. These are probably derived from the representations of the Greek satyrs and the Roman fauns—the wild gods of the mountains and groves; and it is probable that the name Old Harry was originally Old Hairy. The satyrs were said to have hair like goats; and "hayre," or "harie," in old English, signified a garment made of goat's hair.

On this supposition Old Harry or Old Hairy would have some affinity to Old Shock, a popular English name given to the demon that was supposed to haunt roadsides and wild pathways. Shock is a head of rough hair, a rough-haired dog. The evil one is sometimes called "the Lord Harry," a title perhaps given derisively; or it may allude to the Scripture term, "the god of this world," the prince of the powers of darkness.

"FIRE AWAY, FLANAGAN.—Cromwell having marched his army southward, came to a castle garrisoned by some rebels, under command of a Flanagan, who sent Cromwell a violent philippic, ending with an order to quit the place, or he would open his cannon on the English forces. Cromwell returned the note, with his reply written in the corner of the missive: "Fire away, Flanagan." The laconic reply so frightened the redoubtable Flanagan that he fled without firing a shot.

TOO UTTER, TOO VERY, ETC.—This just now popular and novel style of slang, originated in the London Punch, and was to ridicule the pretentions of the very exquiste pretenders to art and aesthetic culture, whom that paper also travesties in pictures. It was first employed to satirize in pictures and verbal jests one Oscar Wilde, a young poet in London, who is greatly given to affectation, such as parading the street with a white lily in his hand, and writing very extravagant verses. The phraseology of Punch is copied by writers who want to indicate that anything is very pretentiously aesthetic or artistic.

A Pretty Story.

"I believe in a providence," said Victor Hugo to a company gathered around him in the Rue de Clichy, "because I am a providence myself." Being asked for an explanation, the poet repled: "We caught a mouse yesterday evening. His death sentence was already pronounced, when my little granddaughter, Jeanne, with eyes glistening with tears, begged for the life of the gray prisoner. Her mother hesitated whether to listen to the dear little advocate or not, and in her doubt said, 'Grandfather shall decide.' So they came to me. For a moment I held the power of life and death over the diminutive creature, and I thought: The heavenly providence may find itself in my situation when the fate of a being of a higher order is to be determined. Naturally I set the mouse free; for when a man undertakes the role of providence on a small scale, he should at least imitate generosity."

ARSENIC INEBRIETY.

Peculiarities of a Man who Used the Poisonous Drug Daily.

A typical example of a class of cases not well understood by the general public—cases in which arsenic, like alcohol or opium, is taken as a narcotic or a stimulant—is detailed by Dr. T. D. Crothers. An English veterinary surgeon and trainer, who had a greatly exaggerated fear of death, had commenced the taking of arsenic in the belief that it would protect him against disease. He had continued it on account of its stimulative properties, and consulted the doctor only after the ill effects of the habit had manifested themselves. Up to 1880 he was in good health and did his work well, although he was then taking from one to two drams of Fowler's solution of arsenic every day or second day on account of exhaustion and "bad feeling." For four years he wandered from place to place, doing service as a trainer and horse doctor, and during this time the use of arsenic had steadily increased, until he was taking three ounces of Fowler's solution in a day. The ordinary dose of the drug is five drops three times a day. He often found it difficult to procure so large a quantity of solution, so he commenced to use the powder, of which he ate fifteen or twenty grains a day.

His appearance at that time was that of a man in good health. His face was full and the skin clear and white. The eyes were brilliant, though somewhat unsteady, and when talking the facial muscles moved inordinately. His countenance showed no wrinkles or marked lines. His walk had become deliberate and hesitating, and the sensibility of his skin was diminished. He complained of rheumatic stiffness, which was very pronounced when deprived of his usual dose of arsenic. At times he ate an inordinate amount of food, and then he would abstain from eating for a week or more. For a year his sleep had been broken by bad dreams, he would wake up covered with perspiration, and his mind was filled with vague and depressing fears. When he awoke in the morning he felt a sense of exhaustion and pressure all over the body which steadily grew worse until the arsenic was taken. One hour after taking the drug all this bad feeling passed away, and a sense of quiet exhilaration prevaded, which formerly had been marked, but at last was shorter and less distinct. Breathing became difficult through any general exertion before taking the drug, but after taking it no such trouble was observed. The heart was disturbed functionally and and he complained of failure of memory and a general indisposition to work. He was always in doubt as to what course of action would be best for him to pursue, and was filled with fears and dread of mistakes, particularly when the effects of the arsenic wore away. Even after taking the usual dose the indisposition to work continued. He could not concentrate his mind long on any topic at any time. At times he would be very emotional, laughing and crying at unimportant incidents; then he would become oblivious to all emotion. Pride in dress and appearance seemed to furnish the only pleasure of his life. He would dress himself with great care and then pass his time in a stable or on a hotel stoop, gazing put into space in silence. As the effect of the drug wore off he would become boastful and excitable. At such times his judgment was bad, but when he had recently taken the drug his judgment was generally correct.

He was very methodical in his habits, taking the drug twice a day in secret. He bathed very often to take away a strong odor of the skin, which was evidently caused by the elimination of the arsenic. He was known to his companions as a very changeable, eccentric man, who, early in the morning and late in the afternoon, was "half crazy." These and other symptoms indicated a general failure of both body and mind, rapidly approaching dementia. At times he was alarmed, and wished to give up the use of the drug; at others he was indifferent. He told the doctor that if he could get this drug always he never would abstain, but he found it difficult to always keep a supply.

An impression prevails among many medical men of large practice that the secret use of arsenic is rapidly increasing. The peculiar tolerance of this drug in some cases suggests the regularity of its use as a stimulant or narcotic.—London Journal of Inebriety.

American Salmon in France.

The Parisians are rejoicing in the prospects of being able to indulge in the sport of salmon fishing in the Seine and the Marne at no distant day. The artificial fecundation of 800,000 salmon ova is going on at this moment in the aquarium of the Trocadero, and when the fry is sufficiently grown to support the change these rivers and their affluents are to be stocked with the young fish. The parent salmon, some five hundred in number, were imported from California in 1878. The American fish is, as is known, stationary in its habits, neither requiring nor practicing the annual visit to the sea necessary for the development of the salmon of the Old World. The fish have thriven remarkably well in the aquarium, and some of the progeny have already attained a weight from sixteen to twenty pounds, which is, however, only half the average weight of their full grown congeners in their native streams. It has been calculated that the stocking of the French rivers with America salmon, if it could be successfully accomplished, would represent an annual gain to the country of some $8,000,000.—Brooklyn Eagle.

—A New York man has devised a plan by which the Atlantic Ocean can be illuminated at night. He proposes to employ light ships, bearing electric candles of enormous power and connected with each other and with a submarine cable by suitably adjusted wires. The practicability of this is based on what are styled two undisputed possibilities—namely, that a light ship will lie at anchor in a heavy sea without protection, and that electrical communication may readily be maintained from such a ship with the two continents.—N. Y. Times.

BROWN PAPER BASKETS.

How to Make a Neat and Serviceable Fruit and Flower Basket.

We will commence this paper by trying to describe a brown paper basket for giving away with flowers or fruit, which, to those who do not already know of it, will be found very useful. It is well known that baskets do disappear in the most mysterious way, and when lent to friends or sent away with garden produce are scarcely ever returned. These paper baskets are made of the stoutest brown paper, folded double and kept in shape by the gilt headed, double stemmed pins, such as bills are kept together by or packets of patterns, which pass through the folded paper and are thus divided and flattened back on each side. Different sized baskets can be made, but we give the dimensions of a tolerably large and convenient one. Take a folded piece of stout brown paper, twenty-one inches long and sixteen inches broad, fold down the four edges inward to the depth of four inches; then double out the corners so that the points cross each other outside the ends of the basket; then fix these by running the pins through and dividing the points, turning them each way. The double stemmed corners are of course the only troublesome part, and practice will make perfect; but we may perhaps simplify matters by explaining that the two ends of the basket are first folded toward the center, then the sides folded on them, then a deep crease is made toward the point of the corner, which runs between the others and forms a broad arrow. The four sides now stand up. Put the left hand inside and with the right pinch the paper into the center crease running into the corner. Having done this, hold up the two sides with the left hand and flatten the pinched corner toward the center of the side, the same with each corner. The handle is then folded four times to make it extra strong, and fastened to the sides by two more nails. It should be fifteen inches long and two and a half inches wide when folded in four. This is strong enough to carry a bunch or two of grapes, as well as flowers. Ornamental baskets can be made of cardboard, painted brown, and then covered with pieces of irregular cork, previously strung together on thread. The handle is composed of loosely plaited strings of cork, either three or four, kept down by stitches of brown cotton. The edge of the basket is done in much the same way, the rest being put on in plain or twisted rows. This is a capital way of using up old corks, and amuses children for hours. The basket is afterward lined with satin, plush or cashmere. Flower pot cases and boxes can be treated in the same way.—N. Y. Herald.

ASTONISHED PERSIANS.

How a Traveler Won the Friendship of Suspicious Baluchistans.

Mr. Ernest Floyer, in his recently published travels through Persian Baluchistan—a comparatively unexplored region, bordering on the Gulf of Oman—relates how he surprised and astonished two natives. He was journeying through the country with a caravan of camels, and happened to be on foot alone, considerably in advance and out of sight of the rest. Suddenly he came upon two camel-drivers, to whom he presented an extraordinary apparition in preposterous and unsanctified clothing and with a thing on his head two feet in diameter.

Imagine the astonishment of those tall, sinewy fellows, with their aquiline noses and curly black beards! They had never seen and possibly never heard of a Feringi (foreigner), but to them I was evidently, first, a human being, and secondly, unarmed.

I had, however, a note-book and prismatic compass, of which last I had previously experienced the effect; and as they came near I took a round of bearings, and ended by fixing the leading man, and ostentatiously making a note of him. This rather disconcerted them, but, assuming great authority, I called them up. At being spoken to in Baluchi, they got fresh access of confidence, and, muttering to one another, grounded their guns close in front of me, and commenced a torrent of questions.

I waited quietly until there was a pause, and then said, in a slow and dignified manner: "Salaam alaikum."

It took at once. Their self-respect and politeness were both touched. Their intense curiosity had led them into a serious breach of good manners. The one false step was irretrievable, and with the loftiest politeness I could assume, I pursued my advantage and went through the entire salutation:

"Peace be with you."

"And on you be peace."

"You are welcome."

"May you be in safety."

"Are you well?"

"Is all your house well?"

"By God's kindness all is well."

"Give news."

"Give news."

"I have none; and am only interested in your good health."

We were just beginning it all over again, for it is impolite to be the first to stop, when the caravan hove in sight. As camel after camel came round the corner, each led by one of our jaunty fellows fully armed, the faces of my two heroes went through a series of dissolving views expressive of the greatest astonishment.—Youth's Companion.

A MUSICAL INTERLOPER.

The Work That a Church Mouse Did in a Harmonium.

When stationed at ——, in India, I was asked to preside at the little church harmonium, and for several years filled that pleasant post. On coming into church one day and beginning the voluntary, I discovered that more than half the notes would not come up after being struck. The result, of course, conveyed to the congregation was that I was permanently holding down several octaves of a chromatic scale! My husband was fortunately near me, and with his energetic help—picking up each note as I played it—we got through the services as best we could. Before the next Sunday it had been repaired a little; but there was always a rather painful uncertainty that a note might not suddenly shriek out unbidden.

One day I discovered, to my surprise, that the harmonium was inhabited by a mouse. It is possible that his establishment within and the effects of his appetite on the felts and lining may in some measure account for the surprising vagaries of the instrument. I had left my high seat and moved to a more comfortable one during the sermon, when I saw a little head with a pair of beady black eyes peeping out from under the pedals. After looking around and finding all was quiet, he sallied out, took a constitutional in the neighborhood, and before the end of the sermon had returned to his home. After this we used to see him nearly every Sunday. One day, just after we had got to church, in came one of our dogs! She had been tied up when we left our house, which was about a quarter of a mile off; but guessing, probably from the sound of the bell, where we had gone, she followed us directly she was let go. The harmonium was fortunately near the door, so that she saw me the moment she came in, and being a thoroughly well-trained dog, lay perfectly still beside my chair.

Of course, I was terribly anxious lest the poor mouse should appear, for Bessie, being a splendid ratter, would without a doubt have given chase, and caused a scene. However, the little inmate of the harmonium was either "out," or displayed marvelous discretion. Not so a squirrel. During the sermon one of these pretty creatures, so common in India, came in through a gap at the top of the "chick"—a semi-transparent curtain hung in the outer doorways of all Indian houses to keep out glare and flying insects, and proceeded to run up and down it within a few feet of us! Of course, Bessie had seen it at once; and there she sat with ears erect and straining eyes, shivering with excitement, watching its every movement. After we had endured several minutes of suspense, the unconscious object of our attention, with a whisk of the tail jumped out through a hole in the chick, and we breathed freely once more.

About this time the Bishop of Calcutta came up to consecrate a piece of ground to be added to the cemetry—a very old one, where rest the bones of heroes who fell hard by fighting under General Lake, at the commencement of this century. The harmonium had been taken over in a handcart, that I might accompany the hymns and chants. During the ceremony the mouse stole out as usual, unconscious of the solemnity of the occasion. How he managed to get in again so as to be carried back to the church, I do not know; but there he was the following Sunday. Some months later the new American organ arrived, and the old one, with its inmate no doubt, was sold, and we lost sight of it.—Chambers' Journal.

"SAM."

A North Carolina Colt Which Answers Questions Promptly and Intelligently.

A horse or dog which has been trained to a point where he seems able to do his own thinking, always deserves honorable mention and remembrance. A traveler in North Carolina gives his experience with a colt which seemed to know more than enough to "pass the time of day." He was a nondescript beast, about fourteen hands high, of a dun-brown color, and with a coat as shaggy as a spaniel's. He looked as if he had not been combed since he was born, and even through his rough coat I could count every rib in his body. But he had an eye which showed there was a spirit within him; large and lustrous, it was also gentle and coquettish. I stepped up to him, and, patting him on the neck, asked his name of the landlord.

"Sam," he answered; "and he knows it. Bid him good morning."

I did so, and instantly the colt bowed his head and lifted his right fore-foot, which I took in my hand and shook gently.

"Now talk to him, and see if he doesn't understand you."

"Sam," I asked, "do you want to go with me?"

Sam bowed his head in assent.

"If I take you along will you behave like a gentleman?"

Another bow was the prompt reply.

"Now ask him something that requires 'no' for an answer."

"Are you afraid to swim the river?"

He shook his head instantly, but thinking he might not have understood me, and seeing the advantage of having the wild steed fully pledged to good behavior, I changed the form of the previous question: "Will you run away with me and break my neck?"

A shake of the head, twice repeated, was the prompt reply. Then I put my arm about his neck, and he put his face against mine and stroked my beard in a fondling manner.

"You and I are going to be good friends, Sam," I said, patting his head, affectionately. Instantly he nodded very decidedly, by way of affirmation.

I concluded that he had been trained to distinguish between questions meant to be answered by "yes" or "no" from the inflections of the voice. Even with that possibility his intelligence seemed something marvelous.—Youth's Companion.

A FEMININE DEFENDER OF TOBACCO.—An advocate of the use of tobacco in support of his stand unearths an article written by Margaret, Duchess of Newcastle, some two hundred years ago. In defense of the seductive weed that lady wrote: "It composes the mind, it busies the thoughts, it attracts all outward objects to the mind's view, it settles and retents the senses, it cheers the understanding, strengthens the judgment, spies out errors, it exasperates follies, it heats ambition, it comforts sorrow, it abates passion, it excites to noble actions, it digests conceptions, it feeds fancies, it quickens wit, and it makes reason pleader and truth judge in all disputes or controversies between right and wrong."

HOW TO CURE SORE THROAT.—"One who has tried it" communicates the following seasonable item about curing sore throats to the New York Herald: "Let each one of your half million readers buy at any drug store one ounce of camphorated oil, and five cents worth of chlorate of potash. Whenever any soreness appears in the throat put the potash in half a tumbler of water, and with it gargle the throat thoroughly; then rub the neck thoroughly with the camphorate oil at night before going to bed, and also pin around the throat a small strip of woolen flannel. This is a simple, cheap and sure remedy."

An ear for music is generally accompanied with an eye for the beautiful, a tongue for the true, and a mouth for all the good things of this world.

An Editor's Reflections.

The editor of the Lockport Phœnix is responsible for the following. Who has not thought in about the same strain? And in our sober moments too:

Every once in a while something or other occurs which brings up before us feelings of other days; we are solemn—we indulge in retrospection and dream of "what might have been." And, while in the mood, other serious thoughts succeed, one to another, and we are prone to reflect on such sayings of the proverb-makers as "An hour once lost is gone forever," "What is past can never be recalled," etc., and we speculate as to the future even so much as to wish to raise the impenetrable veil that divides our life here from the shadowy realms beyond and know the mysteries that lie hidden there.

When we come to think seriously on the subject, what a confoundedly strange thing life is! What peculiar mysteries we ourselves are that we cannot even "know ourselves." And yet one thing is pretty certain, viz, that each and every one of us can say with a very comfortable degree of assurance "I am," although a goodly number of our great and shining lights have expressed themselves doubtful of even that.

Suppose sometime, you or ourself, friend reader, should wake up and find we were somewhere else and learn that this earthly existence had been all "in our mind," as slang parlance hath expressed it. It would be strange would it not? And yet a dream seems even as real as this sometimes. But enough of conjecture such as this. We will take it for granted that all things ARE. There is room enough for guesswork left after that.

Not very long ago, you and the rest of us were babies, nothing but squalling, ugly looking little chunks of incipient humanity. We have ceased to be such, and can never be babies any more. Let us be thankful.

From babies in long clothes, as we grew older, we graduated, some into petticoats and some into breeches. We became school children. That was an epoch in our existence which we probably will never forget. What good times we used to have. How we played together; how we quarreled; how the breeches and petticoats fell in love with each other and then fell out again. We can recollect how we felt the first time we fell a victim to the tender passion. For a long time we worshipped at a distance, but when we found that our feelings were reciprocated we seemed to walk on air; and when we found an opportunity to perform the first osculation of our life—Gosh—but words are inadequate to express what feelings the operation gave rise to. We've got a lock of her hair yet, but she is married now, and to some other fellow. With some slight modifications this has probably been the experience of the majority. But those halcyon days are a thing of the past. As someone once remarked—How tempus does fugit, and right here perhaps it would be appropriate to quote Shakespeare:

"This world, you know
Is a fleeting show,
And thus it is that round we go—
Sometimes above, sometimes below
Like horses in a circus."

Perhaps the immortal William never wrote those words; in fact there is some doubt expressed as to whether W. S. was himself or somebody else. But the sentiment is good, and his "shade" need not get "upon its ear" because we have imputed it to him.

But here we are—men and women—and what the past has been we may as well relegate to some comfortable little nook in our memory and—drop it. What the future is to be we ourselves must decide, for are we not "the architects of our own fortune?" The best way to do it is perhaps, to "Trust no future howe'er pleasant,

Let the dead past bury its dead;
But act—act in the living present,
Heart within and God o'erhead."

Let us then be up and doing
With a heart for any fate.
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

A Rare Talent.

The faculty of drawing out of persons with whom one is conversing the best there is in them—brighter things even than they suppose themselves capable of—is the rare gift with which Nature has endowed some women. George Eliot was a most charming person in conversation, though she was a women of few words, because of her intuitive insight into the thoughts of others. A few words would put her in possession, not of what they said, but of what they would fain have said, and she would so improve upon it that ordinary people went away charmed with her who had made them for once at least feel themselves to be wise. Long afterward, perhaps, she would call to their remembrance the wise or witty things which they could hardly believe themselves to have said, and which they assuredly never would have said but for her quickening influence.

A Bird that Turns Somersaults.

There's a pretty little bird that lives in China, and is called the Fork-Tailed Parus. He is about as big as a robin, and has a red beak, yellow legs, black tail, and red-and-yellow wings. Nearly all the colors are in his dress, you see, and he is a gay fellow. This bird has a trick known by no other birds that ever I heard of. He turns somersaults! Not only does he do this in free life on the trees, but also after he is caught and put into a cage. He throws his head far back, and over he goes, touching the bars of his cage, and alighting upon his feet on the floor or on a perch. He will do it over and over a number of times without stopping, as though he thought it great fun. All his family have the same trick, and they are called Tumblers. The people of China are fond of keeping them in cages and seeing them tumble.

A New York man recently dreamed that he was a Texas desperado in a town threatened by Indians, and when he woke up he found that he had crawled under the bed.

"Ish this 'er postoffice?" inquired Cauliflower, slightly disfigured after nineteen rounds of sour mash. "No, this is a butcher shop," replied the sarcastic mailing clerk, licking a faded one cent stamp. "Sho! Ish that sho! Well, give me a tender line for my muzzer."

EAU MIGHT

There was a young girl from Bordeaux
With corns on her little pink teaux,
They gave her such pain
The tears ran like rain
Down the bridge of her delicate neaux.

Her lover—a youth from Cologne—
Fled wildly and left her alogne,
When he found that her feet
With corns were replete,
With never a word he had flogne.

They sent for a doctor from Lynn,
As shining and neat as a pynn,
He looked at her teaux,
The source of her weaux,
And indulged in a gratified grynn.

He prescribed for this maid from Bordeaux
And cured all her little pink teaux;
And now, it is said,
They, too, will be waid,
And from sorrow and grief find repeaux.

The sweet-scented youth from Cologne,
Who left her severely alogne,
When he first heard the news
His mind he did lews,
And flitted from life with a grogne.

The American Eagle.

There are several varieties of eagles in the United States, but not all that are commonly called by different names are entitled to the separate distinction. The largest is Audubon's "Bird of Washington," or Washington Eagle, a huge bird that has apparently been seen by few persons but the great naturalist himself, and which inhabits the region of the Great Lakes and the Upper Mississippi. Its spread of wings is over ten feet. It rarely comes to New England; but Dr. Wood, the Connecticut ornithologist, in his "Birds of Connecticut," describes one that was caught in a steel trap, in the East Windsor meadows, just after a Connecticut river freshet had left thousands of dead fish on land. On these he was feasting, in company with two "Bald Eagles," whom he greatly surpassed in size. He was killed, as was supposed, after being caught, by a blow on the head with a club; but he recovered on being thrown upon the grass, and flew away. He was nearly four feet long, and his spread of wings was ten feet. The "national bird" of our country is the so-called (improperly so-called) Bald Eagle—a bird whose head is as well supplied, proportionately, with feathers as any part of his body; but on the head these are white, while the rest of the bird, except the neck and tail, is quite dark. The female (who is always the largest, in birds of prey), often measures three feet four inches in length, with a stretch of wings between seven and eight feet. It is incorrectly described in our cyclopædias as the "largest of the fishing or sea eagles." To say nothing of Audubon's great bird, there is in Greenland (and in some parts of Europe) a sea eagle a little larger than the bald species. The bald eagle (not uncommon here) builds on cliffs and great trees a nest of coarse sticks, which is used by the same pair, if undisturbed, for very many years (they will live to the age of 120 or 140 years;) and in this latitude they lay their eggs after the middle of January, and hatch out about the middle of February. The diversity of color between the young and the adults occasions mistakes in naming them, and leads to the idea that they are "sea eagles," "black eagles," "gray eagles," etc. Doctor Franklin objected to the adoption of the eagle as our national bird, because of its predatory habits, and suggested the turkey instead. The golden eagle (which may be the kind that was shot near Riverton, and if so, it is a rare and valuable bird for ornithologists) is seldom seen in Connecticut. It is a magnificent bird, belonging in Europe as well as the United States; is about as large as the bald eagle, and derives its name from the golden-red feathers on its head and neck—the rest of its plumage is a rich, dark brown. It lives about the Great Lakes, the Upper Mississipi, and to a less extent among the White and Green Mountains of New Hampshire and Vermont. There are about seventy species of eagles; and even of those in America we cannot give all the names and varieties. A dark eagle, not quite so large as the bald, is common in Connecticut. One ferocious kind, found in Mexico and on the Isthmus, is the harpy eagle. The osprey is improperly classed among the true eagles.

Some physicians assert that a hearty meal at midday is injurious to the health. A five or six o'clock dinner, eaten slowly with the members of his own family, is far healthier. A heavy midday meal unfits professional men for carrying on any business in the afternoon, as it makes them heavy and sleepy, for nature requires some kind of repose to aid digestion. Our popular system of eating is wrong. The majority of persons thrust three heavy meals into about ten hours, and leave the body without a fresh supply of food for the remaining fourteen hours of the day and night. Two good meals, morning and evening, would be the proper plan, with perhaps a light lunch or cracker at about one o'clock in the day. This would allow both of the heavy meals an opportunity to digest before the next was taken. As to a heavy midday meal for men who have to tear around as if the next moment were to be their last, it is perfectly ridiculous, as the food, instead of digesting and forming blood, muscle and brain, acts as a block to those forces of nature—choking up a sewer, as it were. It is best to eat lightly in the middle of the day.

POOR GIRLS.—The poorest girls in the world are those who have never been taught to work. There are thousands of them. Rich parents have petted them, they have been taught to despise labor, and depend upon others for a living, and are perfectly helpless. If misfortune comes upon their friends, as it often does, their case is hopeless. The most forlorn and miserable women upon earth belong to this class. It belongs to parents to protect their daughters from this deplorable condition. They do them a great wrong if they neglect it. Every daughter should be taught to earn her own living. The rich as well as the poor require this training. The wheel of fortune rolls swiftly around; the rich are very likely to become poor, and the poor rich. Skill to labor is no disadvantage to the rich, and as indispensable to the poor. Well-to-do parents must educate their daughters to work; no reform is more imperative than this.

The Perfumery Trade.

Some kinds of perfumery are worth their weight in gold. The export of fine perfumery is principally from Grasse, Nice, Cannes and Bremen. The business is divided into two parts. The manufacturer extracts from the flowers their essential oils. The perfumer buys these oils, pomades and extracts, and compounds them in several ways.

Only about a dozen of all the fragrant flowers in the world are used in the manufacture of perfumery, viz.: the violet, rose, orange flower, jasmine, tuberose, cassie, lavender, thyme, rosemary, geraniums, jonquil and fennel. The rose and the orange are the most valuable. Of the numerous varieties of the rose, only one is used, the Province rose, single, pale pink, the most sweet smelling of roses; not hardy.

Picking for perfumery occurs in almost every month of the year. It is a paradoxical fact in the business that the bitter orange yields the best blossoms for perfumery. One ton of blossoms yields two pounds eight ounces of oil neroli. The fruit of the bitter orange yields a very fine essential oil, bigarade. It is used in many scents. The orange tree, cultivated for its oil, lasts with care over 200 years.

One ton of the distilled leaves of the scented verbena geranium yields from 24 to 30 ounces of the essential oil. The flowers of the jasmine are picked just after sunset in July, and in the morning, as soon as the dew is off, in August. The jasmine is a peculiarly delicate flower. Its essential oil is so volatile that it cannot be extracted by distillation, the heated water decomposing it is so that only a faint tinge of the perfume is left in the water that passes through the refrigerant.

Like the jasmine, the oil of the tuberose cannot be extracted by distillation. The perfume of the cassie is much used in compounds. The process of manufacturing perfumes is in itself very interesting, especially to the ladies.

A ton of roses yields only two ounces of the attar. If kept at a temperature below 60°, attar crystalizes; if kept open to the air and light, it is easily volatized. Perfumed oils are made by putting fresh quantities of flowers into the finest of virgin olive oil from 20 to 30 different times. The essential oil of flowers has a strong affinity to lard or grease. The latter, rendered as white as snow, is perfectly saturated with the flowers. The process is repeated many times. In this way we have pomade of rose, orange, cassie and violet. The affinity of the perfume of flowers for alcohol is, however, stronger than than for grease. Pomades, immersed in alcohol, are rendered into extracts, the grease leaving the perfume. It is safe to say that, among the numerous articles of toilet, the manufacture of perfumed pomades, perfumed oils and high-priced perfumery generally is as a sealed book to many persons.

Good Advice for Everybody.

1. Never, under any circumstances assume a responsibility that you can avoid consistently with your duty to yourself and others.

2. Base all your actions upon a principle of right; preserve your integrity of character, and in doing this never reckon on the cost.

3. Remember that self-interest is much more likely to warp your judgment than all other circumstances combined; therefore look well to your duty when your interest is concerned.

4. Never make money at the expense of your reputation.

5. Be neither lavish or niggardly. Of the two, avoid the latter. A mean man is universally despised, but public favor is a stepping stone to preferment, therefore generous feelings should be cultivated.

6. Say but little; think much and do more.

7. Let your expenses be such as to leave a balance in your pocket. Ready money is a friend in need.

8. Avoid borrowing and lending.

9. Wine drinking and cigar smoking are bad habits; they impair the health and pocket, and lead to a waste of time.

10. Never relate your misfortunes, and never grieve over what you cannot prevent.

11. Cultivate promptness in deciding upon matters that come before you; there are few objects more disagreeable than an undecided, vacillating man. Consider thoughtfully, but decide promptly.

12. Never break a business engagement of any kind, if it be possible to meet it. Let nothing cause you to become careless of business etiquette, integrity and promptitude.

13. Let truth and an unwavering faith in God underlie all your motives and actions.

The Model Farm.

The Keota (Iowa) Eagle has at last found a western man who is satisfied with a fifty acre farm. His name is Artemus Fisher, and he lives one mile and a half south of Keota. The Eagle tells the story of his management and of his success as follows:

He keeps one team of horses, three first-class cows, and a nice little drove of the best hogs. He milks his cows for the creamery, and they made him nearly $200 last year; will perhaps do better this year. He will sell $500 worth of hogs this year, and have thirty stockers to keep over. He has $200 worth of flax-seed to sell; has an abundance of hay and grain to keep his stock in first-class condition during the winter. He keeps everything in apple-pie order about his farm; his cows revel in clover up to their eyes; he attends to feeding, watering and milking as regularly as the clock strikes, hence he gets the best results with the least possible feed. He keeps his stock under cover, and never allows any animal to shiver in the fence corners. He has a barn that is a model of convenience and economy. It is snow-proof, and as warm as the old kitchen. He has a first-class selection of fruit—not a large orchard, but a choice selection of the varieties that thrive and bear the best in this locality. Everything about the farm bears marks of intelligence, thrift and economy. Besides making a living for himself and the "old lady," he will sell at least $800 worth of stuff off his fifty acres this year, and not be exceeding former years either. There is no rush or hurry about this model farm. Everything goes off quietly and regularly. The expenses are very small and the gains sure.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

Take the open air, the more you take the better;
Follow nature's laws to the very letter;
Let the physic go to the bay of Biscay;
Let alone the gin, the brandy and the whisky.

Freely exercise, keep your spirits cheerful;
Let no dreams of sickness make you ever fearful.
Eat the simplest food, drink the pure cold water:
Then you will be well, or at least you ought to.

Shoulder of Veal Baked.

Buy a shoulder of veal, which, according to the locality of your butcher, will cost you from eight to fourteen cents a pound. And let us say just here, that on account of the quantities of immature veal thrown on the market, you had better be sure of your butcher and pay fourteen cents than to buy a suspicious article for eight. Untrimmed it will weigh seven or eight pounds. Have every bit of bone taken out and put them aside for stock. Make a pint bowl full of dressing, flavoring according to taste, but not strongly with any one condiment. Insert this in the pocket made by the butcher. Dot it all over with pieces of butter as large as a hickory nut. About two ounces will be sufficient, and season with pepper and salt. Bits of very nice dripping may be placed in the four corners of the pan. Dredge thoroughly with flour, and place in a good oven. Baste occasionally with the gravy made by the butter, but add no water until the meat is well browned. This will be from half to three quarters of an hour, when you may add a large cupful of boiling water. Baste every fifteen minutes until done. It will require about two hours. Carve down straight through the middle and cut to both ends; serve with spinach. This is a most economical and delicious dish. What is left may be sliced and heated in the sauce, or minced and used for a salad.

The breakfast taken in winter will determine our efficiency for work in the day, and will so influence our whole being for that period of time that no after-meal can correct. The breakfast in winter must contain more nitrogenous food than in summer; it is absolutely needed. You must store heat to furnish material for absorption and for maintaining vitality; add to this nitrogenous food something that will disengage heat from the blood and keep up temperature and you may defy the coldest day. Your face may feel it, your hands may feel it, but your body will be impervious to it and go on disengaging that inward heat which can alone stand against the lowest temperature without. If this first meal has been properly attended to we may presume that vital action can be maintained in full force for five hours at least before it needs replenishing.

A bowl of good pea soup is as satisfying as a hearty dinner on a cold day. To make a gallon of it, wash a pint of peas and soak them over night; then boil in five pints of water, gently simmering three hours or so, until thoroughly soft. With a potato-masher rub the soup through a colander or wire sieve. A pound of beef or ham bone may be boiled with the peas. The soup may be seasoned in various ways—with onions, cloves, pepper, etc.

HOW TO KEEP MILK.

Under No Consideration Should It Be Exposed to Air.

Milk was not intended by nature to be exposed to air, but to be conducted as directly and speedily as possible from the milk-ducts of the parent to the stomach of the offspring. As a liquid containing a good deal of the element nitrogen, it is liable to early decay, or, in other words, to changes in its chemical and mechanical condition. The temperature it has when milked from the cow is favorable to its decomposition. Above or below blood-heat its decay is more or less retarded; and, by passing a volume of oxygen through it, it is made to keep the longer. Left alone, it is a suicidal sort of thing, constantly inviting its own destruction, so to speak. It drinks in greedily foul odors from the atmosphere, and provides just the food that bacteria delight in. It is determined not to remain in its original form, for it begins to throw off its cream at once on coming to rest. To chemists it is known as a "transition compound," seeking fresh conditions and combinations. It is congenial food to the fermentive germs that float in the air, and contains within itself a principle that is an aid to digestion, which is only another word for decomposition.

Such being the case, milk requires intelligent treatment if we want it to remain as it is when we get it. Assuming that it is sweet and fresh when we first take it in hand, the first thing to do is to cool it; and for this reason, by lowering the temperature, the ferments to which it is exposed operate much slower or do not operate at all. These ferments get hold of it best at the heat it is at when it comes from the cow. They need warmth, as most things do, for their fruition; and as we can not get rid of them, because they float about in embryo in any place where air is, the next best thing is to deprive them of warmth.

If we boil milk and immediately enclose it in an air-tight vessel it will remain sweet for years; but it will sour when it is re-exposed to the air at sixty degrees F. and upward. If we freeze it, and keep it frozen, it will remain sweet as long as we like; but when it comes to thaw the effect of the freezing is to hasten its decomposition. This, indeed, holds good with butter and flesh and vegetables; with any perishable article, in fact. It is their mechanical combination which the freezing has interfered with, and this is an aid to chemical decay.

The effect of a strong ray of light falling on milk is to develop the fermentive organisms that lead to the decomposition of the liquid. They are of a vegetable character, and need light as well as warmth to enable them to thoroughly do their work. It is, therefore, expedient to keep milk in the shade, not necessarily in a dark room, but away from the light of a window. Butter and eggs, too, are injured, though less quickly, by a strong light; and they should not be exposed to its influence.

It is generally considered advisable that milk-rooms should be well ventilated; but the air must be as pure as we can have it; otherwise they are better without the ventilation. Whatever the air is, so will be the milk, after a time. If it is tainted with any sort of an odor, the odor of flesh, of vegetables, of mint-sance, of paraffine, of smoke, anything, in fact, the milk will taste of it. Intelligent people who make butter are aware of this, and keep their milk in clean vessels, in a pure atmosphere, in a cool room, while the cream is rising. This is absolutely necessary in order to keep a pure-flavored butter that will keep as long as it ought. A stuffy atmosphere in a room is abominable; ventilation with impure air is equally so; and in either of these cases, if they are unavoidable, it is better to keep the milk corked up in a bottle, previously cooling it well, and stirring it as it cools.

It is of the first importance that milk should be put into vessels that are scrupulously clean, and they need cleaning after milk as much as after almost anything else. By putting new milk into a vessel that has been more or less soured with old milk, the new is at once introduced, so to speak, to the old leaven, that will turn it all sour very soon. Before such a vessel is employed to contain a fresh supply of milk, it should be washed in boiling water, to kill all the germs of sourness, both the lactic acid and the bacteria that it may contain, and then in cold water, to cool it. It is hardly necessary to say that the water itself must be clean; this is obvious on the face of it.

And again: The room must be cool, say not more than 60 degrees, if possible, or it is not of much use to cool the milk, which will always rise or fall to the temperature of the air that surrounds it. At the same time, it is true that cooling the milk to 55 degrees or so will preserve it the longer, even in a room that is 60 degrees or upwards. Cooled milk in clean vessels, and in a room whose air is fresh and sweet, will keep well for a day or two. The cream, however, which is in mechanical rather than in chemical combination with the milk, will rise to the surface unless the milk is frequently stirred.—Science News.

APOPLEXY.

Symptoms and Treatment of this Terrible Affliction.

Apoplexy signifies stroke or shock. The cause, induced by mental excitement, muscular exertion or intemperence, is bleeding inside the skull, amounting to drops or pounds, and occurring in one side of the brain. The hemorrhage is due to brittleness or softening of small arteries. They break, and hence the sudden attack. Overfullness of the superficial brain vessel, or sudden plugging of a small artery, are causes. The pressure created stops the circulation of the whole brain.

Attacks rarely give warning, though ringing in the ears and flushing may precede. The full onset may take a few seconds or a half hour. Symptoms: Confusion, flushing, lividity, or perhaps pallor of the face; paralysis of half the face and half the body on the opposite side; snoring, delirium, vomiting, unconsciousness, more or less profound. Movements, if any, are confined to one side, Will may be exerted though intellect be gone. The lips puff; the pulse is slow, hard, full; the pupils are contracted or dilated, and usually unlike. These symptoms last minutes, hours or days. If stupor continue ten hours without improvement, and especially if increased, the attack is probably fatal. It may be so in a few minutes, hours or several days.

Under twenty years apoplexy is rare, and liability diminishes after seventy. Some suppose that a short neck and full habit predispose to it. Statistics prove the contrary. An attack is generally repeated, the third commonly being fatal. Recovery requires months. Do not mistake apoplexy for intoxication. Cases of supposed drunkenness are often locked up and afterward found dead. Distinguish intoxication by the odor of the breath, general habits, dilated, symmetrical pupils, soft, feeble pulse, absence of snoring. Signs of drunkenness usually can be forced from the inebriate. In apoplexy the temperature is normal or raised. In drunkenness it is lowered. In opium poisoning the patient can generally be roused for a moment. The pupils are very small and symmetrical. Kidney disease, which causes unconsciousness, is usually known already. In fainting there is a cold, white face and no pulse.

In case of apoplexy, send for the doctor. Keep the head cool and raised. Apply mustard plasters to the legs, back and stomach, alternately. Give injections of oil and warm water and strong purgatives, after the attack. Shorten or shave off the hair. A very strong man, under fifty, might be bled. —Congregationalist.

NOT WHAT THEY SEEM.

Pretty Porcelain Placques That Are Not Porcelain at All.

"Look at that porcelain panel—how beautiful," exclaimed an expensively attired young man in a picture store. "They make them in Dresden. I have sat and watched them by the hour. How far superior European work is to our own. Those roses are a very marvel." He was looking enthusiastically at a placque on a little easel. The placque shone like glass, which it seems to be, and a cluster of red flowers on a black background had a pretty effect. "That would be cheap at ten dollars," whispered the connoisseur to the man with him, and together they went into raptures over it.

"Were you looking at the placque?" put in a polite salesman. "Would you like to buy it?"

"How much?" inquired the connoisseur timidly.

"Twenty-five cents," the salesman responded, "or you can have a dozen for two dollars and seventy-five cents. Too dear? Well, we have some damaged ones you can have cheaper."

"Damaged at sea—on the way from Dresden," exclaimed the connoisseur, hoping to save himself in the estimation of his comrade.

"No, sir," answered the salesman decidedly; "they were injured on the journey from Seventh and Lombard streets, where they are made. Porcelain? No. Glass? No, not that, either. Paper? Yes, that's what they're made of. Some are cut out of a cheap wood and shined up. They don't look bad, do they? Feel 'em."

But the connoisseur and his dupe had turned away sadly and sorrowfully, having decided that the works of art were not pretty at all, but quite too common for anything.—Philadelphia Press.

Family Discipline.

Colonel Fizzletop was under the painful necessity of administering a severe castigation to his son Johnny. After he had completed his labors, he said sternly to the suffering victim:

"Now tell me why I punished you."

"That's it," sobbed Johnny, "you nearly pounded the life out of me, and now you don't even know why you did it."—Texas Siftings.

—"I dreamt a strange, strange dream of bliss; I thought that some one came and held my soul in one long kiss and softly spoke my name." The above harrowing tale is written by a latter-day poet, and is false. Unless his name is Pstewlpft she never could have uttered it while holding his soul "in one long kiss." We are reliably informed that no names are mentioned during paroxysms of the kind the poet describes. Trot out another poet.—Minneapolis Tribune.

THE CHRISTMAS PARTY.

The Christmas Party given last Friday evening at the opera house, was the most brilliant and successful affair of that kind seen in Tecumseh for years, and the young men who had charge of it may well feel proud of their success. Tecumseh has lately had the reputation of being a very "slow" town in the matter of dances, but the party of last Thursday night clearly showed that when rightly managed a dance can be made as enjoyable in this town as in any of our neighbors.

At about half past seven the opera house was opened for those who wished to hear the concert given by Wolff's Orchestra of Toledo, before the dancing commenced, and at 8 o'clock the gallery was crowded with spectators listening to some of the finest orchestra music ever heard in Tecumseh. The dancers made their appearance at nine o'clock, headed by W. T. Eccles and wife, who led them through a very pretty grand march, ending up in a quadrille, and the "light fantastic" was tripped until the small hours of morning. Between 30 and 40 couples were present, including persons from Adrian, Clinton, Manchester, Toledo and Hillsdale,, and after paying all the bills, the boys found that they had their fun without its costing anything and enough left to set up the cigars.

CHRISTMAS FESTIVITIES.

Christmas Day—that glorious old anniversary, which is more generally observed throughout christendom than any other holiday—was appropriately observed in Tecumseh. On Christmas Eve the different churches held services which were participated in by both old and young. Large audiences assembled at each church and the congregations entered into the spirit of the occasion with zest.

At the Baptist church brief religious exercises were held and a supper was given to the scholars of the Sunday School. The attendance was good and the occasion was a very enjoyable one. A box of useful articles was packed and sent to a missionary family at Ishpeming.

At the M. E. church the exercises were more elaborate than usual. Two beautiful christmas trees were placed on the platform, which were loaded down with gifts for the children, and Santa Claus appeared in person to assist in distributing the presents. After a brief service the trees were unloaded and the little folks made happy. The church was crowded to repletion, and it was after ten o'clock before the audience dispersed.

At the Universalist church Mrs. Santa Claus appeared and held a reception. Gifts were distributed among the Sunday School scholars and supper was served to old and young.—The evening was most pleasantly spent and the company departed for their homes at a late hour.

At the Presbyterian church an entertainment was given by the Sunday School and the following program was presented;

Singing by choir and school—"Sing for Joy on Christmas Morn."
Prayer—Rev. W. H. Babbitt.
Scripture Rec.—"Concerning the birth of Christ," by four classes, the choir singing between the parts, "Beautiful Morning Star."
Rec.—Five little girls, "Have you heard about Jesus."
Primary class song—"Let the children praise him."
Select reading—Miss Edna McClue, "How Rick made himself a Christmas."
Singing by choir and school,—"Joy to the world."
Christmas carol—Eight children.
Rec.—Julia Wood, "A peep into Santa Claus's home."

At this point Santa Claus and wife arrived and invited the school to the dining room, where they were treated to ice cream and cake. Some time was spent in a social way in the church parlors.

At St. Peter's Episcopal church services were held on Christmas day in the forenoon. The beautiful christmas service was rehearsed from the ritual and remarks appropriate to the occasion were made by the rector.

The stores in the village were mostly closed during the day and people gave themselves up to social enjoyment and good dinners. Christmas was observed by everybody this year, and it is proper that it should be so.

The taxes are somewhat higher than usual in this township this year. The school tax is increased on account of the new building soon to be erected in the west portion of the village.—county taxes are heavy owing to the Court House tax, and the state taxes are considerably higher than last year. And in all these directions Supervisor Bresie had no control whatever over the tax levy. So far as he could influence the amount of taxes to be collected, they have not been increased but slightly reduced from last year.

The Clinton Local avers that Geo. Calhoun had an oak tree on his farm which he worked up a few days ago. It made sixteen cords of block wood, two and one-half cords of three foot wood, and two meat cutters' blocks. The Local does not mention it, but we understand from other sources that Mr. Calhoun also cut a dozen saw logs off the lower end of the tree and secured beside twenty-five cords of tanning bark. The lumber he thinks will work up well into bridge timber.—Adrian Record.

The Detroit Journal hinted that Laveru Wheeler, of Tecumseh, (well-known in Hudson) had lost his manhood by joining the Alba Heywood dramatic company. Vern rises up to remark "no such thing." Not a member of that company uses tobacco or liquor, and he considers himself surrounded by pretty good society. That Journal man wants to look a "leetle oud," or our artistic friend will retaliate by the instantaneous process—Hudson Gazette.

WHAT SHALL BE DONE ABOUT IT?

MR. EDITOR:—The tragedy of Nov. 28th, in which two of Tecumseh's citizens almost miraculously escaped death from the hand of an assassin ought to produce a profound impression. It is less likely to do so however, because crimes of a similar character are so frequent everywhere. One of the causes of the tragedy alluded to, was briefly mentioned in the Herald, viz. Whiskey. With that brief mention the subject has been dropped. The excitement has died down, now that the wounded men are about again, and nothing is said in condemnation of the traffic that we all know so well fosters every sort of crime, and is in itself a crime against the peace and welfare of society. Is it because the citizens of Tecumseh are afraid to speak their minds that no remonstrance of any kind has found its way in the columns of our papers? Are there too many of our respectable citizens implicated and interested in the support of saloons?

It has been intimated that there would have been short shift for the one guilty of shooting the Andersons, if he had been caught soon. Suppose the shots fired had proved immediately fatal, what could have been done to the murderer, according to the laws of Michigan, if he had been convicted of the double killing? He might have been sentenced to imprisonment for life, with a pretty well founded expectation that some kind hearted Governor would after a while set him free.

The ill-judged clemency of the laws seems to offer some apology for the lawless infliction of a higher penalty than the law allows. There is an instinctive feeling in the human heart that the one who takes wilfully the life of another, deserves himself to die. And this feeling finds support in that book which gives us our best and highest laws. Gen. 9:6. The feeling which demands the death of the murderer is not vindictiveness. It is simple justice. The sparing of the life of one cold-blooded murderer may lead to the taking away by violence of a score of valuable lives. Is not the sparing of such a life mistaken clemency therefore? Is it not a wrong done to the law abiding who have a right to claim full protection from the laws? One object of punishment may be the reform of the criminal himself. But another should be the protection of the innocent, and another still the promotion of the ends of justice and of right. Experience has shown that where penalties are light in comparison with the gravity of the offence committed crimes flourish; and that where a just penalty is promptly and surely inflicted, there the fewest offences against the law are found. Condoning crimes of any kind is the way to multiply them. Meeting out punishment with a firm impartial hand is one of the best ways of bringing them to an end. The criminal history of our state since the abolishing of the laws of capital punishment for murder does not argue well for the wisdom of its abolishment. Deaths by violence are of greater and greater frequency. Human life is held less sacred than it was. Mere imprisonment has not the repressing influence that the certainty of losing the life would have. A wholesome effect would follow the re-enactment of the death penalty. But the publication of a penalty is not enough unless there is an assurance that it will be properly inflicted. There is great need that laws in defense of life and property, laws in support of morality, laws in regulation of the liquor traffic and laws of every kind should receive a just enforcement. This is a debt that is owed to the criminal classes as well as to the law abiding.

MIGRATORY BIRDS.

Time of Their Departure from the Northwestern States.

There is nothing stranger in the experience of those who study nature than the peculiar characteristics which are associated with the coming and going of certain classes of birds. The common observer will notice flocks of blackbirds or wild pigeons, but is unable to tell anything connected with the laws that control the movements of all species of birds that may or may not remain in a certain locality. Some of us know that most all classes of birds are strictly daytime workers. They seek places of safety at early twilight. The wrens, martins, blue birds, nut hatches, woodpeckers and some other scansorials all retreat into their respective places of abode, whilst the kingbirds, jays, robins, finches, larks, kinfishers and scores of smaller songsters select bunches of grass or trees of thick foliage wherein to pass the night. You remember last April how glad you were when you heard the first mocking bird of the season? Of course you do, but did you ever think of just how that same excellent bird of song pursued its journey from a far distant clime to come and help make cheerful the people of northern lands? Every spring I observe that the very first mocking birds of the year are heard at early morning. This is due to the fact that the birds came during the previous night. If you are up early enough and have the interest to do so, you may see the arriving of some classes of migratory birds which return to this latitude during the months of April and May. In this region we have three specimens of birds that are classed as migratory, those that may or may not change their place of living, and that are strictly confined to the locality. The larks are the first to come and the last ones to go south. They usually appear about the middle of March and remain until November. According to careful observations, the following is a correct account of when the birds took their departure:

Wood Peewee	October 10
Kingfisher	October 5
Variegated scansorial	August 16
Bluebirds	October 30
Red headed scansorial	September 20
Chimney swallow	October 11
Swallows	September 25
Rain crow	September 25
Goldfinch	August 10
Mocking bird	August 6
Barn swallow	August 17
Bob o'link	August 10
Humming bird	August 31
Wrens	October 7
Vultures	October 5
Martins	August 10
Kingbird	September 3
Corn crake	September 10
Chewink	October 8
Whippoorwill	October 18
Cat bird	September 4
Peewee	October 10

The mocking birds as a class had vanished by the first week in August, yet I saw two of them as late as September 23. They had probably come from the far north, or they might have been delayed by caring for a second or third brood of little birds.—Burlington (Ia.) Post.

A BOON INDEED.

How Sufferers from Noise Can Find Sweet Relief.

There are a multitude of sufferers from the noises of their neighborhood who endure what amounts to agony, exciting their nerves to abnormal action and their pulse to fever heat, when it would do them no injury to use a simple means of obviating the whole thing. The clangor of machinery, the ring of bells, the cries and laughter, the yells and roars, of a hundred or less children at recess or at ball-playing, the passing of heavy drays—all or any of these and other things are sometimes fatal to the health of the invalid and to the work of the thinker. Often it is utterly impossible to move into a region where no heavy drays pass, no bell-ringing is allowed; and then there is hardly a region to be found not invaded by the whistle of the steam-engine, or where boys do not shout at their games; and even where there are no cocks to crow, or dogs to bark, or birds to sing at unseemly hours before dawn, there is always some other sound to torture the sensitive ear. If, now the sufferer will take a bit of spermaceti ointment of about the size of a pea, tie it up in a small square of fine linen, and place it deep in the ear, working it round till it takes the shape of the orifice, leaving the end to hang out, not a murmur of sound can be heard; the atmosphere is sweet and serene, the nerves are quite at rest, all exasperation is subdued, and when the noise is over, or the necessary season of quiet has been had, the little plug can be removed, the murmur of the world allowed to return, and no harm done.—Harper's Bazar.

FIRE-PROOF PILLARS.

Cast-Iron Better Able to Withstand Flames Than Wrought-Iron.

Prussian authorities regard cast-iron pillars as very dangerous in case of fire, and have forbidden their use in inhabited buildings while allowing wrought-iron to be employed. This has led Prof. Bauschinger, of Munich, to make a long series of actual trials, which have shown him that cast-iron is really the much more reliable of the two. He loaded pillars of these substances with the weights they are usually expected to bear in buildings, and heated them successively to various temperatures up to a red heat, letting a stream of cold water play on them, exactly as would be the case in a fire being extinguished by fire engines. The cast-iron pillars were much cracked and damaged by this treatment, but continued to sustain their loads safely, while those of wrought-iron were much bent before redness was reached, and so twisted when cold water struck them that they could not carry their loads. In experiments with other materials, concrete resisted a fire of three hours' duration, ordinary brick stood very well, but less resistance was shown by granite, sandstone and other natural stones.—Arkansaw Traveler.

A LADY'S JOURNEY.

Madam Knight's Adventure on a Trip Between Boston and New York One Hundred and Eighty Years Ago.

On "Monday, October ye second," one hundred and eighty-one years ago, a Boston lady undertook a journey to New York City, an account of which was published in 1825 from a diary in the author's own handwriting, "being a faithful record of Madam Knight's adventures over that tract of country, where she traveled about a fortnight on horseback under the direction of a hired guide.'"

That madam was regarded as rather odd is evident from the reception she received on the first night after starting. "I was interrogated," she writes, "by a young lady, I understood afterward was the eldest daughter of the family, with these words: 'Law for mee! What in the world brings You here at this time of night? I never see a woman on the Rode so Dreadfull late, in all the days of my versall life. Who are You? Where are You going? I'me scar'd out of my witts.'"

Madam Knight arrived in New Haven October 7, where she "was received with all possible respects and civility."

On December 6 she writes: "Being by this time well recruited and rested after my journey, my business lying unfinished by some concerns at New York depending thereupon, my kinsman, Mr. Thomas Trowbridge, of New Haven, must needs make a journey there before it could be accomplished, I resolved to go there in company with him and a man of the town which I engaged to wait on me there."

Madam seems to have been much pleased with New York, where she made many acquaintances among the good women of the city, "who courteously invited me to their houses and generously entertained me." And her description of the city at that time is well worth reading. She says: "The Cittie of New York is a pleasant, well-compacted place, situated on a Commodious River which is a fine harbor for shipping. Their Diversion in the Winter is Riding Sleys about three or four Miles out of Toun, where they have Houses of entertainment at a place called the Bowery, and go to some friends' Houses who handsomely treat them. Mr. Burroughs cary'd his spouse and Daughter and myself out to Madam Dowes, a Gentlewoman that lived at a farm House, who gave us a handsome Entertainment of five or six Dishes and choice Beer and Metheglin Cyder, etc., all which she Said was the produce of her farm. I believe we mett 50 or 60 sleys that day—they fly with great swiftness and some are so furious that they'le turn out of the path for none except a Loaded Cart. Nor do they spare for any diversion the place afford and sociable to a degree, they'r Tables being as free to thar Naybours as to themselves."

"And now," she adds, "Having transacted the affair I went upon and some other that fell in my way, after about a fortnight's stay there I left New York with no Little regrett."—Boston Statesman.

REPTILES.

Reason Why They Are Inaccessible to Human Sympathy.

A reptile is not, perhaps, an amiable thing. Its name—"that which creeps" prejudices one against it. We would as soon make friends off-hand with a ghoul or vampire as with a reptile. Nor is there anything thoroughly unjustifiable in this sentiment. The necessities of speech require a word that shall compendiously express the idea of the contemptible and crawling, and at the same time potentially hurtful. And "reptile" fulfils this obnoxious duty. So when Beattie applies this term of reproach to a servile poet, or Byron to a mean critic, they are not to be found fault with. The sycophant in Shelley, the slave in Montgomery, even man—"the poor reptile man" himself—in loftily moralizing Groome are metaphorically rendered, and not unfairly, by a term that zoologically implies either a turtle, a crocodile, a frog, a lizard or a snake. Scattered up and down in verse will be found scores of individuals whom the poets, anxious to stigmatize as despicably base, denominate "reptiles."

Now, all this is perfectly fair. We have attached to a certain word a certain metaphorical meaning, which is a very odious one. Thus, Bismarck calls the secret-service budget "the reptile fund," and the Man of Iron includes in it all such miserable creatures as venal editors and spies. The self-seeking parasite, the insidious hypocrite, the cringing slave, deserve the worst we can say of them, and as we have decided that there is nothing worse to be said of such than reptile—reptiles let them be.—Gentleman's Magazine.

Compressed Coal.

Some interesting particulars are given by M. Escalle, director of the important works at Tamaris, in regard to the employment of blocks of compressed coal, in lieu of coke, for blast furnaces. With the ores of the country, which are argilo-silicious and small, the quantity of compressed fuel employed is twenty per cent., but with those of Motka or Pilhais it reaches regularly thirty per cent. It has been found that by the use of these blocks a much higher temperature of hot blast is obtained, and that the proportion of combustible consumed—coke and compressed fuel included—per ton of pig iron produced is less than with coke alone. M. Escalle attributes this result to the quantity of water, one and one-half per cent., contained in the compressed coal blocks used by him, as well as to the nature of the volatile matters. The volume of gas obtained per ton of the compressed fuel, at these works, was about seven thousand feet.—N. Y. Sun.

—The most extensive region of heavy rainfall in the British Islands is reported by Mr. A. Buchan to be the West Highlands of Scotland, where the annual fall is over eighty inches, and at Glencoe has exceeded one hundred and twenty-eight inches.—Arkansaw Traveler.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.
It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.
The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.
WHAT IT CURES.
All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.
It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.
Over 40 Years,
This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

BURMAH.

What a Mediæval Traveler Has to Say About the Ancient Kingdom.

In Marco Polo's travels the first mention of Burmah in the mediæval language of Europe is to be found. He calls the kingdom Mien, in Chinese fashion; and after narrating his approach to it by a down-hill journey of two and a half days, and a much longer passage through a wild country, he pauses to tell of a great battle which had taken place between the forces of the "Great Kaan" of Tartary and the King of Mien, which he describes so graphically that it seems probable he gathered his account from the lips of those who had been present at it. An army of the "Great Kaan" had approached the frontier of Burmah, and the Burmese King advanced against it with sixty thousand men and two thousand elephants, having on their backs towers of timber, each of which contained from twelve to sixteen warriors. The Tartar force was the weaker, and the Tartar horses were scared by the elephants, and broke in disorder. Then Nescradin, the Tartar Captain, ordered his men to tie their horses to trees and to take their bows, in the use of which they were very expert. The elephants, in their turn, could not stand the arrows, many were slain, and at last they fled with a terrific rush into a forest bordering the plain of battle, destroying the wooden castles as they forced their way through the trees. A fierce hand-to-hand fight ensued, and such was the noise of battle, says Palo, that "God might have thundered and no man would heard it." The Chinese annals, which corroborate Marco's date, mention that stakes had been fixed in order to injure the elephants. After the defeat of the Burmese, two hundred of these animals were taken alive by the Tartars, and the Great Khan ever afterward kept elephants as auxiliaries in war. Polo then goes on to describe those great wonders of Amien (a city which Colonel Rule thinks may be identified with Old Pagan), the towers of gold and silver erected near the tomb of a King. One was covered with gold to the thickness of a finger, and the other with silver in a like manner. These towers shone brilliantly in the sun, and to each were attached bells respectively of gold and silver, that tinkled in the wind. A doubtful version is then given of a conquest, the occurrence of which is confirmed both by the Burmese and Chinese annals. The "Great Kaan," having an overplus of jugglers and gleemen about his court, sent an army of them to conquer Mien, a task they duly effected. The towers of gold and silver excited their cupidity, but their master, with the reverence of his Nation for the dead, would not suffer these monuments to be pulled down. The Burmese historians estimate the Mongol invaders of their country on that occasion as amounting to six million of horse and twenty million of foot!

Lucovico di Varthema, most naive and entertaining of travelers, visited Burmah toward the close of the fifteenth century, but he has not much to say about it that is not touched upon by others who followed him there. He speaks among other things, of the long and thick timber, of the plentifulness of civet cats, and of the marvelous jewelry of the King, the rings of gold and gems about his arms and legs the rings upon his fingers, and his ears that "hung down half a plam" with the weight of their adornment. During the next century a good many Europeans seem to have strayed into this remote land. Burmah changed its divisions frequently at this time. First one King and then another rose to prominence and destroyed or made tributary his fellow Kings. In the consequent series of wars European partisans were engaged, notably a good many Portuguese. About the middle of the century there arose a great King known to fame as Brama of Toungoo, and under him Burmah seems to have attained its greatest power, and to have impressed all travelers with its riches and magnificence. Brama is spoken of as exceeding the "Great Turk" in power, and as having one million five hundred thousand men at his command. During this prosperous time, Ralph Fitch, a merchant of London reached the country, and has recorded what he saw there. He admired the straight streets of the capital, so protected by rows of palm trees that you might walk in the shade all day. He was struck, as most people were, by the honors paid to the sacred elephants, which extended even to washing their feet in silver basins, and he mentions how wild elephants were captured by anointing decoys with a peculiar scented ointment. When a white elephant was caught, each merchant had to make a donation of half a ducat. Of black elephants of war the King had no fewer than five thousand. In the country were mines of rubies, sapphires and spinelles.—London Globe.

FRONTIER LIFE.

An Officer Relates the Details of His Desperate Struggle for Life with a Mad Bull in Dakota.

An officer of the regular army, whose death recently took place, and who in his lifetime was well and favorably known in St. Paul, having been stationed at Fort Snelling, told the following story of his experience on the frontier many years ago: One cold day in the winter of 1866 I started from Yankton, in a stage, bound for Fort Randall. My only companion was a young army officer, journeying to one of the western posts to join his regiment. It had been snowing hard all day, and the four horses attached to the stage found it very difficult to drag the vehicle through the drifts and over the bad roads. I and the young man soon became engaged in conversation, such was the effect of riding in stage in those days. It was a sufficient introduction to ride together, and fellow travelers depended much on one another to pass away the weary hours spent in the coach. We spent a half day in traveling a short distance. We were both tired. The young officer suggested the propriety of taking horses at the next station, which proved to be Springfield. He thought that it would be a change to get out of the stage and exercise ourselves on horseback. I gladly assented, for I was heartily tired of being cooped up in a stage. When we got to Springfield we were served dinner at the eating-house at that station. The eating-house was a frontier tavern, and was presided over by a determined-looking woman, the woman's looks preventing any expression of dissatisfaction with the food or drink. The meal was frugal in its character, as might naturally be expected. The coffee was made of chicory. We took everything, however, and never uttered a complaint. We saw the effects of the landlady's iron will on her dejected-looking husband. The lesson taught us to make the best of the meal. We did so. Afterward we made arrangements for two saddle horses, and in a short time after dinner were on our journey on horseback.

We rode on, when an abrupt turn in the road brought us suddenly upon a bull. The animal was plunging about as if infuriated. Retreat was impossible, so we concluded to attack him. Fortunately we had our rifles hung on the saddles. I hastily drew mine and fired at the bull. The ball entered his side, but apparently had no other effect than to increase his fury. He rushed at us, singling me out as his first victim. As he neared me he made a fearful plunge. Just before his horns entered the horse upon which I was seated I seized him with both hands, and held him with a grip that only my great strength and my atheletic skill made successful. This saved my life. Tossed and thrown from side to side, but never losing my hold on his horns, I struggled, almost suffocated by the creature's terrible, scorching, stifling breath, which, as he would give these snorts and puffs, would seem like volumes of hottest impure air, and I feared would almost overwhelm me at times. But still I tightly held on his horns and hoped to conquer in some way not apparent then. My companion, meanwhile, had been unable to render me any assistance, for doubting his ability to kill the bull at a shot, he wisely refrained from shooting at all, lest he might increase the creatures madness. Seeing that I was becoming exhausted without exhausting the bull, the young man concluded that something must be done quickly to relieve me. He therefore raised the rifle to shoot, when the bull, as if determined to shake me off, gave a mighty jerk and tossed me clear over his head. I landed in a big snow-bank, and so great was the force of my fall that I disappeared entirely from sight, buried in the snow. The bull appeared surprised. He remained motionless for a moment. The young man was quick to see the advantage, and before the bull could turn to renew the attack on either of us the young man shot the animal in the head, which sent him writhing to the ground. I got out of the snow-bank and sent a second shot into his carcass, which killed him instantly. As soon as I had time to examine myself I found that my hands were in a terrible condition, and that my body and legs were bruised. We hastily mounted our horses, the cold weather necessitating prompt action, and started on to the next station. We were soon overtaken by the stage, and we resumed our seats in that vehicle and so continued our journey to Fort Randall. At the fort I was taken in charge by the post surgeon. In about three weeks I was all right. At the fort we learned that the bull had been running at large for some time, doing considerable damage. The Indians had shot him repeatedly, but had not succeeded in hitting him in a vital spot. The wounds only increased his fury. He was generally regarded as a dangerous creature.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

A SOLEMN WARNING.

Why Montana Cooks Will Not Dare to Go on Sprees.

One of the principal reasons that hotel keepers, restaurant men and others have always given for employing Chinese labor instead of that of white men, has been that the Chinese could be depended upon, while the white help, after working a week or so, would get drunk and leave their employers in the lurch. It is not thus in the town of Anaconda, Mon. The Chinamen have all been run out of that town, and they have found a way to make white men fill the places acceptably. The manager of one of the largest restaurants in Anaconda states that since all the Chinamen have been "fired," the cooks in his place have been waited on by the Knights of Labor and notified that, in the event of their getting drunk or failing to cook the meals on time or in proper shape, they will be tarred and feathered and driven out of town, and if their successors neglect their work a more severe example will be made of them. The Knights of Labor up in that section evidently understand the anti-coolie question better than the so-called agitators of Tacoma.—Portland Oregonian.

Don't Eat in a Hurry.

A health journal says that people ought to take three-quarters of an hour for dinner. This is well if there is dinner to hold out so long. The penality for hurrying meals as most people do, is a grevious attack of dyspepsia. In such a case you will have to resort to Brown's Iron Bitters for cure as did Mr. J. R. Pinkston, Shorter's Depot, Ala., who writes, "I found relief in Brown's Iron Bitters after years of suffering from dyspepsia."

After a druggist has filled a perscription it belongs to him, and not the customer who brought it to his store.

The pain and misery suffered by those who are afflicted with dyspepsia are indescribable. CATARRH—A NEW TREATMENT.

From the Monitor & Star.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 3000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men, that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished he claims that Catarrh is practically cured and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The Application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.

FIRE ANTS.

A Traveler's Experience With a Colony of These Pugnacious Insects.

My camp was once invaded by fire ants. It was a good place, convenient to wood and water, and I hated to leave. I disputed the right of occupancy with them for three weeks, at the end of which time I incontinently surrendered and fled. During that three weeks I dug them out, burned them out and drowned them out, but they didn't seem to mind it in the least. They went on burrowing and building and exploring the surrounding country, and when we left got full of them and I had been bitten in about three million different places. I thought it time to move. The bite of the fire ant is like the sting of the stinging heard. It burns and makes a sore place. They increase with a rapidity that is alarming, and the more you try to exterminate them the more numerous they become. It used to be a test of courage among the Comanche Indians for a brave to thrust his bared arm into a nest of fire ants and hold it there without flinching, while his companions went through the movements of a somewhat complicated dance around his tortured body. They don't do it any more. Once near Pope's Crossing, on the Pecos River, I reached a village of fire ants and started to make a detour. We discovered Indian signs of recent date, and halted to investigate. A band of Indians had camped on the edge of the ant village, and a prisoner, who afterward proved to be a bear hunter named Goggin, was stripped, bound hand and foot, and laid down among the ant hills. You can imagine his horrible sufferings. We found his bones and gave them a decent burial. The fire ant is pugnacious, and his mode of warfare is always aggressive. In the aggregate, he will attack any living thing, from an elephant down, kill him by sheer force of numbers and devour all but the bones.—Texas Cor. Chicago Journal.

BRAZILIAN SCHOOLS.

The Subsidies Paid to Settlers by the Government of Brazil.

The school system is very meager, but is improving. There are two thousand public schools in the empire for a population of 12,000,000 people, and the State expends annually $8,000,000 for public instruction. A bill for compulsory education has been introduced into Parliament at nearly every session by the Government during the last few years, but has not yet become a law. There is a taste and inclination for education among the upper classes, but nothing is ever done for the slaves in this respect beyond the little attention they receive from the priests.

There are several institutions for higher education, several schools of medicine, of law, civil engineering and mining. A normal school for the education of teachers, a conservatory of music, a school of fine arts, an institute for the blind and another for the deaf and dumb, several reformatory schools, and also an Imperial Industrial School founded by Dom Pedro upon the plan of the "Cooper Institute," of New York, the suggestion for it being derived from his visit to that place while in the United States. There is also a bureau of colonization and immigration in the Department of Agriculture, and as an inducement to settlers, Government offers them free subsistence and shelter at the boarding-house in Rio De Janeiro during the time that it is necessary for them to wait. The settler is also given free transportation with his baggage from Rio to any part of the country and can purchase land on credit, the first payment to be made at the end of the second year and four payments during the succeeding four years, with a discount of twenty per cent. for cash. A donation of necessary implements and seeds is given by the Agricultural Department for the first season and an allowance of twenty-five cents a day for each adult and ten cents for each child during the first six months after settlement until the land they occupy can be made to produce. The cost of the land is now eight to sixteen dollars an acre. There are now twelve colonies under the care of the Department of Agriculture, comprising a population of sixty-two thousand people, mostly German. The number of immigrants arriving in the country amounts to from forty to fifty thousand a year and is slowly increasing.—Rio Cor. Chicago Inter Ocean.

—Joseph Korosi, of Buda-Pesth, in a paper read before the Association of Hygiene, in Berlin, last year, presents some figures regarding the effect of the pecuniary status on longevity. Excluding deaths in infancy, he finds, taking his observations from a period of eight years, that the rich class had a longevity of fifty-two years, the middle class of forty-six years, the fourth, the poorer class of forty-one years and seven months.

DIED.

REYNOLDS.—December 9th, 1885, at the residence of her daughter, in Santa Ana, California, Mrs. Julia A. Reynolds, in the 75th year of her age.

She was the relict of the late Sydney Reynolds, who preceeded her to the better land some four years since. Mrs. Reynolds was born in the year 1810, in the town of Dennis, Seneca Co., N. Y. Arriving at mature age, she was married in her native town to Mr. Sydney Reynolds, where they remained until the year 1836, when Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds with their daughter, removed to Michigan. Having purchased a farm in Manchester, four miles west of Clinton, the family settled down, becoming permanent and highly respected citizens of Lenawee county. Without any delay they identified themselves with God's people and were enrolled as members of the Congregational church in Clinton. After Mr. Sydney Reynold's death, four years since, the farm was sold, and Mrs. R. removed with her son-in-law, Mr. Hartwell and his family, to Santa Ana, California, that she might spend her days with her only daughter, Mrs. Hartwell. She much enjoyed the climate and surroundings of her new home, though never losing her relish for Clinton friends and associations. After the failure of her health, her mind was somewhat unhinged, and those who knew her most intimately apprehended there might arise mental trouble. This her heavenly father kindly prevented, by calling her. She was quite aware of her true condition, and desired to depart, and be with Christ which is far better. Her bereaved ones sorrow, but not as those who have no hope, they are assured that she knew whom she had believed, and was able to keep what she had committed to him, against that day, and that to be absent from the body, would be to be present with the Lord. This is a rich consolation to all survivors, and becomes a spur to them in the discharge of their every-day duty. Heeding this, we shall become imitators of those who now through faith and patience inherit the promises.
